First!— at Ocean View

Mr. William A. Johnston,
Editor, Motion Picture News.
Dear Sir:

During the course of a casual conversation with a large group of exhibitors and exchange men at the recent Virginia Exhibitor's Convention at Ocean View, Va., which was attended by visitors from Maryland, District of Columbia, West Virginia and North and South Carolina, the question of trade papers came into discussion and I thought you would be interested to know that the unanimous opinion was that — "Motion Picture News excels all", both for the exhibitor and the exchange.

Wishing you continued success, I am,

Yours sincerely,
Frederick Clement Weber,
President and Manager, The McCoy Theater, Baltimore, Md.

A Few Words About "BUNK"

All the extra exploitation, all the extra newspaper advertising, all the additional service departments and special men in the branch offices are not going to make average pictures or poor pictures earn you any more money now than they have in the past.

If all of this forced draught effort does not pull in the crowds the first day, the after-effect will injure your house for the future. You feel the injury of over-promotion on "the next picture."

We know a picture on which between $8,000 and $9,000 newspaper advertising was spent in a single city in three days—and even that comparative mountain of money did not deliver a week-long patronage.

The demand—the requirement—the essential thing for exhibitors today is the picture that has within itself power—the power to draw patrons—the power to make people like it and talk about it.

Is there any exhibitor anywhere who is such a fool as to believe that he is not paying for all these wasteful, freak, circused campaigns? Or for the extra "service men?" Or for the extra local advertising?

You are paying for them—you can bet your last dollar you are!

A vital question for exhibitors to consider right now is: Are you buying pictures or are you buying exploitation that is from fifty to seventy-five percent unprofitable, and most of it done by men who never owned or operated theatres and who know few, if any, of the actual problems of showmanship?

The error of this year for many exhibitors will be that many pictures will not live up to the 100% exploitation standards. All W. W. Hodkinson releases will be carefully graded in keeping with their values and exploited honestly in keeping with their values. In the Hodkinson organization no exhibitor will be victimized by the power of publicity.

Zane Grey's Audience-Power Outranks All Other Authors

His famous novels carry even greater thrills in photography and titles than they do in printed books. His stories have strengthened stars whose popularity has been threatened with decline. Zane Grey delivers a larger reader and picture following into theatres than any other writer or dramatist.

"Desert Gold" is the first of his own novels that Zane Grey has ever supervised in production. It is a story of romance and heart interest, of sentiment and swift developments—a story of gigantic action. It is at this moment the biggest motion picture in the American market.

TRIANGLE PICTURES IMMORTAL

In the past ten years a few motion pictures have been produced which are really great--great in conception, in artistry, in genius of direction, and in camera wizardry.

Film Art has won its way into the hearts of millions because of these wonderful pictures, just as literature, music, sculpture and paintings are measured by their masterpieces.

Dozens of good pictures are produced every month—pictures well worth seeing. But once in a great while there is created a picture that will never die—a picture that touches the heart, that is colored with romance, shadowed with tragedy, a picture that sparkles, thrills and supremely satisfies—a picture immortal.

From thousands of pictures produced in the last ten years we have selected a number which, measured by the judgment of the most prominent film authorities and by the supreme judgment of the theatre-going public, are the finest examples that Motion Picture Art has achieved.

These pictures are priceless. They rank with the masterpieces of older arts, with great paintings or with classics of literature.

The first of these, available September 7th, is

The Sign of Service

"Tag! You're It!"

BUT YOU DON'T HAVE TO PLAY THE GAME THAT WAY
IF YOU DON'T WANT TO

IT is to enable you to play motion pictures your way that Realart has come into existence.

You have said you wanted BIG STARS, GOOD STORIES and COMPETENT DIRECTION combined in each picture.

You have pleaded for SERVICE—prompt deliveries, courteous consideration, intelligent assistance in exploitation and such reasonable co-operation as any good customer is entitled to receive.

You have declared your desire to be emancipated from insincerity, exaggeration, bluff, bluster and buncombe.

You want to buy as other merchants buy—on a basis of known value.

Realart Pictures and Realart Policy meet your requirements. Realart stands on the theory that there is a big field for the right pictures, sold on the right principle.

You will find this policy clearly reflected in the spirit of the men of the new organization. Their very enthusiasm bespeaks supreme confidence in Realart Pictures, in Realart Service, and in Realart Ideals.

You don't have to be "it." You can play the game the Realart way! For the Realart way is your way!

Emile Chautard

To Release Through Realart

EMILE CHAUTARD was to the drama born. Artist, author, actor, stage and screen director—he has climbed the long, steep steps to international fame.

Leading man for years at the foremost Parisian theatres, playing with Madame Rejane and other great stars; director of early French photoplay successes, such as "The Girl from Rectors" and "The Merry Widow;" in America responsible for many of the best pictures of Alice Brady, Elsie Ferguson, Lina Cavalieri, Vivian Martin, Doris Kenyon, Mollie King and other popular actresses; now making a series of six big photonovels for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Isaac Wolper, President, to be released through Realart.

The first of the new series of pictures by this master director is a story based on what Gilbert K. Chesterton calls "probably the best detective tale of our times," Gaston Leroux's

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room"

A crime is committed in a room with no conceivable exit for escape. But the offender does escape; passes from the room like a shadow. And in his explanation of the apparently impossible, EMILE CHAUTARD has presented a story that rivals Edgar Allan Poe's remarkable problem in the murder of the "Rue de La Morgue."

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room" will make box office history. Will YOU share in it?

The Sign of Satisfaction

A Man's Waiting For You!

He has something to say that will interest you — something vital, about profits!

He is prepared to demonstrate that an event really new and big has taken place in filmdom during the last few weeks.

before we go on with the rest of the show, we are going to call upon you to voice your opinion on the subject of—what do you want?

the capital film co., the management of this theatre, is so tremendously pleased with the way you have applauded the neal hart and al jennings super short features that they feel that the only way of reciprocating is to make sure that all future offerings are equally as good.

confidentially, the management of this theatre, is wise to the fact that you want what you want when you want it, and the reason that their super short features have tickled you pink is simply because you wanted super short features and you wanted neal hart and you wanted al jennings.

whoever you elect, we will engage. whatever you want we'll make. that is a pretty broad assertion, but not too broad for the capital and we are going to prove it to you because—well, because we want you to come back—again, and again, and again.

WILL ROGERS AND THE LAUGH

The commercializing of the laugh is the exhibitor's proposition, but the making of the laugh is your public's.

A laugh is simply a mechanical thing, making the lines of the mouth and eyes go upwards instead of downwards, downwards being a frown. But oh, the difference between one laugh and another!

There is the slap-stick laugh and the Will Rogers laugh. Will Rogers doesn't get a laugh on a custard pie stunt. Something deeper; something more rollicking; something more captivating; something more real. The Will Rogers laugh and the laugh that echoes in thousands of theatres throughout the country is elastic—lasts, and leaves no bad taste in the mouth.

Will Rogers, in a Goldwyn play, under Goldwyn direction, and in Goldwyn environment, backed by the Goldwyn exploitation, is the most valuable comedy offering before the exhibitor today.

In "Almost a Husband", Will Rogers is given a picture which should make an extraordinary success. We believe it will. If you can see it, do so, and you will book it.

10 BIG FEATURES

KNOWN AT SIGHT

as the most fascinating dramas of the EAST and WEST, with the biggest stars in the motion picture firmament. Every one a tremendous Box-Office attraction, tried and proven. Your territory is wide open, as every exhibitor is waiting for them.

JACK GARDNER

"The Range Boss"
"Men of the Desert"

Thrilling, red-blooded stories of the open places in the west and northwest, land of the gaunt grey wolf and the everlasting snows—

WESTERN DRAMAS

"Open Places"
"Land of Long Shadows"

where men are big and life looms large God's great Out-of-Doors, with its rugged scenery, staging the dramatic actions.

HENRY B. WALTHALL

"The Misleading Lady"

America's greatest emotional actor, in this powerful drama, bares the naked, savage soul of man beneath his veneer of Civilization.

"Little Shoes"

Mr. Walthall plays the melody of child love on the heart strings in this tense drama of a poor little rich girl.

RICHARD C. TRAVERS

"The Man Trail"

A gripping story of the northwest woods, with all the thrills of a man hunt—man hunting down man to kill.

"The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row"

The story of a girl's brave fight from the depths of poverty and vice to the heights of purity and success.

BRYANT WASHBURN

"The Alster Case"

A stirring mystery story that baffles the detectives and puzzles all spectators, keeping them keyed up with excitement and wonder until the very end of the photoplay.

TAYLOR HOLMES

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship"

The cleverest comedy drama ever screened, taken from Clarence Buddington Kelland's story from the Saturday Evening Post—How a "nut" on efficiency applies it to his love affairs.

"Murder will out," goes the old saying.

Will it?

Does Fate control the goings and comings of the murderer, leading him relentlessly to the inevitable clutches of the law?

Do some persons have the mystic power of revealing the Future and of drawing back the curtains from the Hidden Past?

Your audiences, like those in hundreds of the leading "legitimate" theatres of the land, will be asking these questions as they see the sensation play of many seasons—"The Thirteenth Chair."

Watch Your Step!

¶ "This is going to be an interesting year," concludes a leading exhibitor in a letter in which he tells of a recent business trip to New York.

"Interesting" hardly expresses it.

We are in the midst of very large developments. Big currents are sweeping us irresistibly along. And it will take a lot of very careful rudder work to avoid the rocks and breakers ahead.

It is time already for the men at the rudders to use some cool vision.

Just what is the general situation?

To begin at the bottom we are in the midst of prosperity.

Peace, prohibition and high wages have increased theatre attendance. Theatre admission prices have been raised—not nearly so much as retail prices in general, but considerably, nevertheless. And the theatre business is excellent.

So much for the theatre side.

The producers have participated in this prosperity; but, also, production costs have gone up in general. Competition for stories have brought prices to an alarming point, to exactly the same point, in fact, that competition brought stars' salaries. And the situation, like the star salary, cannot be arbitrarily changed—because competition makes it.

Again, better pictures are demanded today, absolutely demanded. And better pictures cost more money. Consider alone the fact that the widespread building of new and luxurious theatres has added several hundred thousand, close to half a million new seats—or will have, by the end of this year. These are high class audience seats, and this sort of audience will either get better pictures or the theatres will be forced to go into music, vaudeville or some other attraction.

And still again, the producers this year are adding national advertising expense to their budget—as they inevitably must and will continue to do.

So, all in all, the producers want higher rental prices; and the exhibitors are up in arms over the demands made.

The producer is using every available pressure; the exhibitor is taking refuge in booking circuits, and, in general, organizing as never before. Several clashes of arms have been heard, and there will be more.

We have every faith that this economic conflict will work out all right, especially so because fundamentally the industry is so prosperous.

Locally, everywhere, the two forces will grind away till a smooth and equable union is eventually had.

But all this friction—and it is highly expensive for both sides—can easily and well be avoided.

The object of this editorial is to advise cool thinking—right now.

There's one fact certain as daylight, and that is that the producer and exhibitor are, and must remain, business partners.

There isn't a theatre in the country but where the man who makes the pictures and the man who shows them are working under a regular business partnership, subject to all partnership rules and laws.

Each is equally essential to the other.

If, therefore, the profits are increased there must also be an equitable sharing of the burden. Otherwise there won't be any mutual prosperity; and in that event there's but one alter-

native: the producer will have to own all the theatres or the exhibitor will have to make all the pictures.

In which event there won't be any public.

Such an alternative is, of course, preposterous.

Just so much as one of these business partners hurts the other he is hurting himself.

You can't get away from that; just as you cannot get away from the fact that this business partnership is the very foundation of the health and growth of this business.

Producer and exhibitor today need the other fellow's viewpoint as never before. We need conventions so that New York and the field can sit down and get acquainted. We need sales policies and sales managers with eyes open to both sides of the rental question. We need fifty-fifty consideration and vision.

Above all we don't want blind, arbitrary demands.

And this applies equally to exhibitors and producers.

We must not let the inflation all about us get into our own heads.

With business better and pictures better and profits increased there is certainly a way to have a cool compromise and work out a fair and square participation—that which every business partnership calls for, and by reason of which it exists.

The Door Is Open

PERSISTENTLY, the sentiment crops up in the British trade press and in letters from the far side of the pond that there is some sort of an organized effort in this country to keep British pictures out of this market.

Every now and again the gentle warning is given that we must reciprocate and lift the ban or suffer in the marketing of American pictures in England.

We used to laugh at this created bugaboo. Occasionally we would almost get sore. We have a faint idea that we know something about the American film industry and American film men. And we have never been able to find anything resembling an organized effort to bar either British productions or those of any other country.

The door is open to the American market for any motion picture that will make money for the exhibitor. Some British pictures have done this in the past. An increasing number of them will do it in the future.

But it is not our fault if the average British-made picture of the past has been the sort that could not possibly appeal to American audiences. And it will not be because of the disruption of any organized boycott that more and more British-made productions will have entertaining and money-making values in the future.

It will be because the British business man on the whole is not the sort to quit before a bugaboo. He will see the truth and meet it.

What About the Men?

A CIRCUIT head recently complained to us regarding the scarcity of good managerial timber for his theatres and we used the complaint for a short editorial note. The editorial struck a responsive note. Already we have carried in our columns some of the interesting letters it evoked. In this issue two different angles on the subject are covered.

The managers of small-town theatres seem to have justice in their statement that the industry offers them no chance for development. "Once a small-town manager, always a small-town manager," is the situation as they put it. Owners of bigger houses will not give them an opportunity because they are labelled "small town."

This is a situation that will not exist for long. Every industry must at some time turn its attention to the problems of creating its own big men. And big men are the products of growth.

We are young yet, with problems aplenty. We'll get around to this one in time.

There's a Silver Lining

WE are always willing to give space to the complaints of newspaper men and exhibitors about the quality of publicity and exploitation aid given them on productions by the manufacturers.

Because there is no doubt that there is considerable room for improvement in the average press book. And it is only through the frequent publication of these statements from the field that progress can be hoped for.

The publicity department that is forced to prepare press books before the productions have left the studios cannot ask for better evidence to show "the boss" that his policy is a mistaken one. And "the boss" needs evidence. He pays high salaries to his advertising and publicity men as experts and then in many cases refuses to heed their advice. But one word from an exhibitor, exchange manager or newspaper editor will cause him to turn a double somersault.

And while on the subject of press books let us recount the fact that this week we received two very cheering signs that there is a silver lining to the cloud. First, our eye came across the press book on "The Miracle Man." To say that the exhibitor aid will do justice to this photoplay gem is saying it all. And our verdict was shared by the advertising man for a circuit of thirty-odd theatres who happened to be in our office at the moment.

Only a moment previous we had read the manuscript on the article by George N. Briggs appearing on another page of this issue. And we felt cheered. Then a moment later brought us the exhibitor broadside on "La Belle Russe." And we were ready to decide that there was more silver lining than there was cloud.

A Merger with a Good Object

FROM 'Frisco comes the news that the California, Imperial and Portola theatres have been merged to be conducted in the future under the joint management of Eugene Roth and Jack Partington. The Portola is to become a long-run theatre.

It's coming gradually, all over the country. Just as the one-week run has for so long seemed the last word in length so will the big specials of the next year show an increasing number of houses that will play pictures as long as their merit will stand. All the technical phrases that concern new booking policies, higher rentals, longer runs, mean nothing more than that in the end.

A Near-Tragedy Averted

WE hasten to congratulations. To Harold Lloyd on his narrow escape from serious physical injury and to ourselves and the rest of the picture industry on its good fortune in not having lost the cheery Lloyd fun.

The first news brought home to all of us the narrow thread upon which a picture favorite's career hangs. The accident that might mean little more than temporary suffering to the worker in any other walk of life is apt to mean the end of a career for the actor or actress appearing on the screen. The end of a dream of future achievement. As effectual an end as if the injury had proven mortal.

A Notable Picture

HELEN KELLAR, of the silent world gives forth through the silent drama the remarkable story of her development out of darkness into light.

She cannot see her own picture drama but she knows that neither books nor plays nor any other medium of expression save only the motion picture could give to the world's millions the amazing record of patience and achievement.

"Deliverance" is one of the great pictures of today.

Dealing in Personalities

'SFUNNY how this grand and glorious fifth industry managed to struggle along in more or less successful fashion during the past two weeks. We had hardly thought it possible. In fact, we are so encouraged that we may decide to take another vacation.

Happenings just continued to happen with the usual regularity regardless of our absence. The National Association almost allowed its foot to slip into the actors' squabble, but just as quickly wriggled out. Frank Hall emerged reorganized as Hallmark Pictures. P. A. Powers, the perpetual insurgent, resigned from the N. A. M. P. I. Somebody or other announced another national exhibitor circuit. And then, as we read the issues of THE NEWS that didn't follow us on our vacation, we hear Bill Sherrill explaining his resignation from the National Association.

Gosh, isn't that a lot to happen without our assistance?

And even Congress slipped it over on us—by repealing the Daylight Saving Bill.

Which reminds us. We traveled into "hick" country during the past two weeks. And met many members of the genus "Small Town Exhibitors." And found that if you mentioned "Daylight Saving" to them you could work up considerable heated conversation. But if you glibly tossed off the phrases "Open Booking," "Super-Exploitation," you heard—

"Oh, I don't get much time to bother with those things. You see, the movie theatre is only good for a side-line here. I run the drug-store here as my principal business. I just keep well booked ahead on serials and take what features I can afford."

Who do you think rolled into town this week? Why, none other than the long-lost Ernie Shipman. Has been up in the Northwest for these many months close to the real thing in atmosphere for the James Oliver Curwood stories. And reports that distributing arrangements have already been closed. Of course Ernie looks like a million dollars. Always has the tan of a man who has just returned from a fishing trip. This time he has the real hardy, Northwoods look.

STILL other things had to happen during the last two weeks just to show how unimportant we really are. Vivian Moses and Bert Adler—two of "the boys" who are listed in our personal catalogue as "regular fellers"—have changed their hat-racks.

Bre'er Moses has gone into partnership with Arthur Guy Empey—a chap who is going to be heard from in more ways than one within the next year. This man Empey has peppery energy, brains—and the money to back them up with. And in Vivian Moses he has a true wool co-worker.

Then our old friend Bert Adler was captured by Arthur Kane for special exploitation work with Real Art. In which Bre'er Kane shows his wisdom. Clear back to the Thanhouser days Bert Adler has been a never-resting hustler who doesn't hesitate to do "something new." Bert has got less personal publicity for some of the things he has really done first than many more recent arrivals have received for "innovations" that bring a smile to the old-timers.

Cecil Teague, new organist of the Majestic theatre, Portland

R. E. Pritchard, formerly of M. P. News, was a visitor to the Dry White Way this week on business for the Allens of Canada. Jay Allen was also in town. So naturally we heard something of the new theatres this organization is building. And we'll say that the Allen name will surely bear watching. You ought to hear some of the ambitious plans being made for the Detroit and Cleveland houses alone. And the hints of still more theatres on the American side of the border.

GLANCING over a picture publication after even a short absence certainly does make one appreciate the class of advertising copy that is printed in this field. We doubt if there is a trade field in existence that boasts of advertising on a par with that in the film game. Seeing it week in and week out we grow to take it as a matter of course. Coming back from a filmless atmosphere we are filled with admiration for the CLASS that is so strongly evident. No other word but CLASS seems to express it.

Take the strikingly eccentric effects Equity is securing on the Clara Kimball Young subjects, for an example. Or, for week in and week out, consistent CLASS and EFFECTIVENESS—the Paramount and Universal inserts. Or the clean-cut yellow-gold suggestiveness of Fred Warren's copy on "Desert Gold." Just see how the infant, Real Art, has stepped off with the best of them. Study the "Thirteenth Chair" copy or the steady high standard of Robertson-Cole insert messages.

I suppose if we went on we would mention almost every advertiser in THE NEWS. But that is the way we feel about it. With all the knocking we film men like to hand one another and the business in general, down deep in our hearts I'll bet we would take off our hats to the general run of ad copy appearing in any other class of publications.

And in our present mood we are ready to let that statement go for the national magazines, too.

Just a few items of news to allow the insertion of some italics at this point: C. A. Stimson, manager of the Film Rental Department of American Film Company, is in town arranging for the showing of "Six Feet Four," the William Russell subject. Walter Almazov, well known laboratory man, is superintending the erection of a new laboratory in Fort Lee for Universal which will have a capacity of five million feet per week. Watterson Rothacker denies that he is to open another laboratory in Shantung.

THERE come to us rumors of a threatened strike at the Los Angeles producing plants on the part of electricians and stage hands. But with the rumor comes also the information that the New York executives have been quick to jump into the breach and are confident of a harmonious settlement of differences.

It is probably expecting too much to feel that the motion picture industry can escape unscathed in the present strike epidemic. But the sober second thought that is now guiding the industry can be counted on to go a long ways towards preventing any real trouble and counter-acting the effects of the momentary slip-up at the outset of the Actors' Equity fight. Whether it will go the whole route remains to be seen, but it is our own private opinion that along about six months from now some gentlemen will be kicking themselves. For these are dangerous times to tamper with trouble. And it is assuredly trouble to even implant the suggestion of the word "Strike" into the minds of operators. The word is apt to hang around in the atmosphere long after present events are forgotten.

A quick calculation of the amount of money that will be tied up in picture productions at the end of September this year will give an idea of the ticklish position that industry is in. We doubt if there has been an October 1st in the history of the game that saw so much real hard cash entangled in negatives.

And believe us, boys, those negatives will have to get to work fast to bring in some of the money they represent. No time to lose.

Just another budget of news to round out the page. Victor Eubank, recently a captain in the army and formerly with Essanay, has written three one-act plays that are now in course of production. John McAleer, film old-timer, is president of a newly formed distributing organization that plans a national exchange system for schools, churches, etc. Will be known as Screen Entertainment Distributors.

More About the Press Books We See

This Man Wants to Start an Argument, So We Gladly Offer the Space for All to Have Their Say

By George N. Briggs

(In charge of publicity for the Finkelstein and Ruben chain of theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul)

ANY one who has occasion to read or need the press books or press sheets that are arriving every day will not contradict me when I say that they are almost totally worthless; taken as a whole, they are an insult to the intelligence of newspaper men and newspaper readers, and a serious reflection on the system that permits their distribution.

I do not refer to any particular press book or press sheet. One is just as bad as the other—poorly written, devoid of ideas, cheap, uninforming twaddle.

The blame for this cannot be laid altogether to the lack of talent in publicity departments, but to the producers themselves, whose lack of foresight and neglect to place at the disposal of their publicity departments the proper facilities and incentive for better work is costing them money every day, and lots of it.

Pick up the first press book you come to, and if you read it from the viewpoint of the metropolitan newspaper man, or even his country brother, you will not only be constrained to laugh, but you will gasp at the audacity of any producing company in sending it out after business.

About the middle of July, Dorothy Gish in "Nugget Nell" was booked for a showing in the Strand theatre in Minneapolis for the first half of the week of August 10. Naturally we wanted to start a publicity campaign at once, not especially about "Nugget Nell," but about Dorothy Gish, who is extremely popular in the Twin Cities. Such a procedure is in keeping with our policy to rush the star into print just as soon as the contract is signed, no matter how far ahead the booking may be.

Securing the press book from the exchange, I read it over carefully, hungering for something about Dorothy Gish, or, as a last resort, about "Nugget Nell," that would be worth submitting to the newspapers here. I read how Dorothy Gish had always longed to portray just such a character as "Nugget Nell." I read all about the wonders of Dorothy Gish's acting. The press book informed me that "Nugget Nell" was positively the best and greatest thing Dorothy Gish had ever produced; I read what a great company had been assembled for the production, all about the director, the photographer, the author, the "location" and a number of other things that failed to suggest even the germ of an idea.

Oh, yes, I read the synopsis, and a number of short stories about various scenes in the picture, and then I came upon a column story that made me laugh so hard my day seemed brighter. But to the man who turned it out it was no joke. He gave it to me as a positive fact—no fake. I would hate to think he wanted or expected any one to believe it.

In his own words: "There is no fake about the scene . . . in the picture hundreds of fish can be seen to come from the opposite side of the creek to the point where Dorothy is lying on the bank. One fish comes so close she pats it with her hand before it swims away."

Get the hook! Also the manacles, a needle and a keeper!

The discouraging and disturbing thing about it is that stories of this character are not uncommon in our press books, and there seems to be no indication that the producers of these press books will soon arrive at that stage of Christian charity where they will regard newspaper men, exhibitors and the general public as having ordinary intelligence.

SEVERAL weeks ago I addressed a lengthy complaint to the heads of the publicity departments of all the leading producers. It was and is a serious matter with me because the firm with which I am associated is looking to me to get the best and the most publicity possible for their many attractions. I justified my criticism on the ground that I had had fifteen years of practical newspaper experience, and knew pretty well what newspapers would print.

The substance of my replies was that all press matter is prepared exclusively for the small town editor and exhibitor; that this is necessary because the standard of intelligence is lower in the country than in the city, and that any way it is impossible to prepare press books out of legitimate news because of lack of co-operation between studios and publicity departments.

I have since tried to make them see that Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, Bill Hart, Charlie Chaplin, Geraldine Farrar and all the rest of them are international characters, and that they must do something, say something, plan something or go some place every day of their lives. My claim was that their lives were not confined to the studios, and that it was possible to advertise them through real news channels.

I have tried to make them see that if, for instance, we happen to be showing Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," and we can get into print a story to the effect that Miss Pickford is negotiating for the purchase of the Vanderbilt Fifth Avenue home, "Daddy Long Legs" will benefit by such publicity even though the name of the picture or the theatre at no time appears.

Likewise I have tried to convince the producers that competent press representatives should be placed near or in their studios which ought to be covered for the press books just as a newspaper reporter covers a "beat" for his newspaper.

WHY is press matter prepared exclusively for the small town editor and exhibitor? Is it not a fact that the large cities contribute at least 35 per cent of the revenue for all pictures? Is it not true that the success of a picture in the city contributes a healthy portion of success to a picture in the country?

Why serve the country editor and exhibitor to the exclusion of the city editor and exhibitor? I defy any one to prove me wrong when I say that what interests the metropolitan editor will also interest the small town newspaper man, but that what interests, or rather, what is forced on the small town editor, will not interest the editor in the large city.

Later I expect to have something to say in refutation of what has recently been claimed, to-wit, that the press matter as now constituted is a big hit with country editors and exhibitors.

The claim that the standard of intelligence is lower in the country than in the city is prompted by nothing more nor less than ignorance. Moving picture fans in the country see more pictures, know more about the stars and their work, and can talk more intelligently about the game than your average city fan.

Aside from all this, why would it not be good business for the producers to try to improve the material they submit to the country, and if, as they believe, the folks in the country don't know as much as they do, try to educate them up to their own more intellectual ways?

And to say that there is no co-operation between the studios and publicity departments is merely another case of "passing the buck." If I do not mistake the facts, the producers have been preaching co-operation for a long time, but here we are told they cannot promote co-operation between their own departments, as a result of which they defeat their own professed aim to co-operate with the exhibitor where he most needs co-operation—in his publicity.

I am not through with this argument for better press matter. There is much more that I am going to say. Furthermore, I hope producers and publicity writers swarm to their own defense. I would like to debate this question with them on a convention floor, because I can win a verdict from any unbiased jury.

For every argument they produce, I can furnish ten, and more than that, I'll bet any of them a suit of clothes that if put to a vote, country editors and exhibitors would agree with their city brethren that the press matter they get is wholly unfit, trash and rubbish, in spite of numerous claims by publicity departments that their files are full of letters commending their product.

"Give Men a Chance to Make Good!"

That Is This Writer's Reply to the Circuit Head Who Needs Real Managers— "Too Much 'Big Bunkum' and Too Little Credit for the Man on the Job"

By H. E. White

THE editorial in the issue of the News of July 19th captioned "Where are the Men?" is to me rather amusing, and I hardly know if you are trying to have a little joke, or if you intend it to be taken seriously. But as it is really a serious matter we will take it that way.

The trouble with the big circuit proposition is as a rule that the man at the head of it insists on claiming all the credit, and no matter how able a house manager he has gives him very grudgingly 1/10 of 1% of the credit he is entitled to.

Let us together step into one of the biggest and finest motion picture houses we can find any place, and keep our eyes open. We step up to the ticket office and buy our ticket. It is handed to us with the correct change by a capable and courteous young lady. We take it and on our way.

There is a jam in the lobby; we hesitate and a pleasant mannered young man comes up with his hand extended, we hand him our ticket; he looks at it and indicates the particular position for us to take that will get us into the theatre quickest. We take that position and in due course of events get to the door, where we surrender our tickets to a courteous doortender, either male or female, who is all that can be desired. The head usher stands right in front of us, and with a welcoming smile glances at our ticket stubs and tells us the next move. We proceed to the head of the aisle where we find another usher who takes our stubbs, looks at them, says, "There is two seats right here in the back, but if you prefer I can seat you down about the tenth row." We decide on the tenth row, and are swiftly and comfortably seated with a minimum of confusion to others already seated.

In our travels we have accumulated the house magazine, or program. Just as we seat ourselves the show ends, and the lights brighten with the beauty of a dawn in the Arctic Circle.

We open our magazine, and begin to read:

Magnifique Amusement Co., Owners
BIG BUNKUM, Managing Director
Program for the week of Septober Steenth
Arranged under the personal direction of
BIG BUNKUM, Managing Director

1—Overture by Magnifique Symp Orchestra.
Selection arranged by Big Bunkum and Willie Fitzgerald, Director.
2—Magnifique News Picture.
Items selected from all available sources by BIG BUNKUM.
3—Mme. Delipadado in Topsky's Hello.
Mme. Delipadado was discovered by BIG BUNKUM.
4—Pinnacle Features Corporation present
Lorilane Leaktoppe
in
"As It Should Be Done."
(Note)—Electrical effects preceding this number conceived by Big Bunkum.
5—Same general effect with variations all the way down the line.

WE enjoy our show very much, and on the way out ask an attendant where we can see Mr. Bunkum. We want to compliment him on the wonderful show, and the unfailing courtesy of the staff and so on.

"Oh," we are told, "Mr. Bunkum is away."

"Well, will he be in soon?"

"Oh, no, Mr. Bunkum is in Milpitas having his nails manicured."

A little more conversation and we learn that Mr. Bunkum spends most of his time on the golf links, or shooting fish, or eating noodles or something.

"But," we say, pointing to the program, "he personally supervises all the details of the program."

"Oh, no," we are told, "Mr. Bunkum never bothers with the small details, he never comes down on change days until about four o'clock."

"But," we remonstrate, "Some one has to see to all the details, if Mr. Bunkum doesn't, who does?"

"Oh, Mr. Henry Jones, the House Manager always does that. Mr. Jones is so very particular, why many times he will work all night with the electricians just to get a certain effect that he wants, and then he always reviews the news pictures and selects the items that he wants, and generally reviews the feature also with the musical director and makes suggestions to him. And say, when we have a new usher going to work, you should hear Mr. Jones explain the ideal of the house to her. Then he also goes over the advertising matter with the publicity man and suggests points in the program for him to play up, and,—Oh here is Mr. Jones now, Mr. Jones, here are some gentlemen looking for Mr. Bunkum."

"Well, Mr. Jones, we are indeed glad to meet you. We have enjoyed your show very much indeed, and wanted to tell Mr. Bunkum how much we enjoyed it, and how we appreciated the efforts he makes to entertain us, but we are told that Mr. Bunkum is not here, and that you are the guilty party."

Mr. Jones apologises for Mr. Bunkum, and says he will surely deliver the message, and that Mr. Bunkum will surely appreciate our compliments.

"But," we say, "Those compliments are for you Mr. Jones, we understand you attend to all the details."

Mr. Jones admits he does. But we say, why don't you get credit for it then. Well, you see, says Mr. Jones, Mr. Bunkum is the Managing Director and the Company expects him to supervise everything, and that it is not the policy of the Company to advertise employees.

LATER on we attend by invitation an Ad Club dinner, and there we have the pleasure of meeting Mr. Percival Penpusher, Publicity Director of the Magnifique theatre. Overhearing a conversation between him and another publicity promoter we catch this, "Oh, well, there is very little chance for me to put anything over, for I have orders to mention BIG BUNKUM at least once in each ad and story, and I know that in order to keep solid with him I can mention him three times to advantage"—and there you have it. You know yourself that this is not an exaggeration.

This not only applies to circuits, but to individual houses as well, and if you will tell it to your circuit friend he may not admit it to you, but in his own gizzard he will know it is right.

Credit where credit is due, a word of appreciation now and then, and incidentally some cash to the man who does the work, and your friend can stop worrying, there will be plenty of men.

Let me say in conclusion that this is not a squall from a disgruntled would-be house manager. Far from it. I am not aspiring to that distinction and never expect to. But during my travels as a "film peddler" I have had many chances to observe.

Lynn Reynolds Obtains Big Fire Scene

AFTER an expedition of several weeks to the big timber country of Northern California in company with two-score members of his production staff, Lynn Reynolds has returned to the Universal studio with some of the most unusual scenes of a forest fire ever screened, it is said, which will be used prominently in his forthcoming Universal feature, "The Brute Breaker." The Lynn Reynolds Company, of which Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams were the principal players, journeyed to the village of McCloud on the McCloud River at the base of Mount Shasta, where arrangements previously had been made for the use of the plant and equipment of a large company there.

Under the supervision of the United States Forestry Service, a section of timber of about five acres was set aside for the spectacular forest fire scenes and while scores of guards, lumbermen and forest rangers paroled the woods, the torch was applied to the dry timber, which sprang into a blaze with extreme rapidity.

A lumber camp which had been erected as one of the locations of the forest was in the path of the flames and unusual realistic scenes of its burning were recorded on the film. The "Brute Breaker," whose locale is placed in the Canadian timber lands is melodramatic in character and Reynolds says frankly that he tried to fill the play with as much action as possible. At least fifteen different varieties of fights between the various characters of the story were staged and among the exciting outdoor actions was that of the shooting of the McCloud River by canoe, something, local inhabitants said, which heretofore had never been attempted. Executives at the Universal studio have spent several hours in reviewing the material Reynolds brought back and have declared that much of it is so valuable that it will not be sacrificed in the usual process of cutting a film to requisite length, but will be incorporated in another picture.

To Phil Rosen, head cameraman and incidentally, president of the American Association of Cinemaphotography is due, it is recognized, much of the credit for the effectiveness of the photography.

Quick Trips From Here to There!

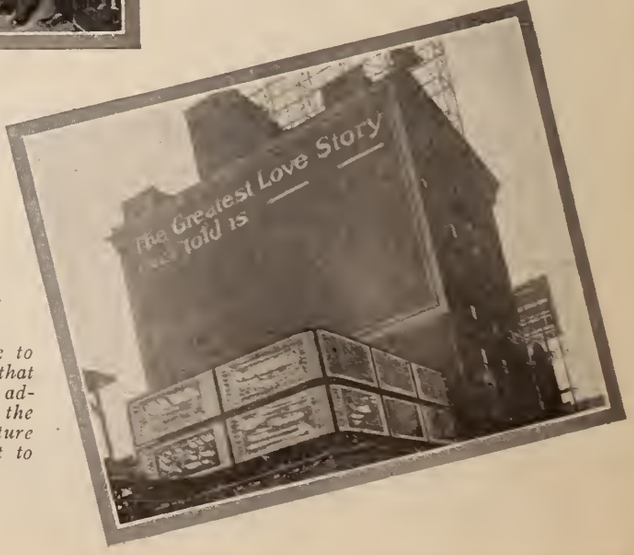
To the left we step in on Richard C. Fox, Buffalo manager of Famous Players-Lasky, as he goes through his morning's mail. Things are moving rapidly in Buffalo

On the right we aeroplane to Santiago, Chile, the same morning to say "howdy" to J. R. Guimaroes of the South Pacific Paramount Company. Business is "rushing" here also

Next we get Charles Chaplin to pause in his First National career long enough to greet friends at the studio. The visitors are William Morris, his wife and daughter

Directly below are Mrs. J. T. Turner, widow of the late T. & D. Circuit general manager, and Marshall Neilan and Sam Y. Edwards, of First National's San Francisco office, receiving critics of the 'Frisco papers

On the Goldwyn lot we spied Director Reginald Barker and Pauline Frederick smiling a greeting to the sun, which means that before nightfall many feet of negative will have been "shot"



Here our camera caught two smiles that are hard to erase. They belong to Donald Crisp, the Famous Players-Lasky director, and Lois Wilson, the player, in Crisp's racing car

We paused before the Consolidated window while on the Coast, and reflected that the company represents Educational Films Corporation in the Pacific territory

And at the right we get back to Broadway again, and find that Carl Laemmle of Universal is advertising a new production via the "teaser" method. The picture turned out to be "The Right to Happiness"

Alco Announced Its Plans This Week —Famous Players Celebrated First Anniversary

DUSTIN FARNUM in "The Virginian" is the current Jesse L. Lasky feature.

Forty-eight exchanges of the General Film Company are located in the United States alone. The list is published this week and shows how thoroughly this great concern covers the country.

Fred J. Herrington has tendered his resignation as President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Pittsburgh, giving as a reason, that outside opposition made the move necessary.

The Gordon theatre at Rochester, N. Y., has abandoned its five-cent admission scale and adopted the ten-cent plan.

Film producers declare that the price of Metol jumped from $3.75 to $14.00 on the day Germany went to war.

The recently organized Paramount Pictures Corporation issued the first double-page motion picture advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post this week and declare that this national advertising would be continued, and one page taken every month hereafter.

Edna Goodrich, the star of "The Warrens of Virginia" film, is marooned in Belgium and has become active in Red Cross work there.

The Alco and Atsco companies have combined, according to announcements of Al Lichtman of the Alco and Walter Hoff Seely of Atsco. The new company will handle the distribution for All Star Feature Corporation, California Motion Picture Corporation, Popular Plays and Players, Favorite Players Film Company, and Excelsior Feature Film Company. The new Alco consolidation will maintain exchanges in twenty cities.

Famous Players held its first anniversary this week. Adolph Zukor announced that thirty famous features had been released during this first year.

Samual Goldfish of the Lasky Studios announces that Charles Cherry, Edna Goodrich and Bessie Barriscale will appear in future screen productions of the Lasky Company.

Stanley Mastbaum has contracted for Paramount service in all of his theatres around Philadelphia.

The California Motion Picture Corporation announces that next month it will have completed "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" with Beatriz Michelena as star.

The Orpheum at Nashville, Tenn., was forced to close its doors. It had tried the experiment of running all features.

GEORGE D. GOULD.

He's a "Small Town Guy"

But He Has a Real Kick Against the Shortsighted Big Fellows Who Need Managers

IT was with a great deal of satisfaction that I read the reply from a small town exhibitor in your August 9th issue regarding the editorial "Where are the Men?" that appeared in the July 19th issue.

It so accurately described conditions relative to the managers of small town theatres ever getting anywhere, and fit my case so completely that I am prompted to write my appreciation to the brother exhibitor through the NEWS. As he failed to give his name and address I was unable to reach him directly.

I am one of the same kind of exhibitors, having operated a show in a small town for ten years. I was manager, operator and everything and in the first years had a big fight against church influence and civic organizations. But I kept my programs as clean as was possible in those days and overcame much of the opposition and objection to the motion picture.

I do not take off my hat to any of the operators, even in the larger houses. The fact is, I have seen some projection in swell houses that, had I been the manager, I would not have stood for.

There is a difference in men, however, who get their first experience in a small town. One may be interested only to the extent of the present day's show, while the other studies the trade journals, watches his big brothers, and keeps posted on the releases, projection and advertising.

It was always my aim to put over a show here with the same tactics that I thought I would employ in a larger show, and yet, like the brother who wrote the reply I referred to, whenever I would ask for a chance to get into a larger house or some other line of the business I would be given the laugh, or receive a reply to my application that would imply, "What do you know about the show business coming from a small town?"

Human nature is pretty near the same everywhere, as you have said, and I contend that a manager who can get by and please enough people in a town of 1100 inhabitants to operate a show successfully for ten consecutive years can be made into a very valuable man for a larger proposition.

Just one suggestion for this manager shortage that is complained of. Let these men who build and operate good shows and are in need of managers look around a little, get away from their immediate haunts and try out some of these "Small Town Guys." It would not break them, even if they did not make good.

You may use my name and address if you care to. I have been a reader of the NEWS for a long time and would not attempt to run a show without it on my desk as a ready reference. Wishing you all the success in the world, I am,

Yours very respectfully,

C. H. LILLEY,
Shreve, Ohio.

Pictures Not to Open Dark Theatres

Theatres Closed by Equity Strike Will Not Have Feature Films Booked In; Operators' Strike Avoided; Industry Aloof from Dispute

IN the face of disquieting rumors and near-happenings, none of which materialized, the motion picture industry passed another week in which it held aloof from the turmoil created by the actors' strike.

Cries of "Wolf" rose ever and anon from the calamity howlers, but the tide of reason, urging that the industry pursue its own business and avoid entangling alliances in the Actors-Producers melee, has apparently held sway despite the momentary flurry following the declaration of the National Association that it was in sympathy with the Producing Managers.

Amicable concessions on the part of leaders of the industry early in the week prevented the bursting of storm clouds in Chicago, where, it is understood, an order had gone forth for a walkout of motion picture operators.

Not to Open Theatres

A quiet meeting was held in New York at which Arthur Friend, Walter Irwin, Charles C. Pettijohn and other men prominent in the picture industry settled matters with C. C. Shay of the I. A. T. S. E., the stage hands and operators body, and Secretary Gilmore of the Actors' Equity Association. The outcome is said to have been the sending of a wire by Vice-President Newman of the I. A. T. S. E. to the Chicago local, calling off the threatened walk-out of picture operators with the declaration that a "state of peace existed and would continue to exist."

On the other hand, according to first hand information received, the big picture producers will go no further in the opening of New York and other theatres closed by the Actors' strike, with pictures. Two New York houses that have opened with William Fox productions will continue to play, as the Fox organization is said to have had long term leases on them prior to the strike. The same obtains for another house where a Famous Players-Lasky production holds the screen. It is said that another house into which a Fox feature had been booked will not open, in line with the agreement reached.

Chicago reports are to the effect that the picture operators agreed not to walk out, recognizing they were working under contract with the A. A. A.

On Thursday, August 28, it was rumored there might be trouble in New York over the demand from the Motion Picture Workers' Union for better working conditions and higher wages, but it was believed an amicable settlement of this trouble would be reached, inasmuch as it did not enter the realm of troubles arising from the Actors' strike.

At the moment of going to press, the rumor that Universal would follow the lead of P. A. Powers, treasurer, in resigning from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry—a rumor current since his resignation—had come to nothing.

Mr. Powers' action was a personal one, coming as a result of his firm belief that the Association should not take action with the Managers' Association or be swayed by outside influences, and further because the Association refused to adopt a resolution declaring it was opposed to any joint action with the Managers' Protective Association.

One example of the willingness of picture producers to avoid getting into the legitimate's troubles was given by Argus Enterprises which had scheduled "The House Without Children" to open the Gaiety theatre, New York, on August 24. The lease on the house was obtained owing to its being closed by the strike. On representations from the stage hands and operators' union, and at the cost of much money expended on advance advertising and preparations, the opening of the picture was cancelled.

GRAUMANS TO BUILD A $3,000-000 HOUSE

NEGOTIATIONS for the erection of a $3,000,000 picture house to seat 3,500, were completed this week by D. J. and Sid Grauman. The theatre will be erected in Los Angeles on the corner of Sixth and Hill streets, and construction is to be started within sixty days.

The site is two hundred and forty by one hundred and sixty feet, and is one block from the center of pedestrian and auto traffic in the city. A Methodist Church will be replaced on the site by the new theatre.

Universal Man Sees Great Season Ahead

C. A. Nathan of the sales department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, arrived in Los Angeles this week after a tour through the Central States, central west and northwest, visiting exchange cities enroute, and predicts the coming season will be the greatest in the history of the amusement world for this country. In each city Mr. Nathan stated theatres are enjoying unprecedented patronage.

Immoral Pictures are Banned

Idaho Exhibitors at Meeting Decide on Elimination; Other States Next

THE elimination of all pictures from Idaho show houses which are not of a high moral character, was agreed upon last week by the Idaho Members of the Northwest Exhibitors circuit in their second state convention, held in Boise.

J. Q. Clemmer, president of the Northwest circuit and owned of the famous Clemmer theatre at Seattle, was president and presided at the convention. B. W. Bickert, manager of the Inland Amusement company, Boise, state president, called the convention to order and spoke in behalf of high class pictures.

A major portion of the time was given over to a discussion of pictures, the managers being agreed that some classes of pictures should be killed before the making, while other classes should be encouraged. By their action, which it is believed will be followed by other states, Washington, Montana and Oregon, being included in the Northwest circuit, it is hoped to raise the standard of pictures and incidently their theatre business in the estimation of the patronizing public.

Those in attendance were: J. Q. Clemmer, of Seattle, president; B. W. Bickert, Boise, state president; A. B. Wright, Seattle, manager of the northwest circuit; Al Hagar, Rex theatre, Idaho Falls; R Duncan, Elk theatre, Rexburg; A. R. Anderson, Orpheum, Twin Falls; C. O. Buckman, Ideal and Liberty theatres, Emmett; A. C. Gordon, Star theatre, Weiser; C. Hendricks, Crystal theatre, Mountain Home; R. T. Hurtt, Hurle theatre, Caldwell; I. H. Walters, Bungalow theatre, Caldwell; Mr. Archibal, C. & A. Amusement company, Pocatello; S. J. Osika, Burley theatre, Burley; O. F. Crowley, Auditorium, American Falls; C. J. Kalina, Rex theatre, Buhl; Mr. Hughes, Emma theatre, Payette; Raymond Cort, Majestic Amusement company, Nampa; N. E. Leigh, Leigh theatre circuit, Parma, Nyssa and Wilder; D. Jaquish, Dreamland, Ontario; K. L. Burk, Baker theatre company, Baker, Ore.

Virginians Not to Be Caught

Prepare for Censor Eventualities on Suspicion While Holding Convention

THERE were interesting incidental discussions pertaining to the situation in the moving picture world among the exhibitors attending the convention of Virginia managers at Ocean View on Aug. 13 and 14, which brought out personal opinions, semi-privately expressed, that were of equal if not greater interest than expressions made in the public sessions of the convention.

It so happened that on the day the convention opened at Ocean View, Wednesday, Aug. 13, which Coney Island resort is nine miles from the city of Norfolk on the shores of Chesapeake Bay, the General Assembly of the state of Virginia met in special session at the capitol of the state in Richmond.

Apprehension was felt that the Legislature might decide to revive a censorship bill of drastic character which was before it eighteen months ago but which had become lost in the shuffle.

This feeling of apprehension provoked a special meeting of the Virginia exhibitors after the adjournment of the regular sessions of the convention, at which meeting the legislative committee of the association was cautioned to keep a keen eye on the special session of the General Assembly and also authorized to engage an attorney to protect the interests of Virginia exhibitors if the situation became such as to make that necessary.

New F. P.-Lasky Coast Studio Heads

Many Changes in Personnel Made; Hoffman Goes Abroad and Kaufman Returns; Chas. Eyton General Manager of Two Big Plants

OCTOBER 1 will presage extensive changes in the West Coast studios of Famous Players-Lasky, an advancement all along the line in the managerial departments being the most important move.

Milton E. Hoffman will leave for London to assume the position of general manager of the studios of the F. P.-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., and Al Kaufman, now in charge of the building of the London studios, will return to this country.

Charles Eyton, now general manager of the Morosco, will occupy, in addition to that post, the same position at the Lasky studio, and will also be Western representative of the studio activities of the corporation. Fred Kley will take over Mr. Hoffman's position as studio manager at the Lasky plant.

M. E. Hoffman, who is to manage the London studios for Famous Players-Lasky

Men of Long Experience

The position of studio manager at the Morosco plant will be taken over by Frank E. Garbutt.

The continued growth of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the increased production in the West, have rendered it advisable to make the changes which necessarily followed the transferring of Mr. Hoffman to London. Thus Mr. Eyton was selected for the general management of studio affairs in the West when the importance of the British enterprises necessitated some one with the experience of Mr. Hoffman being placed in charge there.

Mr. Lasky stated that in each case it means a distinct promotion for the ones concerned—a tribute, in fact, to their sincere and conscientious work and their unfailing loyalty to the organization. Charles Eyton is one of the most experienced theatrical and motion picture men in the entire field. Twenty-four years of theatrical experience, which includes, latterly, practically six years of experience in motion picture work, have fortified him with a knowledge and understanding of this phase of activity which probably few men in America possess. It was 1913 that with Frank E. Garbutt he organized the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, becoming general manager of the Morosco and Bosworth companies, occupying what is now known as the Morosco studio.

Milton E. Hoffman went to the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company on the 1st of April, 1916, as studio manager, but when the two companies were amalgamated and it became the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, he became studio general manager. In the three and a half years of his active service in these capacities. Mr. Hoffman has demonstrated his ability in productional work, and by his engaging personality has acquired the friendship and confidence of those with whom he has come in contact.

Frank E. Garbutt, son of Frank A. Garbutt, who is a vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is considered a happy choice for the management of the Morosco studio, inasmuch as his technical knowledge has been gained through practical experience as a cameraman and in other capacities.

TOPICS OF MOMENT UP AT AN ENTHUSIASTIC BROOKLYN MEETING

ANIMATED debate on the possible relation of the Actors' strike to the motion picture theatre, featured a meeting of Brooklyn exhibitors called by William Brandt, president of the Brooklyn exhibitor local on Aug. 23.

A resolution was adopted requesting producers not to place their productions in theatres closed by the strike, to avoid the possible calling out of all motion picture operators.

The exhibitors were urged to petition their Congressmen and Representatives for the elimination of the admission, film rental and seating taxes.

Catholic Reviewing Service

Pre-Reviews of Pictures for Organizations All Over the World Planned

THE Catholic Photoplay Pre-Review Service intended, its promoters state, to serve more than seventeen million persons in this country is, after many weeks of preparation, established and working.

According to a statement issued from its offices, the Catholic Photoplay Pre-Review Service will co-operate with most of the leading Catholic Publications in this country—insuring a wide circulation in a specialized sphere.

Its promoters are said to be men with a well-grounded knowledge of the photoplay industry, having a wide experience in the advertising and propaganda field and in earnest sympathy with the policy of making and exhibiting only clean pictures. Mr. Charles J. Meegan, formerly connected with George Kleine, is, for the present in charge. Discussing the Catholic Photoplay Pre-Review Service Mr. Meegan said:

"It is in no manner a censoring proposition. Neither is it intended to criticise. Its paramount purpose is to find good pictures and commend them to the world at large, specializing in the Catholic field. We will let others deal with objectional films. Our patrons will learn, through us, only about worthy plays.

"Our endorsement of a picture, will, we hope, serve as a guide for Catholics and non-Catholics alike. We are doing for the producers, distributors and exhibitors what they have always labored to do, viz., getting in touch with and advising the photopay theatre patrons who, in the final analysis, support and make possible the industry. We have the machinery to do this and will, unquestionably, attain our purpose.

"Our machinery has been set up to also cover Europe and South America.

American's Salesmen Confer

Chicago Meeting Called to Discuss Handling of Picture "Six Feet Four"

FIFTEEN members of the "Flying A" corps of representatives, representing the majority of those holding down the fort in the central division, responded to roll-call on August 16 and 17. President S. S. Hutchinson and C. A. Stimson, manager of the Film Rental department, conducted the conference, the purpose of which was group study of the Company's fall productions and heart-to-heart discussion of new sales plans and office policies.

Among the many live topics on the program for the two days of the conference, there was none equaling "Six Feet Four—Our Big New Special" in the interest and enthusiasm of the response it evoked. Uppermost in everybody's mind were the outstanding merits of this production and the question of how best to realize in a big way upon the opportunity for new records its publication is expected to present. "Six Feet Four" comes to the screen for pre-release showings early in September, after six months in the making, at Santa Barbara and at the laboratories in Chicago.

"Every big exhibitor in the land will be clamoring for first-run rights to this special as soon as the prints are available," prophesied Mr. Stimson in an address to his co-workers, "for they will not be blind to the fact that it's the biggest thing, and the swiftest, most dramatic thing, that has reached the screen this year."

New Theatre Opening

The theatre now building by a Mariana, Arkansas firm has been already leased by R. T. Megibbeu. The house will be opened to the public in October.

McDonald to Rejuvinate Fox's Denver Houses

Harry McDonald, with the William Fox circuit in New York for the past year, has been chosen to direct the four theatres secured by Fox in Denver. After putting the new enterprises on a high standard basis, Mr. McDonald will return East, having already outlined whirlwind campaigns for some of the bigger productions William Fox will put out during the coming season.

A similar mission was accomplished by Mr. McDonald for Fox in New England, where he directed the theatres controlled by the producer. It took him just one season to whip them into shape, get admission prices to a point where the houses could be operated at substantial profit, and give the public one hundred per cent bills.

Screen to Aid Fight on Living Cost

Exhibitors of West Virginia, affiliated with the Miama Valley League, has resolved to co-operate with the Government by lending the use of their screens in the fight against the high cost of living and other matters of the moment. The decision was taken at the close of the annual session held at Charleston.

Film Theft Crusade Is Sternly Pressed

Heavy Hand of National Association Committee Falls on Wilkes-Barre Men and a Long Islander; No Relenting in Prosecution

NO diminution of activity on the part of the Film Theft Committee of the National Association, but rather a more purposeful campaign to wipe out the evil, was reported last week.

The trails led to New York City, Long Island and Wilkes-Barre, Pa., this time. First to feel the weighty arm of the committee, according to its report, was Walter S. Casterline, an attorney of Wilkes-Barre, it is said, and a Ray Stiver, alleged associate of the lawyer's. Six indictments against Casterline are alleged to have been obtained, and two against Stiver charging grand larceny and fraudulent conversion. This is claimed to be the second arrest of this couple, they having been found last spring with a number of pictures belonging to exchanges, in hand, says the committee.

New York Not Exempt

The Committee's agents took up the trail of these men at the trial of Brandenburg of Philadelphia, where testimony was given that appeared to implicate Casterline. Both were held for Grand Jury. As witnesses before that body appeared Louise Rogers, Rogers Film Corporation, New York; George Schaeffer, World Pictures Corporation, New York; Messrs. Green and Humphries, Triangle, Philadelphia; Mr. Sweigert, Famous Players-Lasky, Philadelphia; and H. Minot Pitman, chairman of the Film Theft Committee, all of whom journeyed to Wilkes-Barre for this specific purpose last week.

In addition to Chairman Pitman, who is a leading member of the New York Bar and of counsel to the home office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Abram Salsburg of Wilkes-Barre, and his brother, M. H. Salsburg, represented the Association on the legal prosecutors. The National Association also acted on information that Louis Sovine, owner of the Douglas theatre, Lenox avenue and 142nd street, New York City, was dealing in films alleged to be the property of various film companies.

Through the assistance of Alfred J. Talley, First Assistant District Attorney of New York County, the Committee obtained a search warrant for the premises in Patchogue where alleged stolen films were located. Although Patchogue was not in his district, Mr. Talley used his influence on the authorities there to the end that the reels were speedily recovered. The Patchogue exporter made an affidavit, in which he is said to have stated he had purchased the films from Sovine. Assistant District Attorney Joab Banton of New York issued a subpoena for Sovine, who was examined by Assistant District Attorney Albert Unger. Sovine denied all knowledge of the existence of the reels and that he had ever engaged in their sale. When faced with the exporter, Sovine denied ever having met him.

Mr. Unger immediately subpoenaed the operator and cashier of the Douglas theatre and obtained from the operator a statement on the strength of which the New York Grand Jury indicted Sovine August 22 on the charge of criminally receiving stolen films. Detective Sergeant McCann of the 26th Manhattan Precinct has been officially thanked by the Committee for zealous work in this case.

The Committee's detectives on a tour of Eastern Pennsylvania have gathered in eight hundred reels of film, mainly held for "emergency" shows. Vitagraph's "The Changing Woman," which had been deliberately stolen, was recovered, but no charges were made because of lack of sufficient legal evidence to support the allegation.

In Kingston a missing copy of Universal's "Idle Wives" was taken from a theatre owner, who said he had rented it from a Nat Nathanson and a Mr. Katz, the latter having formerly, it is said, been in the employ of Universal. Katz is said to have obtained the film by purchase from Brandenburg of Philadelphia.

The Committee closed a week of activity by securing a bench warrant for the arrest of a gentleman convicted not very long ago of attempted grand larceny of motion picture films, and now out on suspended sentence. The moment this party returns to the city of his residence, the police will greet him effusively. The film crooks everywhere are said to have made up their minds that the National Association means business and few missing subjects have been reported by the exchanges since the crusade commenced two months ago.

THOUSANDS SPENT FOR FILMS IN SIBERIA

ACCORDING to figures compiled by G. S. Phelps, in charge of Y. M. C. A. activities in Siberia, the "Y" has expended $53,534.11 for motion picture machines and accessories for use among soldiers and civilians in Siberia, in the period from January 1, 1919, to June 30, 1919.

The Siberians are motion picture hungry and to meet this demand, the "Y" has been sending in thousands of feet a week, the total for six months reaching 700,000 feet.

SENNETT BEAUTIES STRIKE FOR SHOES AND STOCKINGS? NO!

THE long arm of the Actors' Equity Association reached way out in Ohio on Friday of this week, to stop the "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" show playing in Newark, but did not succeed, and the result is that the Mack Sennett production, with the six Sennett Bathing Beauties is the only musical road show on tour in the state, with the exception of the burlesquers.

The Actors' Equity Association called upon the Sennett girls to join in the chorus girls' strike. And by doing so they made a double mistake. In the first place, the Mack Sennett stars do not call themselves chorus girls, at least so far as the salary envelopes go it is said.

And another mistake, and by far the gravest, is that they have nothing in common with the demands of the striking chorus ladies. Silk stockings, and shoes? Strike for a decision as to who shall foot the bill for these details of dress? Whyfore? They are not a necessary part of a Mack Sennett girl's stage wardrobe.

The facts were made clear to the Equity, the threatened trouble settled, and the girls are proceeding on their staturesque way through the state.

Sherrill's Censorship Stand

Explains Resignation from N. A. M. P. I. Seeing No Need of Outside Censorship

AS a result of the resignation of William L. Sherrill, President of the Frohman Amusement Corporation as a member of The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry by reason of the Association's position with respect to censorship, and the compulsory submission of productions by its members to the National Board of Review, William D. McGuire, Executive Secretary of the National Board forwarded a communication to Mr. Sherrill as follows:

"I note an item in the Morning Telegraph relative to the resignation of The Frohman Amusement Company from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. One of the reasons said to influence this decision as stated in the clipping, is the adoption by the Association of certain resolutions in Rochester which unquestionably will prove of benefit in the industry as a whole as placing the vast influence of the organized motion picture industry solidly back of The National Board of Review in the interest of wholesome amusement and further designed to arouse public opinion throughout the country to withhold public patronage from such pictures as are not submitted to the National Board of Review for a reflection of public opinion and the recommendation of such editorial changes as the National Board sees fit to recommend, not only in the public interest but in the interest of sound business policy. We beg to inquire in what particular the resolution adopted influenced your resignation.

"We do not believe the Frohman Amusement Company is planning the release of pictures which it does not care to submit to the National Board of Review, thereby testing public opinion regarding the acceptability of the film production in question. We believe your company is too familiar with the necessity of keeping your productions attuned to public opinion to contemplate any change in your established policy of submitting the Frohman Amusement Corporation Productions regularly to the National Board of Review as you have done in the past, even as recently as August 1st.

Let me point out that the National Board of Review stands in a purely advisory relationship to the motion picture industry. It is opposed to censorship—it is an endeavor to reflect public opinion on a democratic basis. It represents a co-operative movement of large significance between a great industry and a social agency for public welfare."

Mr. Sherrill set forth his position with respect to the matter in a communication that left no doubt as to where he stands. Mr. Sherrill's communication follows:

"I have before me your letter of the fifteen instant. My opposition to the adoption by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry of the resolution referring to in your letter was based upon the fact that its wording was a practical admission of the need for and purposes of outside censorship. This was clearly a reversal of its position time and again reiterated condemning official censorship in every form. There was not and is not now any opposition on my part to a cooperation by Producers with your organization, just so long as it did not make compulsory the submission of productions for purposes of censorship to any organization or body.

Brentwood President Buys Mena Studios

L. C. Haynes, President of the Brentwood Film Corp. has announced the purchase of the Mena Film Company studios, including the buildings, equipment and a long term ground lease. The studios cover a block in Hollywood, and boast of an enclosed stage and an additional open air stage.

Metros Sold in England for Two Years

President Rowland Announces Deal Involving $2,500,000; Further Deals Are Presaged; Wide Development of Trade Is Seen

SALE of the entire Metro output for two years in England, is an announcement that Richard A. Rowland, President of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., reserved for this week.

The transaction involved the sum of $2,500,000 according to his statement, and by it Sir William Jury of Jury, Ltd., of England, acquires all Metro and Screen Classics productions, and the Nazimova pictures.

While this deal is considered a big one, Mr. Rowland intimates that the step is but a beginning in the tremendous motion picture trade which he sees as developing with rapidity between this country and the Old World.

The Jury theatres in England number approximately 200, while three more designed to rival the greatest American houses, are now projected.

No Boycott by English

From his own personal observations abroad Mr. Rowland was able to nail the story, recently circulated, that English motion picture producers are planning to "boycott" American-made products.

"I found the British producer to be most cordial in his regard for American picture manufacturers," said Mr. Rowland. "It is true, of course, that the Briton intends to compete with Americans in the making of motion pictures and will naturally endeavor to exploit them and otherwise challenge the American competitor; but as to any ill feeling, I found no evidence of it on the other side.

"The English are, in fact, very enthusiastic over American picture productions. They admire the American workmanship, and the 'pep' that the American director injects into his efforts. The rivalry engendered by comparison between the British and the American product is keen, but good-natured."

The Metro president describes conditions in England as "phenomenal." Much higher rental prices are being paid, both for the native and imported picture productions, and the English houses are booking attractions as long as 11 and 14 months in advance. Production, however, is at a virtual standstill. The labor situation is as yet tied up.

"Nevertheless," said Mr. Rowland, "as soon as they can get started, English producers are going to make some mighty good pictures. What is more, they are going to send them over here to enter into competition with ours. And if they are of the quality we want, I know that they will be warmly welcomed. We should do business on a reciprocal plan. The English manufacturer shows every disposition to cooperate, rather than antagonize."

Convincing emphasis to Mr. Rowland's observations was the fact that one of the Metro president's closest comrades on the homeward voyage was J. Frank Brookliss of an English producing company.

COAST STUDIOS MAY STRIKE FOR BETTER CONDITIONS

PERSISTENT reports current for past several days are that all union employees at the studios will strike on Labor Day for recognition of the union and a change of working conditions. No question of a wage scale is involved. The Secretary of the International Alliance Theatre Stage Employees denies truth of the report. All studios have received demands from union requesting acceptance of conditions by September first. Present working agreements made through government meditation expires September fourteenth.

Studios have always maintained open shops and all plan to continue that basis. The unions demand technical director at every studio at salary of $75 weekly; working hours eight to five, and double pay for overtime.

Taxable Music Condemned

Cleveland Exhibitors Call on Producers to Bar Such from Productions

THE following notice to music publishers and producing companies decrying introduction of song numbers of taxable music in pictures has been issued by the Cleveland Exhibitors Association:

"This association condemns the practise of any producer who consciously or otherwise introduces song numbers or musical numbers of taxable music in their productions, making it almost obligatory upon the exhibitor to submit to what we consider illegal extortion at the hands of certain publishers who thus compel us to advertise their goods after inflcting a so-called royalty tax, upon the exhibitors' advertising medium, viz: the screen.

"We also condemn the practise of the music publishing Shylocks who send free samples of taxable music to unsuspecting managers and pianists with a request to play the same, without informing them that the said number is taxable—a palpable trick to catch the unwary and lead them to break the law.

"Our entire membership, which is now 100% of Cleveland's motion picture theatres, are pledged to use as little as possible of so-called taxable music in such theatres as have found it necessary to "sign up" and our officers are pledged to inaugurate a real movement to rid the industry of "pirates" of this ilk.

"We further call upon every organization of exhibitors to take similar action and be ready to join us when Cleveland starts the aforesaid movement, and no passing of the hat. We intend from now on, to attack anyone and everyone who attempts to deprive us of the least of our legitimate rights and privileges. The day of a mere defensive attitude is gone. In the name of policy or expediency we have been long-suffering. From this date "not a cent for tribute" is the slogan, and Ohio is the battle-field."

The statement was signed by the Executive board; President H. H. Lustig; Vive President C. W. Masterman, M. Horowitx, D. L. Schuman, W. J. Slimm, W. H. Horsey; Max Schachtel; H. W. Heinbuch and Joseph Grossman.

CENSOR COMMITTEE'S WORK IS APPRECIATED

THE following letter from Commissioner John F. Gilchrist of the New York Department of Licenses; to chairman Gabriel L. Hess of the Censorship Committee, is evidence that the work of the committee in its efforts to keep the screen clean, has not gone unappreciated:

"I am indeed grateful for the copy of your report dealing with the accomplishments of the Censorship Committee.

"I appreciate very deeply the earnest and hearty co-operation that your association has given me in my endeavor to prevent the exhibition of indecent pictures in the City of New York."

Fox Denver Deal Assumes Big Aspect

Late advices indicate that William Fox may invest considerably more than the $1,000,000 first figured on in the transaction whereby he acquires four motion picture houses on Curtis street, Denver. This deal becomes effective on September 1, and involves the Rivoli, Isis, Strand and Plaza theatres. L. B. Brown and A. F. Megahan are the present owners.

A multitude of improvements will be made in each house, these improvements to include besides renovating and refurnishing, the installation of organs costing $25,000 each in the Strand and Plaza theatres. The present staff of employes will be retained, though a new general manager may be appointed.

John Zanft, regional representative for Fox and C. S. Levin, general manager of the Fox circuit, are closing the negotiations which will give Fox some of the houses outright, and a lease for twelve years on the others.

Did Much to Prevent Georgia Censorship

Exhibitors of Georgie are giving a vote of thanks to Arthur Lucas, District Supervisor of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, for his efforts in defeating at least for the time being, the matter of censorship which was before the Legislature before it adjourned. The bill was drastic in its provisions.

Next for Molly King

Molly King will start her second production for the American Cinema Corporation, at their studio, Glendale, Long Island, next week; and will be directed by John M. Stahl. The title is "Women—Men Forget" and will be supported by Frank Mills, Gretchen Hartman, and others.

Ernest Shipman Once Again on Broadway

After a year's absence from Broadway Ernest Shipman appeared "officially" last week and explained that he had been here privately for the past few days and had purposely remained in seclusion until a certain big deal was consumated. He said:

While in the West I put over three big deals which could not be considered complete until their Eastern connections were OK.

One of them was the promotion and production of James Oliver Curwood's stories for the screen. These stories will all be six and seven reels in length, and will specialize in great big outdoor nature angles which will have an International appeal.

Colonel Jacob Ruppert, Colonel Howard S. Borden, Frederick E. Grant, Ashbel P. Fitch and Frank G. Hall, head the directorial body governing the Hallmark Picture Corporation, a $2,500,000 company resulting from the merger of the Frank Hall enterprises, Film Clearing House, Independent Sales Corporation, Film Finance Corporation, Rothapfel Picture Corporation, Hobart Henley Productions, Inc., and Charles Miller Productions, Inc.

The new company will operate on an extensive scale, releasing a picture each week after September, 1st, including a fifteen episode serial, starring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, titled "The Trail of the Octopus," twelve special productions and twenty-six Hallmark Pictures. Hobart Henley and Charles Miller productions will figure prominently in the specials and the productions of other prominent directors will be announced later.

Reichenbach Not With Equity

William Rudolph, New York representative for Clara Kimball Young, and the Equity Corporation, denies the story printed in last week's trade papers to the effect that Harry Reichenbach would be connected in any way with the promotion work of Miss Young's coming releases. The corrected story originated in Los Angeles, but at the New York office of Equity telegrams from the Pacific Coast producing headquarters were shown which denied that any deal had been put through by which Reichenbach would become active in the interests of either Clara Kimball Young or the Equity Corporation.

Strand, Brooklyn, Open

The new Strand theatre, planned to be the Brooklyn's biggest and most beautiful house, opened its doors for the first time on August 29 showing Geraldine Farrar in "The World and its Woman."

Opens Doors to Films

The Shubert Majestic of Providence, R. I., a house devoted to the legitimate, opened last week with moving pictures.

Wire Briefs from the Coast

"CONFESSION," Henry Walthal's latest for National Film, was sold on Aug 23 to George H. Davis and associates of San Francisco. The initial payment for the world rights was $250,000, with National still retaining an interest in the film. Editing of the picture will be completed in two weeks.

Sixteen people including Lieutenant Marshall Taylor, assistant and technical director of a new Nazimova production, were injured when a truck carrying forty was hit by an electric car while going on location. Taylor is News Editor of the Los Angeles Examiner and was borrowed by Metro to supervise East Indian scenes. It is believed he will never fully recover from severe injuries sustained.

Owing to the fact that all film companies maintain a two weeks' film supply, the industry on the coast is in no danger at the moment of a film shortage due to the railroad strike which has tied up consignments. An auto express was established by the Film Exchangemen's Board of Trade the first day of the tie-up, and in this manner houses are being supplied with pictures.

Douglas Fairbanks on August 26 shipped a print of "His Majesty the American," his first United Artists production, to coast and mountain exchanges by airplane to San Francisco.

Orient Wants Our Pictures

Man Familiar with Conditions in Far East Says There Is Wide Demand There

"IT is up to America to supply the picture demands of the Orient. American made pictures have all the elements which appeal to the Oriental mind—action, locale dramatic situations, and, indirectly, educational value," declared Mr. Warren Heath, formerly representative of the Chinese-American Company, when questioned regarding the picture status in the Far East. Mr. Heath is well qualified to speak on the subject, having lived more than a year in China and Japan. Business took him to Pekin, Chiau Chau, Shanghai and other principal cities and brought him into close touch with native business men and industries.

"The native element demands action and high dramatic values. Melodrama particularly appeals to them. Westerns such as some of the recent William Desmond, Robertson-Cole features are also marked popular. In fact, the more trouble the hero or heroine gets into the more pleased is the audience. This naturally leads to a consistent demand for heavy dramas and good, fast comedy-drama, and judging from what I have seen from the Robertson-Cole productions, I do not hesitate to say that will have a marked degree of popularity in the Far East."

"Americans look upon the Chinese as a stolid, serious minded race; they are just the opposite. True, they do not openly express their emotions. However, it is hard to find a race that loves amusement more than the Chinese. They will go to almost any lengths to get it.

"Shanghai supports two amusement parks, 'The New World' and 'The Old World!' Both of them contain motion picture theatres, open air with a large screen and rows of wooden benches on which the natives seem to swarm, and brick buildings furnished after the manner of the old owery five-cent houses. Sometimes a violin and piano furnishes music and at other times native talent with their crude instruments answers the demand.

William Jury, Mr. Rowland promised to make more detailed announcements concerning them after he perfects his plans for Metro's invasion of the foreign field.

These plans are likely to embrace France, Italy and Scandinavia. Mr. Rowland made a thorough canvass of the picture situation in France, and will make an announcement about this phase of his trip later. He learned that Metro pictures have an enormous following in the French republic.

"Madame Shulbach, an influential agent in Paris, told me," said Mr. Rowland, "that the French people are noticeably partial to Metro pictures for three reasons: First, they are exceedingly fond of our stars.

"This Madame Shulbach frankly confided to me, adding that the French motion picture patrons particularly praise and recognize the superiority of Metro photography and the quality of Metro stories."

The Parisian agent also places pictures in Spain and she confided to Mr. Rowland that Metro productions are immensely popular there, a fact that the Metro president was able to confirm any personal observation.

Prior to placing the Metro, Screen Classics and Nazimova productions in England, Mr. Rowland gave a number of special showings of the more recent pictures to prominent British producers and exhibitors.

The British producers were enthusiastic in their laudations of Nazimova's work, according to Rowland, which was to them a revelation in screen art. Many of them recalled the days when as a member of Paul Orlenoff's Russian repertoire company Nazimova toured England in "The Chosen People," by Israel Zangwill. This was prior to Nazimova's New York debut in English, and the English men were amazed at the strides her art has taken, especially in the interpretation of moods for the silent drama

Besides completing his transaction with Sir William Jury, Mr. Rowland in London acquired the rights to five Drury Lane melodramas, as already announced.

One of the biggest contracts ever offered a motion picture serial director has been signed by James W. Horne with the Astra Film Company, it has been announced by Louis J. Gasnier, the producer.

Food for Thought—By an Exhibitor

An Interview with J. E. Pearce

ABOUT the time we thought every exhibitor in the whole United States, including at least one from South America, a letter having just come in from this source on the subject of this prologue, advertising, was firmly and irrevocably convinced that exploitation on pictures, out of the ordinary and along novelty lines, was THE thing, along comes an interview by our New Orleans correspondent, H. H. Dunn, with J. E. Pearce, manager of five of the Southern metropolis leading picture theatres, which states in no uncertain terms that we are all wrong and goes on to prove his contention as far as he is concerned by citing what has happened at the Pearce theatres on a policy of conservatism.

If we were not enlightened on the subject we might think that Mr. Pearce's liver was not just right the morning our man called for a story, but according to our informant the New Orleans theatrical magnate has no such physical ailment, keeping his health and spirits above par being one of the things he does best. In fact, while getting paid for gathering the information for this story, he was also enjoying a ride on Lake Pontchartrain aboard the after dec'k, whatever that is, of Mr. Pearce's new motor cruiser, Spitfire IV, meaning, we presume, that there have been three other Spitfire's which didn't run fast enough to suit Mr. Pearce.

We also might think that he belonged to that school of Southerners who were described in that successful play by Augustus Thomas, "Alabama," naturally conservative, but that kind of a man wouldn't be buying four motor boats just for pleasure; besides, these old timers have all died off according to the latest news from south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Anyway Mr. Pearce has some things to say about picture exploitation which are interesting; more so, perhaps, than if he had agreed with most of us and lie awake nights thinking up new stunts if you want to do a whale of a business with a feature. Here is the interview transplanted to paper. We don't say that we agree with Mr. Pearce nor yet will we say that he is entirely wrong. Maybe staidness and conservatism hasn't entirely evaporated, this last being a good word for New Orleans, from Mr. Pearce's home town and that his patrons don't like innovations. Maybe also Mr. Pearce is ahead of the rest of us for, according to his story, he used to make a lot of noise about his pictures, but has given up the practise. Maybe—but what's the use? About the time you have proved something in the picture business along comes some fellow and upsets all your theories.

"THE days of the 'ballyhoo' and the 'circusing' of motion pictures as of any value to the motion picture exhibitor are past. What the people see, they talk about, and they spread advertising best.

"The business of the motion picture exhibitor today is exactly the same as that of the manager of a legitimate theatre, who long ago realized that the satisfied patron is worth many columns of advertising. We believe in letting the people see the film. What they see, they talk about, and they spread advertising best and fastest. My father, my brother and myself opened the first regular motion picture theatre in the South, in Memphis, in 1905. Later we extended our theatres to Birmingham, and, in 1906, entered the New Orleans field. Later, we disposed of our Memphis and Birmingham interests and consolidated our holdings in New Orleans, where we now have five theatres in successful operation.

"In those days, the motion picture exhibitor's profession was more or less of an experiment, and we tried all kinds of experiments to attract the attention of the people. Sandwich men, bands on sign-covered wagons, flaring posters, rivalling those of the latest circus, men and women dressed in the costumes of the players on the shadow stage, signs which all but blocked the sidewalk in front of the theatre—all these were a few of the methods employed to get publicity and attract attention.

"Soon, however, the effect of these advertising media began to wear off; I commenced to notice that they were not getting results, and I began to study other methods of attracting the people to the houses under my direction. First of all, I found that the patron who was entertained and pleased by the film in my theatre, returned, and almost invariably brought one or two or three friends with him or with her, as the case might be. This taught me that one of the first principles of success for the motion picture exhibitor is to learn what the population from which he draws reallly want to see, and then give it to them. I have followed this rule ever since.

"Then, the idea came to me that these satisfied patrons, if they were told of the film-plays that were to come, would tell their friends, and would come back themselves. So I began putting announcements of future shows on the screen—not dead slides with the names of the plays and players, but pictures of the stars and scenes in the coming attractions, with names and dates. This also proved a ten-strike, and I have continued it ever since.

"Thousands of persons who 'go to the movies' casually, are not regular patrons of any one theatre. Therefore, I took on newspaper advertising, to attract this class of patrons for the first time, trusting that their satisfaction with the play they saw, and the announcements given them of future attractions, would make them regular visitors. This form of advertising also covered the transient field, the thousands who daily pass through a city of the size of New Orleans, and merely 'drop in' on a film for half an hour or an hour to occupy their time. The newspaper advertising covered both of these classes successfully and I have continued it extensively, using large space in all three newspapers of this city.

"The third method which I have found successful and which I employ to large extent, especially on large productions, involves the billboards along the railroads and highways entering the city, and along the most-used car lines into the residential sections, and, while it is difficult to estimate exactly what percentage of advertising value this method possesses compared to the others, I believe it attracts large numbers of people who otherwise might not have been brought so forcibly to appreciate the entertainment offered them at low cost by the motion picture theatres.

"Thus, for our five theatres, we have dropped the noisy methods of advertising, and have decided that it pays the exhibitor to advertise when he has a hundred per cent production, but when he tries to fool the public with flaring advertising for a minor attraction, he is only fooling himself. He must have the goods to deliver in order to deliver them. This gives us four methods of advertising:

"The satisfied patron, who knows the coming program.

"Striking advertisements on the film.

"Newspaper announcements.

"Billboards.

"In cases in which we have special contracts, calling for extensive advertising, we go farther than usual, yet we almost always follow these lines, and we have proved conclusively that these methods get the best results, give us a permanent clientele, and attract more of the best class of patrons than all the others we have tried. Motion pictures have risen far above the dignity of the sideshow; they are an established form of entertainment, at a moderate price; they are on a par with the spoken drama in virtually every city in this country, and the sooner motion picture exhibitors realize that they must treat their theatres, their attractions and their patrons in a dignified manner, the better results they will achieve."

Your Idea and Ours

THIS display on the "Spoilers" we are selecting as an example of how to advertise a reissue. The Lyceum boxes the words, "The new and revised edition de luxe," so that people will know that this is not a new picture.

After getting the title well up in the billing, which is entirely correct, the Lyceum goes to some selling talk which the feature merits, with the little "P. S." about the scrap following, serving to call attention to the never-to-be forgotten punch in this picture.

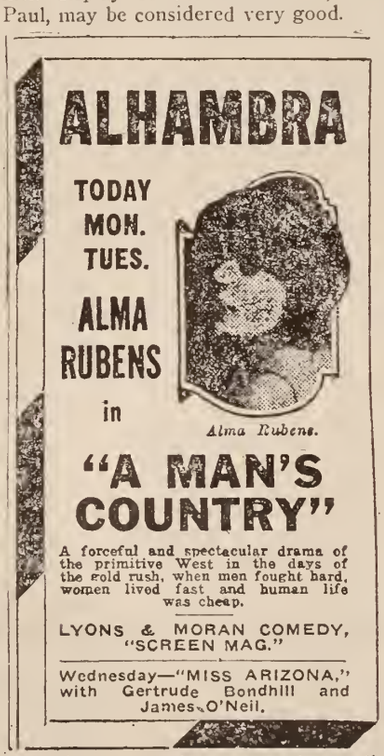
Incidentally the fact that a theatre like the Lyceum is playing a new print on this old release is worth mentioning.

Here is a feature which as the ad man says, is like "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "The Birth of a Nation." You might do a lot worse if a good print is available, to run this Beach story over again.

The ad was seven-and-half inches double column.

If the day is dark and gloomy outside don't let the atmosphere reach your auditorium.

WE are selecting this display of "Hulsey's Queen," Dallas, Texas, principally for one reason, to show you what sort of an ad to frame if you are going to use a cut which circles in its printing area.



This was a quarter page, and therefore big enough, so the use of the circles doesn't look bad at all, which if used in narrow space would have left a lot of white which could not have been utilized without cutting the block on which the cut was mounted at the four corners.

As for the type part of this ad it is neither good nor bad, having been set without much attention paid to getting artistic effects, and yet which announces the star's name and the title well enough so they catch the eye. The selling talk carries interest as it concerns a subject which has a universal appeal, mother love. The telling of this selling talk hasn't been made especially literary either, but we hardly think that in this case, this point matters to any great extent. You have three things to consider in this picture. A title that sounds alluring to certain minds, a star who is popular with lots of people and selling talk which arouses curiosity and strikes a responsive chord in the breasts of most women. Therefore this should have attracted the people of Dallas to the Queen theatre to see "Human Desire." Therefore it has been successful, and consequently should be praised.

A lot of good ideas never see the light of day because the originator hasn't the courage of his convictions.

AS an example of small space advertising, this single-column four-inch display of the Alhambra's, St. Paul, may be considered very good.

Again, a cut does not print well enough to mean anything, but it has been used correctly in the framing and the fault cannot be laid at the door of any one but the producer who offers it as an exhibitor's aid.

The star and title have been billed correctly with an excellent bit of selling talk added considering the opportunity presented in so small a space.

THIS ten-inch double-column display of the Liberty theatre, Seattle, is about the worst we have ever seen from this city, especially as a sample of Liberty advertising. Somebody must have been in a hurry when they framed this one, for it says about as little as could be told and still advertise a picture.

Beginning with the catch line at the top, set in black caps and run together, practically two inches are wasted. Then a three-inch cut, which doesn't mean a thing, spoils three more. Consequently the Liberty has a ten-inch ad, but paid for twenty inches. Just where this cut purporting to be Chaplin originated, we do not know, but if it is a sample of exchange aid we would like to know who it aids? What is the use of using a Chaplin cut if you can't recognize Chaplin, and certainly this figure might be any one.

We will pass the black rule used in this and some other things we are always talking about, like mentioning the musical program, as incidental when you have an ad like this to consider.

To escape criticism; do nothing, say nothing, be nothing.

THE Modern Theatre in Providence, R. I., is another picture house which the manager Saul Broenig, thoroughly believes in advertising by the "drawing ideas." He has used considerable space in the Providence papers and encourages free and liberal use of printer's ink. The accompanying ad occupied four columns in width and 100 lines deep. He used the drawing in one paper and in the other Sunday paper used the same "copy," but reduced by half.

One has but to look at the advertisement to see that it is not formed from hard and fast set type. It has display of a distinctive nature. The principals are made to stand out as they should. Clara Kimball Young and Alice Brady, are quite the thing in the two pictures presented and they are featured as they should be. Ten words tell what "The Better Wife" is and a few more words, which prove to be enough, tell who are with her.

In connection with the "Marie Limited," there is but one fault to find. We don't like that "best picture Miss Brady ever done." It's old-time stuff and sometimes has a comeback.

You never find clubs under the apple tree which bears good fruit.

THIS display of the Elite theatre, Nashville, Tenn., two columns nine inches is certainly melodramatic, both in the cut used and the selling talk, but it attracts attention by the action suggested in the cut, and that done people are bound to read the sentences which follow describing what topic is covered in this production. With this accomplished, then there is only the personal question of every person of whether or not they want to see it. To some it will appeal as a subject which they are not interested, the story of a woman gone wrong, while to others, quite a percentage it will be welcomed as a picture they especially want to see. There is still interest in the sensational picture, and prints too light and because of the fact that the scene depicted is "stagy."

while you may not choose to cater exclusively to this class, you must still consider this fact when you are booking pictures. All the pulling power of this is based on the action suggested to be a part of the film, with nothing being said about the star, and only the title announced as a secondary consideration, all of which in this case we will say is entirely correct. The all-important thing with the people who went to see this production was the thought that they were to be permitted to "see something." It is probable that they were again disappointed which, however, does not matter.

If you can't stand criticism you are in for an unhappy life.

HERE is two-column ten-inch display of the New Lyric's, Minneapolis, which attempts to produce the same result as that accomplished by the New Garrick of the same city, with a display of "A Very Good Young Man," also covered in this section. This display, however, fails for the reason that the cut is neither a caricature or a picture of Ray and also for the reason that the type lines have not been well framed.

The space utilized by the magician cut is pretty nearly thrown away, and the selling talk isn't unusual enough to carry any great weight as a business producer. Reduced to its simplest terms this ad is good as only all advertising is good, in that it announces the attraction at the New Lyric. It so happens that this picture is largely self-explanatory in its title, and therefore the New Lyric has not lost as much by this ineffective ad as it might with some other features. They do, however, miss the point.

No one ever has won fame and fortune without effort; neither can you succeed without working.

HERE is a display on the one and only six reel broad comedy of them all, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," a three column by fifteen, which strikes us as great work especially since we are pretty sure that this is all a home product, no producers' material being available.

To begin with, the cuts used and the way they are displayed is bound to make this stand out on the page.

In billing the opera house has started off with an announcement which while extravagant is justified. Then comes the names and cuts of the three big stars and a list of the lesser lights, all of whom are now heading the casts of two-reelers.

The tile is billed big enough so it will be instantly read and the selling talk at the bottom fits the style of production.

This is a mighty good display on a picture which merits all that has been said about it.

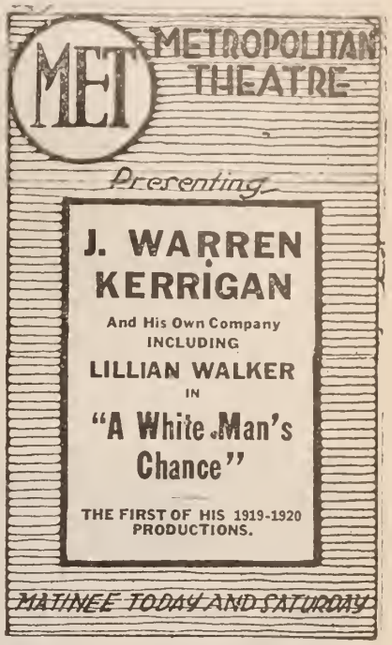
There is one envelope that never contains bad news—the pay envelope.

MR. GOLDBURG, advertising manager of the Strand, Louisville, Ky., has used a lot of space in this saying things which are entirely foreign to the picture but as what he has said rates fairly true we rather think this display, four columns by seven inches, will slide by as average.

Personally we had rather see advertising stick to the point rather than go chasing rainbows in its selling talk. In all the sentences this ad contains, not one gives a hint of what the picture is about, which we believe should always be done, unless the production be one from standard book or play where everyone is going to know about it anyway. As far as type arrangement and placing of the cut go this is more than good. This is a fair display that's all. Let Louisville know that the show at the Strand is "Burglar by Proxy" with Jack Pickford and that it is a comedy.

We have seen people so fond of money that they wouldn't invest some they had long enough to make more.

THIS display of Tally's theatre, Los Angeles, eight and a half inches double column, is a mighty good example of how to advertise a melodramatic bill of this type. It has the black, the white, the selling talk, and a good descriptive cut.



This ad will attract attention, the cut will incite interest, the star's name will give the offering the required impressiveness, and the patron is sold.

We would say that this as nearly perfect for small space advertising for this bill as anything we have seen. It has all the power of a larger space.

Billing Miss Reed's name over the title is correct, the reading matter is properly placed and the listings of the supplementary numbers on the program come in for commendation. Unfortunately this is an ad which every exhibitor cannot reproduce as it has been specially prepared and requires facilities many smaller cities cannot furnish. However, it may be admired and as such is presented for your inspection.

The wise manager hires a first-class operator and then keeps out of his sight except on pay day.

HERE is a style of advertising used as a permanent thing by the Mertopolitan theatre, Cleveland, which has been given space before. The border and wording contained within it is a cut. The type matter is inserted in a mortise.

If you care for this style, it is an easy matter to duplicate this ad. A few dollars for a cut and you are all set.

Personally, as we have remarked previously, we believe that any theatre can spend its advertising appropriation to better advantage with the use of cuts of a descriptive sort and good live selling talk, than to affect this style.

This has one advantage however. It becomes sort of a trade mark for the theatre, is easily taken care of from day to day, so far as the changes are concerned, etc.

The Cleveland ad was seven inches double column.

It is alright to dream great things if you try to make them come true.

THIS display of the Bank theatre, Akron theatre, fails to be melodramatic enough for the melodramatic picture it is advertising.

This fight to the death looks rather tame, principally because the cut used

From 100% to Zero

The catch line used in this is not nearly as good as if the Bank had displayed the first five words of the next sentence, "A Fight to the Death." Asking a question always carries less weight than making a statement. A question implies doubt or lack of knowledge. Remember in advertising you should tell your patrons something. You make a statement of a fact. You inform them what you have to sell, a certain picture with a certain star, etc. Don't let your advertising reflect a lack of confidence in your offering or a lack of knowledge concerning it.

This display was five and a half inhces by three columns.

The desire to buy something for less than you have to pay elsewhere is not a matter of climate or language.

THIS quarter page display of Grauman's, Los Angeles, is an ad that very few exhibitors may hope to copy. Only a big city and big house which can afford to spend considerable money aside from space purchased, will be able to duplicate this ad.

However, it is an example of the highest type of theatre display yet to come to our attention. It is useless to comment on it's beauty as it is reproduced for you to study and admire.

We will make only one observation. You will note that in spite of the fact that it is black and bold it does not have that cheap look which too much ink often gives a display. This ad is just as artistic and sells "The Third Kiss" in just as refined a way as if methods usually adopted for this effect had been utilized.

We have told you that very few houses can produce a display of this kind. We will also add that there are very few artists capable of framing a display of this quality. The man who can do it is usually painting portraits.

FROM Akron, Ohio, come several copies of the Press, in which a most unusual lot of good advertising for a city of this size appears. In fact we doubt that any city can surpass it in the matter of displays devoted to motion pictures.

This quarter page of the Empress is a sample. Except for the fact that the cuts print very poorly and therefore much of their selling value is lost, this is an excellent display. We like the name cut, the trade mark under it, the manner of billing the star and the way the title line has been displayed. Here the display ceases to be excceptionally commendable for the reason given. However, the failure of the cuts can not be laid at the ad man's door so we should say that he is doing very well with his job.

You can sell anything but blue sky if you can get enough people with money around you.

IN certain ways this display of the Strand's, Cleveland, Ohio, three columns by eight inches clipped from the Plain Dealer advertises "The Third Degree" rather well in so far as making the ad conspicuous on the page and the title and star lines sure to be noticed. There the good things of the ad to a great extent stop.

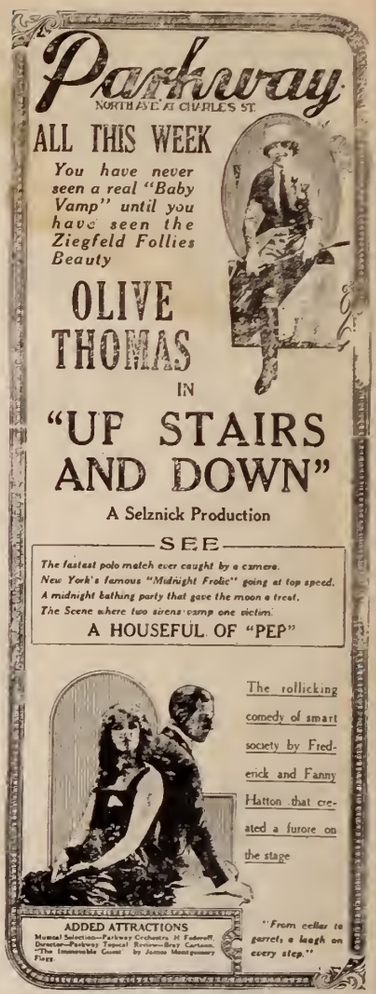
The selling talk is misleading in that is suggests that Miss Stuart shot Underwood. Nothing is said about the basic idea of this plot, hypnotism. Nothing is said about the story's being an exposure of police methods always a subject of much interest and one of the things which made the play such a success. Nothing is said about the smaller numbers on the bill, the music, etc. The Strand bases it's appeal on the play the author and the star, using the cuts and a boldness in display to get the attention. This ad isn't bad but is not as good as it might be considering the fact that considerable time and effort has evidently been devoted to framing it.

Those who toil are divided into two classes: Those who hate work because they have to do it and those who like to work because they don't have to do it.



THIS display of the Washington, Detroit, mostly producers cut looks out from the page rather well. In selling this melodramatic story the cut is effective there being nothing theatrical about it and the characters register very well. The selling talk used is in keeping with the type of production and the fact that no star is mentioned probably means that in Detroit, the featured player is not well enough known to be given space. The appeal is based on the title, the selling talk and the good cut used.

You have a pretty good idea of the calibre of your fellow men and they also have your number. It therefore behooves you to educate yourself into being a better citizen.

HERE is one of the Parkway's which told Baltimore that "Up Stairs and Down" was comedy rather well. Especially good use of the cuts has been made in this, the first one showing Olive Thomas in "Some Clothes" always of interest to women and the second one descriptive the kind of stuff the picture contains. We don't just see the reason for paying for space to tell people that his is a Selznick production. Again comes out admonition to advertise your own business unless you think a producer's trade mark is worth money to you. We also believe that the appearance of this would have been improved if the light rule used to box the matter after the word "See" had been left off. That would have given the whole display a clean white look and helped it's balance especially if each line now in the box had been indented a little beyond the one above it.

Here is another mighty fine border emanating from Baltimore. It sets off the display to excellent advantage.

Fashions were invented to make women happy. Therefore a picture with a display of the latest from Paris is bound to be of interest.

THIS display of the Clemmer, Seattle, four columns wide and a full page in depth is an example of billing a popular star and a very good picture from a very widely read story by a famous author in second place and still is entirely correct. The reason is that Fay Tincher appears in person along with her comedy "Mary Moves In," and that fact dwarfs everything else to be considered.

As for the ad itself it is not very artistic but there is plenty of white space, lots of black letters and in it's original it surely was read by every person who picked up a paper. Therefore it passes as an example of big display with it's selling message shouted in every line. The display looks sort of cut in two in the middle a result unavoidable when ever one tries to display two things equally on one ad.

There are some people so stubborn that they refuse to use a good idea if they didn't originate it. They usually work for someone else at a salary less than fifty thousand per.

THIS is one of S. Barret McCormick's ads and as usnal it is a model. This display was four columns by ten inches. We aren't going to pass any remarks concerning it but we do request the reader to spend a few mniutes to study this display and note the manner in which it has been framed. Don't stop with the title but read clear to the bottom. You will not one thing we are always yelling about. Mr. McCormick didn't stop when he had told Indianapolis about the feature picture. He had said something about his entire program all of which we tell you to do. You, of course, may have said concerning us: "That guy sits at a desk in New York and tells us how to advertise," which may or may not be true, but when one of the foremost exhibitors in the country does it, you can make up your mind that it pays. McCormick buys his advertising just as he does his pictures, the best he can get for the money. Therefore he isn't paying for space unless he is getting his money's worth.

The Lord loves a cheerful giver and an exchange manager loves the exhibitor who pays long prices. Sometimes you can pay too much for love. It's best to get ap ciure along with it.

THIS display of the Auditorium, Rapid City, South Dakota, looks considerably like an overgrown herald principally because of the heavy billing of the star and the too uniform use of "caps" all of one style.

The producers have provided some rather nifty cuts for use in exploiting "Oh Boy" and this is one of them. However, to use them to best advantage, one must not overshadow their rather delicate lines with too heavy type. This ad does that. We would suggest in using these cuts that you do not get your space too deep and that a border of the hair line type, decorative if possible, be utilized. The sentences used in this display are of the most commonplace kind. In fact with the exception of the line "Girly-girly musical comedy," all the matter contained is that of an announcement in the shortest possible phrases.

We do not say that this ad did not sell "Oh, Boy." It did, for a good sized space was provided, four columns by 15 inches and there is white space enough so it stands out for what it is, an announcement of the attraction.

WITH a little more effort expended in selecting a more artistic type, this four column ten inch display of the Hippodrome, Dallas, Texas, would have been much better. A cut which is rather meaningless for the reason that it doesn't identify either of the characters has been well placed and the selling talk is good, yet the display has a rather commonplace look. This we believe is due to the type used. Incidentally the heavy pieces of rule do not help matters any. If a light rule just enough to mark the paper had been substituted, a catch line say "A dramatic poem" used under the word "Love" placed under the opening sentence would have balanced the display somewhat and given it some heading. This is hardly up to the "Hulsey Family" standard.

The man who has been in the picture business six months is an exhibitor. One who has been in it six years is bound to be a showman.

THERE has been a lot of good advertising on "Sahara" but this display of the Strand's strikes us as being as good as anything which has come to our attention. The illustration used to emphasize the catch line is excellent. The catch line itself is an interest maker and then comes the selling talk which should convince the reader that he ought to see this picture. The billing of Sullivan's name is correct also. This writer probably means more to the movie fan than any other person contributing to the screen.

Quoting what the papers say about this picture may not carry any great weight with the average patron but it at least doesn't hurt and is in keeping with the style of advertising attempted.

We see only one thing that might have been added. Miss Glaum's name is not mentioned in the display. This may have been intentional as the advertiser may have thought that most people who remember her would do so as a star who had appeared in a number of rather unusual roles as a "vamp" and as this sort of production has gone out of style for the time being, figure that the less said about who was featured the better. We aren't sure but he is entirely right if he made these deductions.

Anyway this is a mighty good display, and one for which the artist may take full credit. We don't see a trace of any producer material used. The display was three columns by eleven inhces.

WE can't just see these ads of the New Garrick, Minneapolis, especially using all lower case letters in the name of the theatre. It certainly is different but it comes too near to be eccentric to suit us. We believe that the New Garrick might better have a nice name cut made and use it where we believe a name cut belongs in most displays, at the top of the ad.

In this two column eight inch display, a mighty fine head cut of the star has been used but it is too big for this space. A cut of this kind is utilized to best advantage on the side with the reading matter draped along, side it. This is a proof and probably had a border when finished. However, we don't think it was much improved by it.

Another Town in Oregon Bombed with Theatre Advertising

THE large size town doesn't always shelter the large size head when it comes to taking advantage of opportunities to put over something good in the show business.

Out in the apple country of Oregon, Roseburg, to be exact, is a firm of showmen who operate three theaters in rather small towns, as New York is wont to view populations of cities.

The chap with the active think-tank of this partnership of Moran-Percy Company is H. L. Percy, as may be judged by this account of how he made the incident of the visit of four aeroplanes to the town of Roseburg work to the advantage of the Antler's theater, one of the Moran-Percy houses.

The aviator who was "persuaded" to advertise for the Roseburg theatre

Just why four planes chose to pal Roseburg a visit we do not know, nor is it of importance to this story. The fact remains that they did arrive in the town, to be met by at least one person, Mr. Percy, providing a Roseburg newspaper man is not to be counted.

Mr. Percy's glad hand of welcome was, however, not one of idle curiosity, for he had an axe to grind, something most welcoming committees do have if one sifts to the bottom for the motive of their cordiality.

Under Mr. Percy's arm was a large sized bundle of posters fresh off the press of a Roseburg printing plant and in his pocket was a medium sized bundle of bills which Uncle Sam accepts as legal tender. The Antler manager lost no time in informing one of the airmen concerning his mission. He was on hand to buy, beg or bribe the Oregonian ace to distribute posters advertising Charlie Chaplin in "Sunny Side," and no such thing as "No" was to be taken for an answer.

The heralds read: "Aerogram. Charlie Chaplin at the Antlers to-night," and the newspaper man, who happened to be the city editor of the "Evening News," a Roseburg paper, not to be outdone, also had a bundle of advertising which he wanted distributed from the aeroplane.

The ace who fell for the oratory of these two gentlemen and perhaps some of the lure of the bundle described in the second part, was one Lieutenant Goodrich, who agreed, after due persuasion, to drop the bills over the side of the cockpit as he side-dipped in the flight over the town. The plane arose from the field, flew to the business section of the city and dropped the advertising material over the buildings. They were caught in the wind and distributed freely over the entire town. Grownups mingled with youngsters in chasing the posters as they sifted slowly down to the ground and it was pronounced by all to be the most original publicity stunt ever "pulled off" in Roseburg.

Stage Setting and Prologue at Grauman's for "Third Kiss"

GRAUMAN'S THEATRE, Los Angeles, known as the "Million Dollar Theatre," has become internationally famous for its stage settings and prologues prepared as added attractions in conjunction to the film features and other numbers used at this theatre each week.

The house does wonderful business, rain or shine, hot weather or cold (as it ever gets in Los Angeles), but for the week of August 4th shattered all house records except one (De Milles's "Don't Change Your Husband") with Vivian Martin in "The Third Kiss," used in conjunction with a stage setting and prologue appropriate to the picture.

It is the opinion of the Grauman management, that while the title of the Martin feature is a particularly alluring one, and that it was advertised heavily, that it was the prologue which drew such extraordinary crowds.

When the picture was booked, Mr. Grauman began to search his mind for something special to give the presentation atmosphere and also to add that personal touch for which the theatre is famous.

He hit on the idea of classic dancing as in keeping with this type of picture and so he secured the services of Linne's Classic dancers who interpreted—"Youth," "Love."

Art, Rhythm and Frivolity, garbed in Grecian raiment, upon which played a series of color effects in tune with the significance of each dance. This act was probably on a higher plane than any ever hitherto presented in a Los Angeles photoplay theatre. A colored woman, billed as the Ebon Galli-Gurci, and Helen Scolder, cellist, who had just finished an Orpheum tour, completed a program which with one exception, attracted the largest crowds ever attending the superb million dollar edifice.

The lobby of Grauman's was also given special attention for the presentation of "The Third Kiss," it being felt that owing to the title, if the eye was attracted to it, many persons would be interested from that point of view.

The title letters announcing the picture were done in white, rather more than ordinarily large and in addition "stills" showing scenes from the picture were framed in at the top of each announcement placard. The result was unusually artistic and productive of very good results.

The musical program was made appropriate to the picture, with the other numbers on the bill rounded out to give the whole show balance.

Franklin Discusses Increased Admissions

"Don't Kill the Goose Which Lays the Golden Egg" Is the Way He Epitomizes the Tendency to Boost Admissions

"IN considering the problem of increased admission prices the coming season the exhibitor must watch his step," said Harold B. Franklin, managing director, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, in the course of an interview with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. "These days when there is so much agitation against the high cost of living the public is likely to resent an unwarranted boost in admission scales at this time. The exhibitor must not be put in a position where it is likely to be felt that he is taking advantage of the great support now being given by the people. However, in certain instances, it appears necessary that prices be adjusted.

"With the increased film tax, the rising wage scales for various employes such as operators and musicians and in trying to keep pace with the high mark set in presentation the exhibitor has assumed an additional financial burden that must be offset. The additional cost of picture exploitation also enters into the problem.

"In deciding the puzzle for ourselves at Shea's Hippodrome, we have concluded that in changing our price schedules certain exceptions must be observed. In the first place we would not make it any more difficult for persons who patronize the lower price seats. The admission for the balcony has been left untouched. The prices for matinees will remain the same. In this way women and children who patronize the afternoon performances are not further burdened. The only price that will be adjusted at Shea's Hippodrome is that in the orchestra section for the evening and Sunday shows.

"Most people who purchase orchestra seats are of a type that will not resent a slight increase in that portion of the house. It has always been our policy at Shea's Hippodrome to make some visible improvements whenever a price increase has been put into effect. In this way we hope to make patrons feel that they are benefiting through the increases made.

"For the coming season we plan to increase the orchestra from 31 to 35 pieces and in addition present more elaborate novelties than in the past. This will have a tendency to improve the entire performance and everybody will reap the benefit, including the persons who have been attending matinees. This policy, it is expected, will attract additional business for the matinees.

"Only those theatres whose balance sheets show the necessity for an increase should think of making any boost in prices. Greed should not enter into the proposition, especially in these times when the high cost of living is constantly becoming a greater problem and will remain so until economic conditions are readjusted. Exhibitors must not KILL THE GOOSE THAT LAYS THE GOLDEN EGG.

"The exhibitor has the responsibility which must not be discounted. Motion pictures to most persons has become one of the staples. The picture entertainment has become part of the daily life of many thousands in every city and nothing should be done that will damage the popularity of the industry, particularly as one of the prime reasons for the success of the motion picture has been the low prices. Through a big volume of business the picture theatre has been able to furnish high grade entertainment at prices lower than the legitimate house.

"The motion picture should remain THE PEOPLE'S ENTERTAINMENT AND PRICES SHOULD BE WITHIN REACH OF THAT CLASS OF BUSINESS TO WHICH EACH THEATRE CATERS. In certain localities higher prices can be obtained and here exhibitors should not hesitate in adjusting their admissions."

Branham Still Preaching the Gospel of Good Cheer and Publicity

THE most startling newspaper advertising campaigns for motion pictures and theatre exploitation ever attempted in the South are underway in charge of Charles G. Branham of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, who operate a large number of theatres in eleven southern states. Mr. Branham not only is spreading the gospel of good cheer wherever he goes, but he is putting all pictures booked by the Lynch theatres before the public as never has been presented to them in the newspapers of this section. In all of the cities where Mr. Branham has started his advertising the newspapers have opened their columns to free publicity and as a result the entire motion picture industry in the South is being benefited by the former Minnesota boy's aggressive endeavors.

Mr. Branham is a firm believer in the newspaper as the greatest of all advertising mediums, although he uses street stuff, billboards and window displays to "put on the edges," as he calls it. He is an advocate of plenty of white space and liberal space. He believes that the exhibitor who makes it a point to tie up with a single newspaper in a town and overlook the other papers is making a big mistake. "I give 'em all a crack at it," he says. "I believe in letting the public see the name of my theatre and the title of my shows everywhere they look. The one-paper program does not fill this bill. And another thing, when one newspaper sees that they have you roped and tied they will immediately begin to cut down on the free stuff."

Another noticeable thing about the work that Mr. Branham is doing in the South is that the newspapers that have been only luke-warm regarding their Sunday picture sections are perking up and improving their pages. A number of the papers have issued splendid photoplay sections in the past few weeks, noticeably those in Memphis and Birmingham where Mr. Branham has been working. And on these pages the Branham advertisements predominate.

"More Space to Motion Pictures," Declares Editor Dolliver

FROM Battle Creek, Michigan, comes the tale of an editor who is willing and anxious to give the motion picture the space in the news columns so often denied it in cities of this class.

He is devoting more space to the photoplay than he is to sports because he has proven that more people are interested in this subject. All there is to being successful in the newspaper field is giving the public what they want. This editor has increased his subscription one-third by giving the motion picture stories. Here is what he has to say on this subject:

"More space to news of the motion picture world is my advice to all newspaper editors and business managers," declares George B. Dolliver, managing editor of the Moon-Journal, the leading newspaper of Battle Creek, Michigan. "The present day newspaper readers never miss the motion picture news, and that is why I contend that an editor should not overlook the bet."

Mr. Dolliver, who for many years has been a recognized critic of the stage, went to Battle Creek a few years ago to invest his savings in the Moon-Journal, which at that time, was the smallest daily newspaper of that city. He worked hard and his newspaper grew to be the largest and most influential there. Consequently, his idea concerning the carrying of motion picture news in the columns of newspapers should prove fair enough for other editors to read and adhere to.

Twice each week, The Moon-Journal devotes two pages exclusively to motion picture news, containing also classy cuts of popular players and advertising. Every other edition of the week carries one page of motion picture advertising and plenty of good, readable news of the business.

Of the fifteen thousand readers of The Moon-Journal, five thousand of them were gained through this feature, according to Mr. Dolliver. The entire fifteen thousand readers are boosters for the page and recently when the editor took a two weeks' vacation in northern Michigan and the newspaper lacked its usual amount of motion picture news, subscribers called in the office and telephoned to find out what was the matter.

"The people of Battle Creek like motion pictures, but they are no different from the residents of other cities," said Mr. Dolliver. "They are now supporting four of the finest motion picture houses in the state. Each theatre is packed nightly, which fact shows that unless a newspaper gives its readers plenty of motion picture news and features, it is losing one of its best bets."

"The managers of the Battle Creek theatres and I have co-operated in giving the people of the city the news," Mr. Dolliver explained. "They pay extra for their advertising and can well afford to do so. The regular advertising rate of the Moon-Journal is twenty-five cents an inch but the exhibitors here pay thirty-five. This rate enables me to make a profit on small advertisements, making it possible for me to devote more space to the reading matter.

"The narrow-minded editor who could not see any value in running motion picture news, will soon be a thing of the past. They are gradually learning that they must cater to the wants of the people. The motion picture and automobile businesses are the most important of the day and they are demanding space. I am running my daily automobile page also under a plan similar to my motion picture page.

"Motion pictures are circulation builders for newspapers. Why not boost motion pictures?" concluded Mr Dolliver.

The Fashion Show Contributed to a Big Week for Lacey

WHEN Manager Frank Lacey, of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., ran "What Every Woman Wants," he staged a fashion show to help his publicity matter along.

Having a large acquaintance among Portland's fair sex he was able to secure the services of many of the city's most popular belles and the affair proved not only a great success from the financial standpoint, but was also quite a society event. Western people go in for "clothes" despite the fact that Easterners still have the idea that women of the West wear buckskin skirts and Stetson's, and carry a raw hide riding whip and pack a six-shooter, this view having been gained perhaps from seeing so many photoplays where the Western females were dressed in this fashion.

There is proof that Portland at least has passed the sage brush era in its fashions in the accompanying photograph. These are the ladies who co-operated with Manager Lacey in his exploitation stunt. They evidently had the time of their lives, for there was no trace of gloom on their faces when the cameraman came around to secure their likenesses for the Motion Picture News.

Incidentally if Mr. Lacey has a wife, which we doubt since he was able to enlist the aid of all these beauties, we are willing to gamble that she was in bad humor all the week, the fashion show exhibited at the Majestic, and did not approve of the idea from the beginning. Women are naturally suspicious, anyway.

Aside from the little lady, all these females might easily turn any man's head, especially when dolled up, as they are in gowns that are the real thing.

Anyway, whether Mr. Lacey is susceptible to feminine charms, or whether he isn't, there being once in the while a man who is woman proof, the show was one of the best stunts as a business producer ever arranged in Portland. Incidentally when carried out with co-operative advertising with local merchants it is sure fire stuff for S. R. O. every night. The idea isn't at all new, but it is reliable.

Scenic Pond From Whose Outlet Ran Water

Manager Johnson of the "New Garrick," Minneapolis, Gives Realism to His Stage Setting by an Ingenious Water Fall

ONE of the most artistic stage settings ever used by the theatre was brought into service for the week showing of "The Lion and the Mouse," featuring Alice Joyce at the New Garrick, Minneapolis. Manager Julius K. Johnson announced that his presentation of the Charles Klein photodrama was to be an elaborate affair in every way and the thousands of film fans who packed the theatre during the engagement, despite extreme heat will undoubtedly agree that Mr. Johnson kept his advertising promises.

The New Garrick program opened with "The Woodland Fantasie" as an overture, played by the theatre's fourteen-piece orchestra under the direction of Oscar Baum. As the overture was being played the plush curtains covering the center panel on the stage parted and disclosed a scene of a small falls at the end of a small pond, at midnight. The falls trickled over some jagged rocks at the end of the pond and was shaded by three large maple trees in the foreground. As the trees stood out in bold silhouette against the background of dark blue little fireflies danced to and fro above the foamy falls. Gradually the blue lights faded out and a sun effect stole across the little pond and water and the fireflies ceased to glitter against the background. As the overture neared its completion the lights dimmed again and the fireflies resumed their dance.

The firefly effect was acquired by having a number of small electric bulbs placed on various parts of the back drop and operated by a series of keys from the regular theatre switchboard. The falls was made possible by filling a large basin with running water, cutting out a small portion of one side of the basin so that when it held natural capacity it would overflow in a forward stream. To give this overflow a natural falls effect several large stones were placed near the opening and the water was forced between them so that occasionally the streams changed direction and extended farther forward or to the side. Blue, red and green lights placed directly above and beneath the falls gave the running water an opalescent effect, which was unusually attractive.

Following the termination of the overture and stage effects the plush curtains were drawn together and parted a minute later to reveal the first film subject of the program.

Using the "Hell Cat" Title for Catch Line

MANAGER RALPH CROCKER of the Star Theatre, Elgin, Ill., revealed his showmanship during the presentation of "The Hell Cat," starring Geraldine Farrar. The Star Theatre has an entirely different class of patronage on Sundays than on week days, because Elgin people, in greater proportion than the residents of many other cities, are churchgoers. The booking of "The Hell Cat" called for a showing on Sunday. Mr. Crocker realizes that this was a picture which would appeal to his week-day crowd more than his Sunday audience, but he was not discouraged and used every possible means of attracting his regular patrons, confident that they would be satisfied if he could get them into the theatre. He concentrated his efforts on the lobby and the front of the house by using artistically painted signs and photographs of the players. But it was across the front of the building that he placed the most startling advertising. From side wall to side wall and eight feet deep, he stretched a canvas banner bearing the name of the attraction and the words in equally large type, "It's a Heller."

Lobby Display the Small Theatre's Best Advertising Medium

WHAT will be the fate of small theatres, known in many cities as motion picture landmarks, whose owners devoted the best years of their lives to the advancement of the silent art and who now seem unable to bear the pressure of a merciless "Capital," that has turned "holes-in-the-walls" into sparkling dream palaces?

Of intense interest to the world of showmen, irrespective of prominence, is the answer to the foregoing question—not written as the opinion of an exhibitor; neither is it an assertion stretched from an observation; nor is it an overdrawn account of a chance experience.

It is the actual, cold-blooded, dollars-and-cents answer of J. R. Nolan, manager of the Bijou Dream Theatre, Cleveland, seating exactly 350 persons and located in the heart of that city's most thriving business district—a theatre which some exhibitors have been dooming for failure but which has always kept its head above water despite the added tonnage of the fifty or more persons who usually stand in the rear, just ahead of the "S. R. O." sign.

The small theatre can hold on indefinitely as long as it is under the direction of a live-wire exhibitor ever awake to good attractions at the right prices, watchful of the progressive march of exploitation and careful to keep his house ever inviting.

But how?

The use of handbills, once thought to be a helpful method of exploitation for an uptown theatre, is practically impossible. Many times the distribution is deemed offensive to pedestrians.

Newspaper advertising for the small uptown theatre is another bugaboo. The rates are almost prohibitive in the light of what returns could be expected from a house which only seats 350 persons. Big space in the newspapers would mean the arousing of interest but it would not be good business on the part of the Bijou Dream.

Billboards are wonderful advertising for a theatre that can justify the expenditure. But a theatre seating 350 people could hardly be expected to do much billboard advertising. Consequently the Bijou Dream does not.

There is one method of exploitation which is the "life" of the small theatre and that is—

THE LOBBY DISPLAY.

Thousands of persons daily pass the Bijou Dream. The lobby arouses their interest in a manner far more effective than either newspaper or billboard exploitation. Big smashes that extend across the entire width of the lobby characterizes the presentation of the Bijou Dream. Tasty, attractive, artistically correct, this method of exploitation enables the Bijou Dream to compete with any other Cleveland theatre in the matter of arousing the attention of pedestrians.

"We find that by building up attractive lobby displays we have the edge on theatres which rely on other methods of drawing patrons," said Mr. Nolan. "In the matter of newspapers we are of course eclipsed by the bigger houses. In fact we DEPEND upon our lobby displays.

"The small theatre is a money-maker when it's managed right. If the exhibitor forgets about the thousand and one disadvantages he must work under, and keeps his mind strictly upon getting good attractions, presenting them at the right prices and boosted by good lobby smashes, if he takes as much pride in his small theatre as he would in a million-dollar house, and if he holds down expense, there's not much else to it. There's nothing else to do then but count your wealth."

Rivoli Plays "Home Talent" and Gets Away with It

FOR those managers who are disparaging the "home talent" stunt as applied to the picture theatre, there is a nice little example of carrying out this idea at the Rivoli theatre this week in a special cartoon comedy being shown.

If you can use something local for extra business in New York and get away with it, it is a safe bet that no town is too large for this form of getting individuality into a show.

Here is what the Rivoli is pulling at every performance and the audiences sit with their mouths wide open, figuratively speaking, calling it the most entertaining bit of the show. The reason is that the stunt adds a personal touch. They see the people who are being talked about in the film titles and Mr. Manne as he stands at his instruments.

As the second number on the bill, a cartoon comedy, "Sound Your A," is shown. On the program is the announcement that the scenario, which means the plot and business was originated by Max Manne, the solo trap drummer of the Rivoli orchestra. This is enough to give the offering added interest, but the idea of "home talent" has been given more attention.

The cartoon shows the redoubtable comedians, "Mutt and Jeff," trying out for a vaudeville act in a theatre, one a singer and the other conducting the orchestra. Mutt sings the song and Jeff conducts. With Jeff wielding the baton, special music suggesting the "agonizing" notes the singer is sending forth is used. Then comes a place where the music has driven all the audience and musicians from the house. Mutt then announces that he will sing the song again if "it kills him" and states that the Rivoli orchestra will accompany him.

Jeff begins with the baton. So well have the movements of the film been synchronized with the action of the music that so far as time is concerned the film figure does conduct the orchestration. The film story is closed with the statement that the thespians have been fired. They refuse to go, whereupon Mr. Manne rises from his seat and, with megaphone in hand through which he shouts "Get off the stage," and like lines, "chases" the actors from the stage, this effect being accomplished by drawing the light from the screen beginning from the side from which Mr. Manne appears with his "get-the-hook" act.

Now in telling this sounds most commonplace and "listens" as if it would be a decided farce with a metropolitan audience. The idea of the stunt isn't so startling nor is the business manufactured for the comedians extraordinary, but the "home talent" part is what puts it over. The night the writer was present words of appreciation could be heard on every side after the cartoon comedy was finished. It went over with a bang and is going to bring the Rivoli much added business because people will go out and talk about it as a novelty and that will arouse the curiosity of other people and they will come to see the stunt. Of course this wouldn't go over again, at least right away unless Mr. Manne could evolve something especially clever which would be enough better than the present film idea to show it as an "improvement on the original patent." However there are plenty of little ideas like this which can be utilized for extra business and be made more of a drawing card than even the feature picture. Novelty is what people in America want. Give it to them and they will make a path to your theatre if it be in the desert.

However the greatest lesson in this stunt is that no town is too big to pull the "home talent stuff." Hook on to every good little idea which will bring some local person into the limelight. It will never fail. Recently we told you how a theatre in Seattle, a good big town Seattle is, used some local bathing girls after Mack Sennett's beauties had played to better business than was hoped for, and put over "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" for nearly as much more.

It was the girls which got the business for the Seattle theatre, and in the same way a local idea carried out will get business for you, the same as Mr. Manne's stunt will get added patronage for the Rivoli. If we could have found a photograph to illustrate this story, we would have given it space as the best exploitation stunt of the week, for reduced to its essentials it is an exploitation idea.

A Novel Lobby Display at a Nominal Expense

A SUCCESSFUL showman and exhibitor has two wide fields of working ideas with which to fill his theatre—namely, by playing on the inquisitiveness of the masses and by suggesting an atmosphere through the medium of his lobby.

It is with unusual pleasure that we show a photograph of a lobby display which can be built at an expense in proportion to the amount of increased business which may be expected from the use of this form of exploitation and which can be adapted by the exhibitor in the smaller cities.

There is a feeling among exhibitors in the smaller houses that the lobby display is something which they are unable to avail themselves of because of the expense. Oftentimes this is true, in other instances striking effects may be had at the outlay of a very small sum of money.

One of the best examples of the latter case is shown in the lobby display used by John Danz, manager of the Colonial theatre in Seattle, Wash. Seattle has a few hot days even though it is a bit North of the hotter regions of this country. Not a great amount of difficulty in keeping up the usual patronage was had because of the heat, but when a picture relative to the North was exhibited the occasion arose whereby he had a double excuse for an attractive lobby suggesting the Far North and cool weather.

The entire entrance was covered with a cardboard backing on which was painted a forest of the North amid a deep snow. The box office was covered with a similar backing in order to bring out the effect of a small cabin in the wilderness. This was done in various shades of black and white and the general scheme was most effective. The head of the principal character wearing a fur hat was featured on the lobby stands. Mr. Danz received many compliments on his unusual lobby and the returns more than repaid for his plans.

Crescent Theatre Originates "Kick Cards"

LOEW'S Crescent theatre, in New Orleans, which makes a leader of its motion pictures, has been getting good results from distribution of several thousand cards asking the question, "What's Wrong With the Show?" among the patrons. These are better known, of course, as "Kick Cards," and this is the first time they have been used in New Orleans. Patrons are invited to "boost" or "knock" the show, as it impresses them, and the management promises to make the changes the majority demands. These cards, to the number of 2,000,000, are being distributed in all the theatres controlled by Marcus Loew and when all are received and tabulated by the management, the future policy of the theatres is to be determined by the majority of expressed desires, the management announces.

Western New York Protests Against War Tax

FROM Fredonia, N. Y., comes a letter from the Opera House, stating that the residents of this city are beginning to resent the war tax on their movie admissions and are gladly signing petitions which are to be sent to their district congressman, asking for the repeal of the measure. The opera house is fathering the movement, having had a slip printed on which is the protest and a blank line for the patron's signature. The slips are collected in at the box office, and mailed to Washington.

Charles H. Landers, who is the manager of the theatre, is authority for the statement that people sign almost without exception.

The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

This Idea Is Imported, But Cloakey Who Originated It Believes in Reciprocity

THE winters may be long in Canada, especially in Alberta, but when the summers do come they bring regular weather and the automobile is not the least of the inventions of man to take the mind of the tired business man and others from the gloomy side of life.

So it is that Edmonton, Canada, one of the principal cities of Alberta, has its quota of cars, and so it was that Manager O. D. Cloakley of the Allen theatre, one of the chain of Allen houses now totaling nearly to the half century mark, conceived the idea of tieing up with five automobile concerns on a exploitation scheme whereby the automobile dealers were to do most of the work and he was to furnish the scenic properties to advertice Wallace Reid in "The Roaring Road."

This is the first example we are able to record of what the Allen houses may expect in novel advertising and it is good enough, so we have jumped it over several other good stories to the heading which implies that we consider it the prize idea of the week.

By looking at the illustration accompanying, the reader may judge for himself whether this stunt is entitled to first place. By it is evidenced a method of co-operation with local automobile interests whereby an exhibitor may obtain far more street advertising than if he depended on his own exploitation powers.

"The Roaring Road" is an automobile story and at the Allen theatre at Edmonton, Alta., the opportunity to get some good publicity was through this fact and was not neglected.

Manager O. D. Cloakey enlisted the aid of local dealers in auto accessories and five young men were costumed as drivers of racing cars and supplied with tires which bore in the center advertising of the various concerns. On their breasts and backs each one of the young men carried a sign announcing that the picture was being shown at the Allen.

Cut-outs of a racing car and others in silhouette were used in front of the house, with a cut-out from the six sheet for the center.

Mr. Cook, who manages the Strand

Milwaukee Veteran Manager Makes a Change

WHEN Frank Cook, for the past ten years, or since it has been built, manager of the Princess theatre in Milwaukee, leaves that position to take charge of the Strand theatre, the Saxe interest will lose Milwaukee's veteran photoplay manager.

Mr. Cook dates his connection with the silent drama back to the days of the fire engines and dogs jumping over the fence. His first connection with the Saxe Brothers was when they were operating the "Hales Tours of the World" in Milwaukee. Prior to that Mr. Cook was in charge of a mechanical show, known as 'A Day in the Alps," really the predecessor of the motion pictures.

He has the honor of having been in charge of the first feature picture ever presented in Milwaukee, or perhaps the middle west, when he presented "The Passion Play" at the Saxe Lyric theatre in Milwaukee for nineteen weeks.

Following this he became manager of Saxe Orpheum theatre and then took charge of the Princess theatre.

During the heyday of the General Film Company, Milwaukee, Cook was head backer for all of the six Saxe theatres in Milwaukee. He has been with the Saxe Brothers for fifteen years and in that time has seen them grow from a struggling one-story show to one of the biggest theatrical interests in the middle west.

The Strand theatre, of which he takes charge, is one of Milwaukee's leading photoplay houses, having a seating capacity of eighteen hundred seats. A number of very important changes in the management of the Strand theatre are contemplated by Mr. Cook.

Still Another Exhibitor Uses Aeroplane for Exploitation

FARGO Fair Week not only proved a prosperous period for Samuel Cornish, owner and manager of the Strand Theatre, but gave additional proof why fellow-exhibitors in the Dakotas have come to regard him as one of the most resourceful and enterprising showmen in the Northwest. Cornish's newest exploit that made all competitors gasp took place last Sunday night, or rather, 12.01 A. M., on Monday, and took the form of a special midnight performance of "Sahara," to satisfy the amusement appetites of Fargoans and thousands of visitors hungering for some diversion in the Sunday-closing town.

Mr. Cornish's method of announcing his special midnight presentation of "Sahara" was ingenious, to say the least. The owner of the Strand reached his decision to give an extra performance just twenty-four hours before the event. Too late to catch the Sunday newspapers for a half-page advertising flash on the event, Mr. Cornish bethought himself of another plan that would not only serve his purpose as well as newspaper advertising would, but one that would give the natives and the visiting population something to talk about.

Enlisting the aid of a dozen or more aviators who had been thrilling the populace with loop-the-loops and nose dives during Fair Week, Mr. Cornish had all Fargo bombed with cutouts and small pictures of Louise Glaum, the ammunition being backed with the announcement of the special performance of "Sahara" at the Strand.

The special event proved a tremendous success, Mr. Cornish voicing the regret that his house could seat but one-third of the crowd that clamored for admission. Monday's Fargo papers gave Mr. Cornish's novel stunt high praise in their news columns.

The Woolworth-Proctor (Mt. Vernon, N. Y.) tie-up on "Fires of Faith," which proved of mutual advantage

Another Example of Cooperative Advertising with Local Stores

TIEING up with local merchants in the exploitation of a feature picture which presents opportunities along this line is again effectively demonstrated by John F. Lamp of Proctor's Mt. Vernon theatre, one of the finest and most commodious neighborhood houses in the east. Lamp runs a feature picture every week, together with vaudeville, but the celluloid portion of the bill is always featured above the rest. His house seats about twenty-two hundred and he gives two performances a day, one matinee and one evening. All seats are reserved and the prices run on a big scale, especially for the night performances.

When Lamp booked "Fires of Faith" he realized that it presented a picture the theme of which is one of the most popular in the world, that is the glorification of the work of the Salvation Army. As a consequence he decided to exploit it in a bigger and better fashion than he had awarded to any previous picture.

Displays were arranged with many of the local merchants on the main thoroughfare of the city. A whole window full of the song, "Fires of Faith," was given to the Woolworth store, together with cards announcing that it would be rendered during the performance of the picture. A florist shop at the intersection of two of the busiest streets in the city displayed one of the large paintings furnished to advertise the picture, while even a store carrying women's wearing apparel carried a special display. Mr. Lamp made a special effort to get this, as he realized that the feminine citizens of Mt. Vernon would surely notice and be attracted by such a display.

Another important tie-up instituted by Mr. Lamp included a local baker's shop. The baker agreed to cook an extra supply of doughnuts every day and place them in his window, together with advertisements of the picture. This tie-up proved particularly good, inasmuch as the doughnut has become a symbol that almost everyone associates with the Salvation Army. Mr. Lamp agreed to buy the doughnuts which remained at the end of the day, and these he placed on a table in the foyer of the theatre and distributed them free of charge for a week before the opening of "Fires of Faith."

Not only did the merchants agree to co-operate with Lamp along the lines outlined above, but he also induced them to go in for a half-page advertisement in the Mt. Vernon Argus. Seven local merchants took space around the theatre copy and tied up their product in some manner with the name of the feature. This is the first time the stunt had been worked in Mt. Vernon and besides attracting attention it also drew comment from the paper itself.

In all publicity he was careful to insert the line that the picture was not shown in connection with any drive and that no collections for money would be taken.

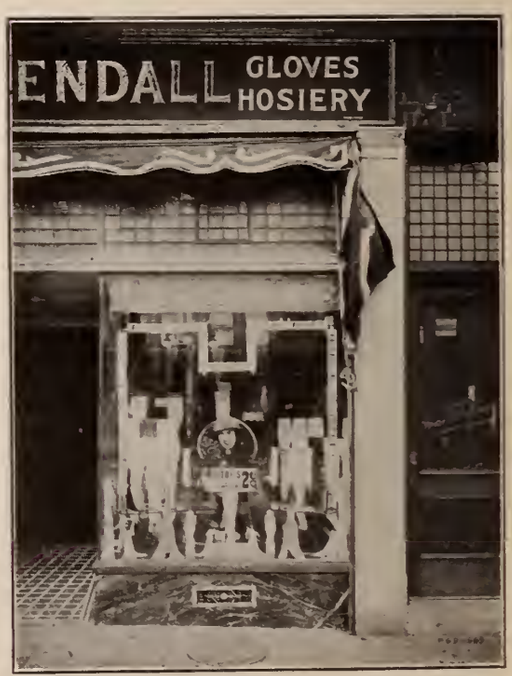
The accompanying reproductions of Mr. Lamp's advertisements and store window displays gives a good idea of the manner in which Mt. Vernon was plastered with "Fires of Faith" advertising. In particular it should be noted that the picture was played up above all the vaudeville acts. I was "Fires of Faith" that drew the people to the theatre and it was the picture they came to see.

Gives Prize for Healthiest Baby

TO assist in boosting business in "Human Desire" Manager Theodore L. Hays arranged for a prize baby contest and built up a good week's business by so doing.

With the Bannon Bros. department store and the St. Paul newspapers Mr. Hays arranged for the presentation of a number of prizes to the healthiest babies of the city, the winners to be selected by leading city physicians, who would present the prizes to the parents on the stage of the New Garrick the last night of the showing. Manager Hays also arranged with the Camera Art Co. of St. Paul to have slides made of each entrant and to run these slides each evening during the showing.

The local newspapers took up the idea and gave the contest wide publicity and also worked to obtain entries for the contest. The contest brought increased business to the theatre each day during the presentation and created considerable comment among the photoplay going public of the city. On the Saturday evening that the prizes were awarded the theatre was filled to capacity during the supper hour and by eighty thirty the crowd seeking admission to the show house was so large that the theatre's spacious lobby was not sufficiently large enough to shelter all of those who held tickets. Over two hundred slides of the city's healthiest young citizens were shown on the screen at the theatre between first and second evening performances on the final night of the run.



In as much as the Bannon Company furnished the prizes, the Camera Art the slides and the newspapers the publicity which made the stunt a big success, Mr. Hays feels that this idea is well worth giving a trial in other parts of the country.

Using a Lobby for Advance Advertising

Nazimova's New Feature Is Given Place on the Electric Sign Prior to Showing Date

MERRILL THEATRE, Milwaukee, believes in giving its bigger productions plenty of advance advertising, realizing that something out of the ordinary is worthy of extra attention.

"The Brat" is booked first run at this house and a clever lobby display has been arranged and is now being shown for this picture.

At the end of a long lobby, over the entrance to the theatre proper, is placed a display for advance advertising of Nazimova consisting of a five-foot oil painting of the star, and an electric sign printing out the name of Nazimova and of the production, all against a black curtain.

The portrait, a full length of Nazimova in the character of "The Brat," is a cut-out from a poster done over in oils to lend it extra lustre. A spotlight is thrown on the entire sign. The words "Nazimova in 'The Brat'" are an electric display. The words "Starting Sunday, August 31st," are white cardboard cut-outs, thrown in sharp relief against the black background by the white beam from the spotlight.

A special trailer film making much the same announcement was thrown on the screen. The figure on the film was the same as that on the poster, with the words: "The Merrill announces Nazimova in 'The Brat,' the triumph of her screen career, for showing starting August 31."

Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, Utilizes Many Billboard Stands

THE Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, has secured extensive billboard space and has begun this form of advertising on a big scale.

Exceptionally unique twenty-four sheet posters will be placed on one hundred boards in Los Angeles, announcing in a twelve-sheet center piece, circular in form, "The Miracle Man." At the right and left on six sheets will be "I will see you in ten days." The number of days will be changed daily until the second, when both sides will be covered with "I will see you at the Kinema theatre tomorrow" Similar advertising will be carried in newspapers.

Uses Motor Trucks to Exploit Picture

IRVING ROSE, managing director of the Pastime theatre, Union Hill, N. J., engineered an unusual exploitation campaign on "Sahara," his fall opening attraction.

Mr. Rose, who endeared himself to Union Hill picture lovers last year during the Jersey street car strike by carrying his patrons to the theatre in motor trucks, used the same vehicles for three days prior to the opening of the Pastime and all during the run of "Sahara." Mr. Rose had two trucks parading around town, both depicting scenes from the C. Gardiner Sullivan story with one of Union Hill's fairest girls, looking not unlike Louise Glaum, playing the star's part of Mignon.

Four days' capacity business was Mr. Rose's reward for his big stunt on "Sahara."

Free Tickets to Local Merchants Aids in Advertising Campaign

HOW the co-operation of local merchants can be used to help exhibitors solve the hot weather problem during the summer months by bringing about an increase in theatre attendance has just been successfully demonstrated by Martin F. Gruenewald, enterprising manager of the Washington theatre at Richmond, Ind.

Mr. Gruenewald is one of those human dynamos who spends the greater part of a twenty-four-day studying, planning and working out various schemes to aid him in increasing the patronage of his theatre. That these tactics are sure to result in success has been demonstrated by him on more than one occasion.

His latest "stunt," which he used in connection with the presentation of "Sunnyside," was that of arranging with some of the leading merchants of Richmond to give away free tickets for the Chaplin picture with purchases exceeding a certain amount.

This plan not only made these merchants special boosters for the theatre, but also aided Mr. Gruenewald materially in his advertising campaign. He induced those who were to give away the free tickets to link their store advertising with the advertising of the picture, and, after doing this, he framed a series of three-quarter page ads in the Richmond papers that were the topic of backfence conversation for several days.

"You see the mercury was just about to jump out the top of the thermometers at Richmond at the time I was scheduled to run 'Sunnyside,'" said Mr. Gruenewald, "and I knew the intense heat would have a tendency to keep many from seeing the picture unless I could put over something to stimulate interest. I knew that if I could get a good attendance the first day I would have no trouble thereafter.

He sold the various merchants who agreed to co-operate with him a certain number of tickets at a price below the usual admission charged at the box-office of the theatre, and the merchants in turn gave the tickets away to the customers after a certain amount of merchandise was purchased.

The tickets were good at the theatre at all the matinees, with the exception of the one on Sunday afternoon, when accompanied by a paid admission. Mr. Gruenewald made this requirement, he said, in order to eliminate the cheap appearance that usually accompanies some of the "free ticket" schemes.

After arranging the scheme with the local merchants, Mr. Gruenewald told the advertising solicitors of the Richmond papers about his plan, and they in turn attended to the work of getting the merchants to link their advertisements with those of the theatre.

The theatre advertising was used for the center of the three-quarter page display, and the merchants' ads were used as the border.

Each of the smaller advertisements of the merchants contained the information that tickets to the Chaplin film were to be given away at the respective stores, but did not divulge any of the details of the plan.

The announcement naturally aroused a certain amount of curiosity, and when the stores opened the day after the advertisements appeared, customers filed inside to find out how to get the free tickets. As a result the merchants sold an increased amount of merchandise, and Gruenewald had to employ a few extra ticket takers to help handle the crowds at the theatre.

How New York Stages the Show

DOROTHY GISH has spoiled the logic of an argument we had determined to inflict on you under this heading. After seeing two or three shows at the Broadway houses, a task a hard hearted editor wishes on us each Sunday, we decided if the feature at the Rivoli wasn't better than those we had seen, which to our hardboiled idea aren't going to knock them off their seats, we would begin this column with "It is always darkest before dawn," and "There is always a lull before the storm," and then elucidate by making some observations on a pertinent subject which would present an alibi for the features presented this week at the Broadway theatres.

However, as we said, Miss Gish has put a crimp in our story. The picture at the Rivoli is not just good. It is about the best farce comedy picture released in many a day. Miss Gish is delightful, the titles are clever enough to put even an ordinary story over, and the plot itself is so original in its basic idea that the production could not fail even badly produced, so there you are.

We are at a loss for an idea on which to enlarge to fill the space set in wide measure each week under this heading, all on account of a girl.

Then, too, the Rivoli came through with a novelty stunt in the nature of a cartoon comedy which we are going to use for a special article. All of which proves that it is very bad business to count your chickens before they are hatched.

Rialto Theatre

THE RIALTO overture, another composition by Verdi, however one not especially known, is "Sicilian Vespers," written for the French stage and first produced in Paris in 1855. Verdi chose the massacre of the French by the Sicilians for the subject of this composition and there is much suggestive of such a somber theme in the overture's music. The libretto was by Scribe and Duveyrier. The composition won temporary success in Paris but in Italy it failed to prove popular even though a new libretto was constructed and the title of the production changed. The number, however, is still in concert repertoire and as played by the Rivoli orchestra, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld conducting, meets with the approval of the audience even if the music is not of the character best suited to popular consumption. There is, however, a peculiar appeal in certain portions of the overture, especially the string score. The number is rendered without stage settings and with varying flood lights.

The Rialto Magazine opens with International's views of General Pershing's final goodby to the troops in France, with Kinograms following with added views of the Prince of Wales in Halifax, Canada. Incidentally it might not be out of place to state that the Prince appears, from the many intimate views the camera has secured, to be a most likeable, human young man, who without so much pomp and circumstance attendant whenever his photograph is taken, might pass for any ordinary young American. Either he does not go in for the "King stuff" or else he is saving the haughty air for later life.

The next strip is Gaumont's showing U. S. troops who fought in the Argonne Forest, now employed cutting the big trees of the West Coast. This is followed by the Judge Rumhauser cartoon, this week entitled "Should A Woman Tell," the story having to do with the redoubtable Judge fighting a duel over a lady fair.

The current events to follow the cartoon is, International's scenes at Warsaw showing the formation of the new Polish Republic and this strip is succeeded by a special Kinograms subject showing Bela Kun, the Bolshevik leader lately discredited when in power at Budapest.

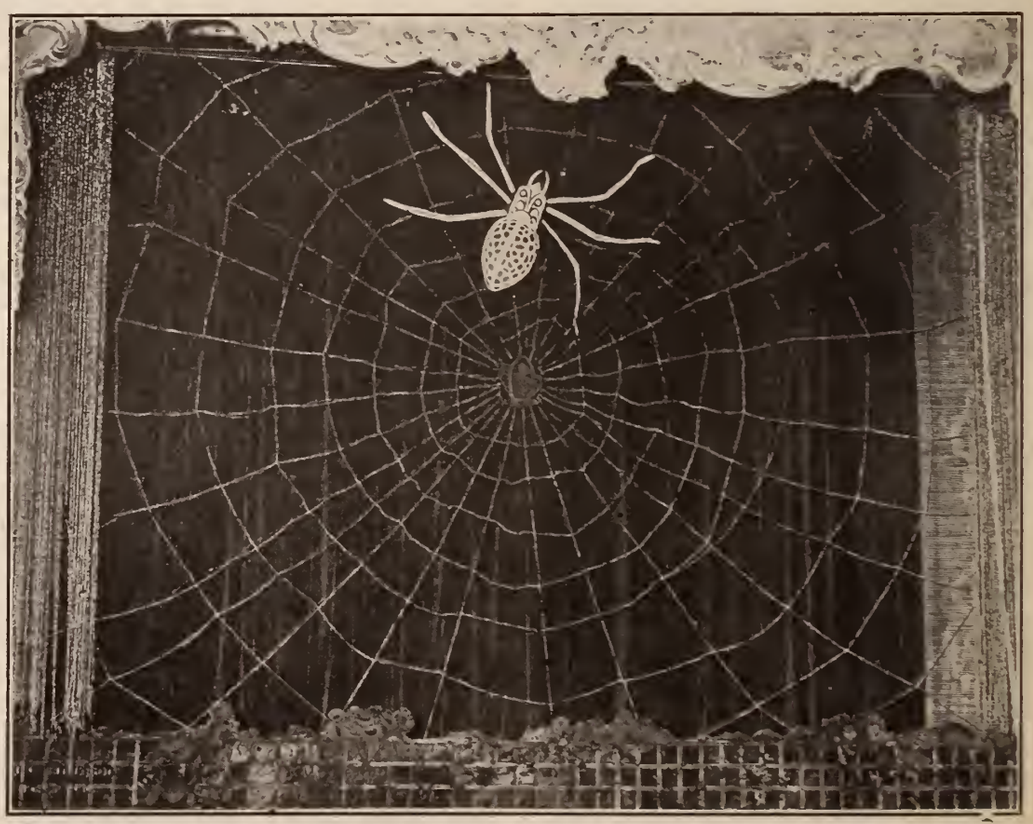
Italy's famous cavalry, a library subject, showing these wonderful horsemen performing feats of daring on their steeds, and unnecessarily it would seem endangering the life and limb of the riders and ruining good horseflesh, was next projected with Pathe's views of the recent great fireworks celebration in Paris over the Peace Treaty closing the reel.

This last strip was made especially effective by the use of a scarlet flood over the picture for a greater portion of the display of the fireworks and later changed to purple which gave the bursting fire balls a weird effect. In fact this use of the colored lights made the strip a thing of beauty whereas projected in its natural film tinting, as it was at one of the other theatres, it passed for an indiscriminate patch work of flashes on the screen, barely interesting.

The vocal number is "Mother My Dear," sung by James Harrod, a tenor of excellent voice and wide range. This number was given with a green flood and the singer within an amber spot.

The feature is Tom Moore in "Heartsease," an adaptation of Charles Klein's English play of the some name which concerns the stolen opera of an Irish nobleman. The continuity was developed by Alfred A. Bingham with Harry Beaumont directing. The play was not the best of screen material, especially for American audiences, and will hardly measure up to some of Tom Moore's other productions. The cast in support of the star contains some very well known names including Helen Chadwick, Alec B. Francis, Herbert Pryor and Rosemary Theby.

The Rialto instrumental number is by the orchestra, a rendition of Rudolph Friml's "Some Time." The music is played with the orchestra flooded in scarlet.



The comedy is "Her First Kiss," a Fox slap stick offering of the usual sort, much chasing and action and very little plot.

The organ solo is played by Arthur Depew and is the triumphal march from "Naaman."

Next week's feature is Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow," an adaptation of the stage play "Billeted." The offering is a comedy and is stated to provide Miss Burke with the best vehicle she has had in some time.

Rivoli Theatre

THERE is a nice balance to the program at the Rivoli this week beginning with the overture, billed "Hungarian Comedy," being an adaptation of the compositions of Albert Kelor-Bela, whose name in private life was Albert Von Keler. Keler-Bela was a Hungarian who first was a law student, then a farmer and only took up music in 1845. He soon became famous as a composer of dance music and the overture offering used by the Rivoli reflects his genius in compositions of this sort. For a time Keler-Bela conducted the famous Gungl orchestra in Berlin and later succeeded the great Lanner in Vienna. His last post was conductor of the Kur orchestra in

Stage setting for "The Blue Bonnet" at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles. When lighted in colored floods this setting was very attractive

Wiesbaden. Keler-Bela's compositions are naturally Hungarian in flavor and this overture has a particularly melodious rhythm with the dance tiempo largely in evidence. There is also a spirit of comedy suggested throughout the rendition.

The overture is given without attempt at stage effects, and much of the rendition is on the strings with that peculiar harmony of Venetian music noticeable. The number is one well suited for popular consumption and is received with rounds of applause. Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the orchestra, is conducting the rendition.

The second offering is a novelty in a special "Mutt and Jeff" comedy cartoon. Max Maune, solo trap drummer of the Rivoli orchestra, wrote the scenario and originated the special effects and adapted the music which is used during its projection. The stunt we have deemed of enough importance to justify a special story on another page. The title of the cartoon is "Sound Your A." As may be deduced from this it shows the versatile comedians as musicians.

Number three on the bill is a violin solo rendered by Alberto Bachman, "Romance." It is given with a stage setting that adds much to the number. The screen space of the stage is draped in white muslin, with a window showing faintly at one side. A window seat and a lamp provide a relief from stage bareness. The singer is attired in evening dress and performs a number which impresses with its technique.

The Rivoli Pictorial opens with Pathe's views of U. S. cavalry, the 8th, chasing the Mexican bandits and is succeeded by an International strip showing "Ould Sod" babies who win prizes at Chicago.

Gaumont then contributes with a long piece, a supplement of the Photoplay Magazine, of a Western Rodeo, showing such favorite screen stars as Fairbanks and Fred Stone, views of the Talmadges at their home at Media, Pa., with Irving Berlin and Mrs. John Emerson (nee Anita Loos) calling. Pathe again secures space for a strip of a giant aeroplane which will carry 26 passengers preparing for flight at Minneapolis, with views of a new motor truck which will provide a means of transportation on both highways and steel rails, in operation at El Centro, Cal., with a Pathe view of fishing scenes next. Pathe also follows with views of London under martial law as a result of strikes and food rioting, with International coming in with horse racing at Philadelphia and Pershing being filmed in France for the next two strips, which finish the reel.

The vocal solo, the Gipsy love song from "The Fortune Teller," is rendered by Emanuel List, Rivoli basso profundo. The same set as that used in the violin solo is also used for this number, except that white drapery is flooded in scarlet with a green flood in a circle centered in the canvas and the singer in an amber spot. The effect therefore was that of a new set.

The feature picture is "Nobody Home," with Dorothy Gish in the leading role. The offering is from an original story and continuity by Lois Zellner with the superstition of a young girl used for a great deal of fun making with weddings and the visit of burglars brought in to provide a background for ingenious business and clever titles. The direction is Elmer Clifford's with some prominent names in the supporting cast, including that of George Fawcett and Ralph Graves.

For the instrumental number played weekly by the orchestra, "The Blue Danube," familiar to all ears, is used, but with an added attraction, that of two young ladies, Misses Margaret Leereaas and Dorothy Lee, waltzing and performing the aesthetic dances to its time. The dancers were attired in the white dresses cut in the usual style and of the usual material for aesthetic dances and were given a special stage setting for their number by Art Director John Wenger.

As the waltz number is begun by the orchestra the curtains are parted showing an indistinguishable setting very dully lighted. On the girls' appearance the lights are gradually brightened, showing a scenic sky partially clouded. The flood used for this was green at first to be gradually lightened and tinted as the dance progressed. From the flys scenic foliage is lowered slowly and as the scene is given further light from the floods, the dim forms of trees are seen in perspective. With the flood on in complete brilliancy, the effect is identical with that secured when dances of this kind are given on a lawn and beneath trees, which in fact is where these dances are usually presented.

The dancers were extremely graceful, and their steps presented an unusual variation. The comedy is the second of the Paramount-Drew productions, featuring Mrs. Sidney Drew and John Cumberland and is entitled "A Sisterly Scheme." The offering is of the refined type photographed largely in exteriors in and about a summer hotel at Lake George. It impressed the writer as not being up to the standard of the first picture but still very entertaining and a welcome change from the slapstick releases.

The organ solo is the War March of the Priests from "Athalie."

The feature offering for next week is "The Valley of the Giants," with Wallace Reid starred.

Strand Theatre

THE STRAND program this week opens with an overture from "Orpheus," which has been called "The grandfather of grand opera," it being oldest work of its kind to hold its place on the stage, its first presentation occurring over one hundred and fifty years ago. It has also been termed "Gluck's incomparable masterpiece" and many musicians claim a purely classical musical drama. The music is exquisite in its delicacy and grace and readily assimilated by the layman. The composition is by Offenbach and has long been a favorite in European musical centers but has not been sung in America since 1892 and then with indifferent success. That, however, was not that the opera is not suited to American audiences, but rather through the fact that its production was during an illfated season for all grand opera.

The story concerns the Greek poet Orpheus, who grieves over the death of his wife and finally declares that he will enter the realms of Pluto and search for her among the spirits of the departed. The Goddess of Love appears and promises to aid him on condition that when he has found Eurydice he will return to the earth without once looking at her.

The Strand orchestra under the conduction of Carl Edouarde is giving the composition colorful rendition and the overture meets with great approval. The number is given with the house dark and the orchestra in an amber flood with the strings and harp predominating. There is a variety of tempo that at times almost suggests a medley and at other times the volume decreases to the notes of a violin solo.

The Strand topical review, the product of all the news weekly producers edited by Jack Eaton, opens with Pathe's showing of the newly arrived U. S. submarine chasers in New York harbor from their race from Cuba, with views also by Pathe, of London under martial law as a result of the strikes and shopraiding in the British capital.

These strips are followed by a Pathe Novagraph showing the analysis of motion as applied to the swimmer with the Topics of the Day compiled by The Literary Digest next and a Pathe colorful scenic entitled "Picturesque France" following.

International's first piece in the reel, "Intimate Views of General Pershing" taken in France, closed the reel.

The educational subject is "The Passing of 'The Crow'" (Indian), an intimate view of the habits of this tribe and showing them in many of their tribal games and dances.

The first vocal number is by Miss Eldora Stanford, the Strand soprano, rendering "Open Thou My Love, Thy Blue Eyes" and "At Dawning."

This number is succeeded by the feature picture, "Burglar by Proxy," ostensibly with Jack Pickford starred but really with its author and director Jack Dillon in the best part, that of the real burglar. The offering is a melodramatic farce. Gloria Hope has the leading woman's role.

The fifth number of the "Toreador" song from "Carmen" rendered by Carlo Ferretti, late of the Milan Opera House and a baritone of excellent voice. Mr. Ferretti has been appearing at the Academy of Music, where his engagement was entirely successful.

The instrumental number is a 'cello solo by Herman Severly of the Strand orchestra. The subject is "Cantilena," by Goltermann.

The comedy is "The Lion in the House," a farcical subject with the Universal lion again coming in for much of the Thespian honors.

The organ solo is "Martha," played by Herbert Sisson and John Hammond alternating.

Next week's feature picture is "The Hoodlum," Mary Pickford's latest release and one which, according to advance information, is quite up to the standard of her "Daddy Long Legs."

Academy of Music

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC is giving the usual tthree hours' show this week, with a double bill from soup to nuts.

The overture is as usual divided into two parts, the famous "Peer Gynt" suite by Grieg being the full orchestra number with "The Rosary" rendered by the strings.

The selections from "Peer Gynt" are "The Morning "Anitra's Dance" and "In the Hall of the Storm King," presenting a wide range of melody and tempo.

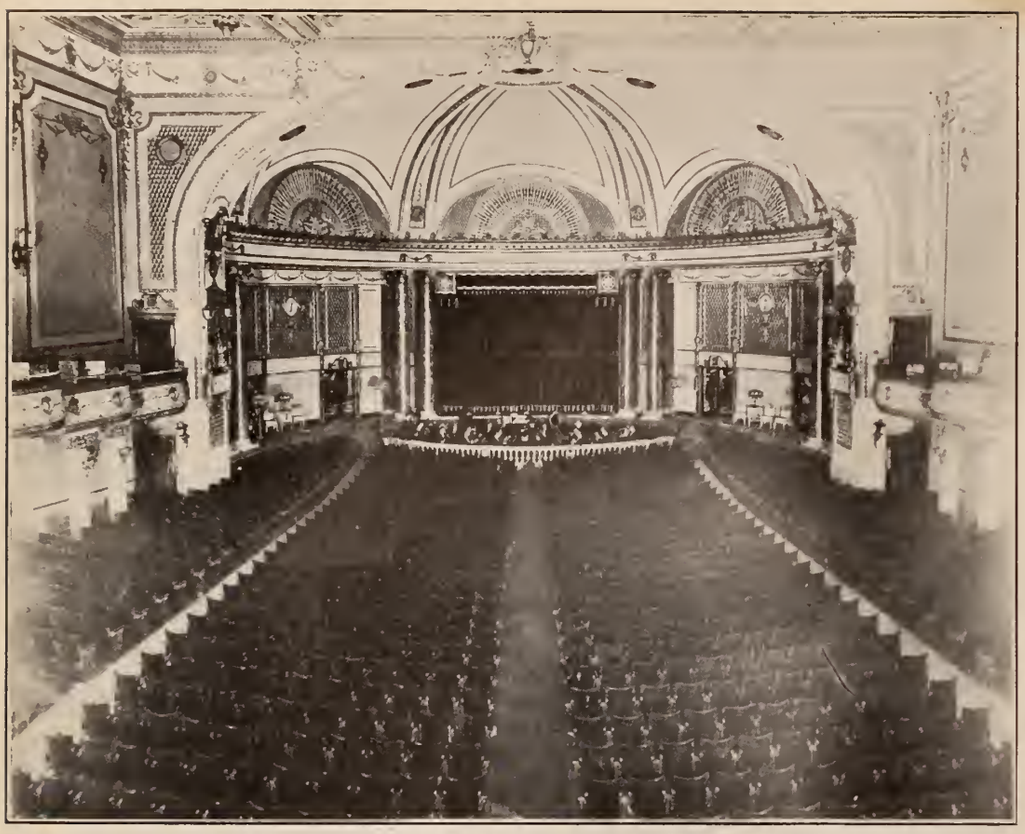
As is suggested by the titles the first number is a harmonious composition with the strings predominating, the second is of the livelier variety but none the less melodious, and the third is played with the brasses full up and has almost the swing of a march.

The string orchestra selection is a familiar one by Nevin, "The Rosary." It is played in good taste and fits in nicely with the other selections.

The same stage setting as last week, with the lightings somewhat different, is being used this week. It is very effective.

The International News Weekly opens with views of Yankee Heroes being decorated by French notables in New York City, which is followed by views of Mexicans being searched for liquor when they cross the border at El Paso, Texas.

The third strip is the "Ould Sod" baby show at Chicago, with the winners shown, including two fat jolly babies with no trace of the "map of Ireland" yet on their faces, with fishing scenes at Bellingham, Washington, used as the next piece.



Views from the sale of army food in New York are next, with some wonderful shots of the National Park, the Battle of Gettysburg field, taken from an aeroplane succeeding this strip. The Prince of Wales at Halifax is next shown with the "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon, entitled "Hard Lions," showing the two comedians lion hunting and lion running, closing the reel.

The first feature is the Bayard Veiller play, "The Thirteenth Chair," as adapted for the screen. Creighton Hale is offered as the featured player. This number is followed by a Big V comedy, "Between the Acts," a slap stick offering in two reels.

The second instrumental number is selections from "The Royal Vagabond" by both brass and strings and Victor Herbert's "When You're Away" by the strings. The second feature is "Nugget Nell," the Dorothy Gish burlesque of Western life.

A Harold Lloyd comedy, "His Big Chief," a typical Lloyd picture, closes the film numbers and is succeeded by the organ solo "Semper Fidelis," the Catholic anthem familiar to all.

Offered for next week is "The Love Burglar," with Jack Pickford, and "The Boomerang," with Henry B. Walthall.

Branham Predicts that Newspaper Men Will Graduate into Pictures

"THE successful motion picture man of tomorrow will be the fellow who is the successful newspaper man of today."

Such is the somewhat startling statement of Charles G. Branham, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises of Atlanta, who gained a national reputation as a showman while manager of the Strand Theatre in Minneapolis and the Majestic in Detroit.

"Figure it from any angle and you cannot help but see that it's a newspaper man's game," he said in a recent interview to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS correspondent in Birmingham, Ala. "When it comes to selecting a story that will go over, don't the same rules apply in the picture industry as apply in the editorial room? Absolutely. The only difference is we play it on the front page or the feature section of the paper and in the theatre we feature it on the silversheet. I soon discovered after taking up motion picture publicity work that the very same things that people like to read about make the biggest hits on the screen. This is one reason why the news reels are becoming more popular every day, and even now are leading features of the photoplay programs in the smaller towns—a thing that some folks thought would never come to pass.

"The day that the 'cub' takes up the police run on a newspaper he is taught the fundamentals of "putting it over." This is hammered into him every day thereafter until he dies, and then his own publication expects that he will postpone the hour of his death until after the opposition paper has gone to press, thus "putting it over" for the last time. Isn't it quite logical that the trained newspaper man is the best subject for this great game of ours?

"If I were hiring a lot of young fellows to learn the motion picture business I would first comb the newspaper offices of our metropolitan cities. I'll bet I could mobilize the greatest army of recruits for exhibitors, exploitation experts and salesmen in the country and within a year I would have the finest little standing army that this industry ever prominent exhibitor in the country is newspaper experience or a live-wire press agent recruited from the newspaper field, who is working his brains night and day to make his superior's theatre pay. I can name a score of young men who within the past year have left the newspaper game to enter the motion picture industry, and everyone of them is going to give a good account of himself because he has the stuff in him that this industry needs."

Perhaps no one in the entire motion picture business is as keenly interested in the advancement of motion picture advertising and publicity as is Mr. Branham. Four years ago he predicted that every big exchange would have its own press man who would assist the exhibitors of the territory to put over their shows. He even went so far as to suggest this to a leading producing and distributing organization, but the answer was, "We would like to, but we haven't got the money." A year later a rival distributing organization, it now develops, actually planned to carry out Mr. Branham's idea and had arranged to offer S. Barret McCormick of Indianapolis, and Mr. Branham the management of this department. Again the fear of spending too much money in untried fields entered into the scheme, however, and the plans did not materialize.

Today things are different. Advertising and publicity are being featured in the selling campaigns of all big productions and every important exchange in the country is obtaining the services of a first-class exploitation man. The next few months will see the biggest advertising campaigns ever attempted since pictures first appeared. Mr. Branham has every license to say, "I told you so," without provoking even a smile. And the leading newspapers of the country have been tapped for most of these new exploitation experts.

Mr. Branham continues to keep right in touch with his beloved work. He is with a concern that believes implicitly in newspaper publicity and when it has a big campaign to put on or a tough town to pull out of the rut Branham is sent to the firing line. Charlie has discovered a lot of new things about the Southland and has pulled off a number of worth-while stunts in small towns as well as the bigger places. He has promised the NEWS to tell its readers about them in the next few weeks.

New Des Moines Theatre Ranks with the Best

THE accompanying cuts show exterior and interior views of the new Des Moines theatre, one of the A. H. Blank houses recently described in the NEWS. Because the photographs were lacking at the time the story of this theatre, which ranks with the best in the world, was written we are giving the subject attention a second time.

The Des Moines theatre is being operated by the General Amusement Company of Des Moines, a corporation which also controls the destinies of the Rialto and Strand, Omaha, Neb., Garden, Casino and Family, Devenport, Iowa, and houses in Marchaltown and Mason City, Iowa.

Mr. A. H. Blank is secretary and treasurer of the company and the active head of the concern. Mr. Blank is one of the best known film men of the Middle West. He holds the First National franchise for Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska and also is interested in numerous state rights subjects. Exchanges are operated under his direction at Omaha, Des Moines and Kansas City.

The new theatre, which was opened to the public July 10, is not only one of the most beautiful and artistic in the country but is also one of the largest. It seats 1500 persons on the first floor alone and is the last word in every detail for comfort and convenience.

That the new house will prove popular goes without saying. The Blank programs are noted for their quality and few of the good pictures made escape the General Amusement Company theatres. Des Moines is one of the best of the Middle West cities and as the new theatre has an excellent location besides being the finest in the city, it will be classed as the leading photoplay house from the beginning.

Effective Display for "Crimson Gardenia"

DURING the showing of "The Crimson Gardenia," at the Columbia Theatre, Pittsburgh, the manager devised an effective exploitation display. The white enamel on the photograph frames, ticket booth and exterior woodwork was covered with gardenias, as if in bloom, with here and there a crimson gardenia. Altogether the effect was very attractive and artistic. All the attaches of the theatre, including the manager, wore a crimson gardenia bouttonaire.

Tribute to Dintenfass Organization

When the United States Government wants something done well, it proceeds to engage the services of the best experts it can obtain. Consequently, its recent action in selecting the photographers and electricians of his studios in Jacksonville, for a particularly important and difficult task, is regarded by Mr. Dintenfass as something in the nature of a citation for merit.

About two weeks ago the United States Shipping Board launched a new 7000-ton steel ship sideways at Jacksonville, Florida. As every one knows the customary method of launching ships is stern foremost. The launching of a large ship sideways is a very difficult and risky undertaking, and was resorted to in this instance only because conditions peculiar to the shipyard made it advisable.

Owing to the uniqueness of the performance, the shipping board desired motion pictures taken of the entire operation in all its details, in order that other shipyards might be able to see how it was accomplished. It was essential that only the most expert motion picture photographers should be employed, to avoid failure, as a retake would be out of the question. The shipping board authorities canvassed the field and selected the staff of Mark M. Dintenfass for the job.

An Industrial on Making Milk Products

A staff of directors and cameramen has been sent to Harriman, N. Y., by Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal Educational and Industrial Departments, to photograph a story in which the production of milk products, the manufacture of cream separators, and other operations included in the management of the modern dairy, are to be featured. Mr. Levey said his department had received several requests for an educational series of this sort.

F. P.---Lasky Inaugurates Season

Two Big Plays Will Open the Trade Year; Aug. 31 Release

INAUGURATING its season of 1919-20 under the policy of Selective Booking, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release on August 31 the first two Paramount Artcraft pictures to be distributed under the new plan. These are Elsie Ferguson in "The Witness for the Defense" and Wallace Reid in "The Valley of the Giants."

"The Witness for the Defense," it is stated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is one of the most elaborate as well as one of the most dramatic productions in which Miss Ferguson has yet been starred. George Fitzmaurice, the director, and Ouida Bergere, who wrote the scenario, collaborated with the result that the picture is said to be fully worthy of the honor accorded it in being selected to open the new Paramount-Artcraft year.

Based upon the novel and play of the same name which was produced a few seasons ago with marked success with Maragret Anglin in the leading role, "The Witness for the Defense" is said to present a most interesting and thrilling story.

Permeating the entire play is the atmosphere of India—an atmosphere filled with mystery and tragedy—and this atmosphere is claimed to be so ingeniously and completely reflected from the screen as to be fairly felt, it is said, by everybody who sees the picture. In Miss Ferguson's support are Vernon Steel, Warner Oland, who has appeared with Irene Castle, Pearl White and other well-known stars; and Wyndham Standing, who has been Miss Ferguson's leading man in several of her recent Artcraft pictures.

"The Valley of the Giants," in which Wallace Reid is starred, is a picturization of Peter B. Kyne's story which attracted wide attention when published in the Red Book. Marion Fairfax wrote the scenario and James Cruze directed. The scenes are laid in the great Redwood forest of California and the natural grandeur of the surroundings, it is said, leaves nothing to be desired in the matter of backgrounds, a situation of which Frank Urson, the cameraman, is declared to have taken the fullest advantage. The story is said to be thrilling in the extreme, and in the cast are seen Grace Darmond, who was specially engaged to play the leading feminine role; Kay Laurel, noted beauty of Ziegfeld's Follies; William Brunton, Charles Ogle, Ralph Lewis, Hart Hoxie, Noah Beery, Guy Oliver, W. H. Brown, Richard Cummings and Ogden Crane.

Both these pictures were produced with all the care in preparation of scenario, selection of cast, direction and attention to the minutest detail which, according to Famous Players-Lasky, that Corporation purposes shall characterize all the Paramount-Artcraft releases under the Selective Booking Plan.

Select Opens Branch in England

Other Offices Abroad May Open After an Investigation

SELECT Pictures Corporation will establish next month a branch in England to be known as Select Pictures, Ltd. This branch will be conducted by Maxwell Milder as president and Miss Edith Kotch as treasurer.

Mr. Miller has been for several years manager of the Select branch in Philadelphia and Miss Kotch has been secretary to Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Select Pictures Corporation. They will sail for England, September 6th on the Celtic.

The first work of the president and treasurer of the London corporation will be confined to a general investigation of conditions in London and England, after which it is probable that several branch offices will be established in the important cities of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

As soon as headquarters are established in London, the office will arrange for a series of private showings on every Selznick subject which is available at that time. Prints of the first three Olive Thomas attractions, "Upstairs and Down," "The Spite Bride" and "The Glorious Lady" will be carried to London by the ship on which Mr. Milder and Miss Kotch make their trip. Prints will also be taken of Elaine Hammerstein's first picture, "The Country Cousin," Eugene O'Brien's first picture, "The Perfect Lover," and Elsie Janis' forthcoming production, "A Regular Girl." One of the first steps after arriving in London will be the engagement of an exploitation man, and as soon as the London office is opened, the work of exploiting Selznick pictures in the European capital will then commence.

Max Milder, president of Select Pictures, Ltd., will remain permanently in London, and as the various branches in other cities of Great Britain are established he will automatically assume the general management of them. Miss Kotch will also remain in London indefinitely, but as soon as the affairs of the office will permit, she will proceed to Paris for the purpose of investigating the motion picture market in France. If the result of Miss Kotch's investigation shows the practicability of the establishment of an office in France, one will be opened. It may develop, however, that it is more practical to dispose of the rights to Selznick Pictures than to establish separate headquarters, and if this is the case, steps will at once be made to open negotiations with prominent distributors in Paris.

The appointment of Mr. Milder to the important post of President of Select Pictures, Ltd., in London is one which will receive instant approval from his many friends in this country. Mr. Milder has distinguished himself as a capable executive, and the manner in which he has handled the affairs of the Philadelphia office left no doubt in the mind of Mr. Selznick as to who should merit the appointment of the London position.

The promotion of Miss Kotch and Mr. Milder are still further illustrations of Mr. Selznick's policy of advancement from the ranks.

Noteworthy Goldwyn Anniversary

Week of Sept. 8-14 Is Set; Big Prospects for Third Year

THE history of motion pictures offers no more startling growth than that of Goldwyn Pictures, now a twenty-million-dollar corporation which enters on its third year as a producing and distributing organization week of September 8-14. The anniversary will be celebrated by Samuel Goldwyn and his associates at the Culver City Studios in California, by the executives and their forces at the home office in New York, and by the branch managers and salesmen in the twenty-two exchanges through which Goldwyn Pictures are circulated.

For several weeks past, the sales forces have been preparing for the greatest concentrated sales drive ever attempted. It will cover a period of six days, during which the Goldwyn gospel, "Don't Book Goldwyn Pictures Until You Have Seen Them," will be spread broadcast through the country. It is intended that the first eight Goldwyn Pictures chosen to launch the new season shall be brought to the attention of every exhibitor.

The productions being boosted under the slogan, "This Is a Goldwyn Week," are Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside," Tom Moore in "Lord and Lady Algy," Geraldine Farrar in "The World and Its Woman," Will Rogers in "Almost a Husband," Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential," Rupert Hughes' "The Cup of Fury," Mabel Normand in "Empty Paradise," and Pauline Frederick in "Bonds of Love."

The Goldwyn Corporation will celebrate many more anniversaries, but it is unlikely that any will have the momentous significance of the anniversary of 1919, coming at the end of a year in which the resources and scope of the organization have been tremendously increased, and ushering in a new year that promises so much.

Scarcely a week of the past season has failed to bring some important improvement in the Goldwyn organization, either in the producing or distributing branches, but the high marks of progress are found in great acquisitions, the benefits of which will be felt by exhibitors in years to come. Samuel Goldwyn has succeeded in winning the co-operation of creative brains, also of the foremost theatrical producers in the country.

One of the first moves in carrying out the policy of expansion, was the purchase of the Culver City Studios in California, which offer the finest producing facilities in the world.

Then, only a few weeks ago, Mr. Goldwyn closed a far-reaching alliance by bringing the Shuberts, A. H. Woods, and the Selwyns into the Goldwyn Corporation, and securing the motion picture rights to the inexhaustible number of plays controlled by these leaders in the theatrical field.

Goldwyn's latest triumph in acquiring the finest screen material that the market has to offer, was in securing the unique output of the Bray Studios, including the Pictograph, to be known as the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, and other single-reel subjects that are being planned for release in the near future.

Metro to Make "Tess of the D'Urbervilles"

FINIS FOX, of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario staff, has completed a photodramatic adaptation of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," the work of the English novelist and poet, Thomas Hardy, preparatory to an all-star cast production of that work by Screen Classics, Inc., to be distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Reports from the Pacific Coast studios indicate that Alice Lake will play Tess in this big picturization of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," surrounded by a cast of well known screen players.

Miss Lake has just completed her work before the camera in "Lombardi, Ltd.", with Bert Lytell as the star in the Screen Classics presentation of that Oliver Morosco stage success by the Hattons.

Veteran Player Stays with F. P.-Lasky

Theodore Roberts recently celebrated the close of his fifth year in motion pictures and started out under a new contract with Famous Players-Lasky.

"I trust I will be able to sign and carry out many more such contracts," the veteran actor said, "for I have no ambition to go back to the spoken drama—no such ambition whatsoever."

Roberts soon will have rounded out forty-years as an actor, for he made his debut on the stage May 1, 1880.

Vita to Send a Company Abroad

History to Be Repeated When Expedition Sets Forth

ARRANGEMENTS are reported to be quietly under way at the Vitagraph headquarters to send a director, a famous star and some prominent supporting players abroad in the near future. The expedition, it is understood, will make a protracted stay in England and France, making big films.

It is expected that the company will make important trips also to other parts of Europe, gathering scenes of hisoric places which will be woven into the productions. Only the best known of the Vitagraph players, tested in the particular types of roles to be portrayed, will make the trip with the star and director, it is understood. The smaller supporting parts, and in fact a few of the important ones, will be filled by screen players who have made a name for themselves in Europe, but who have seldom been seen on the screen in this country.

The campaign altogether will be high-calibred. Vitagraph contemplates procuring as a result a series of productions that will work an innovation in the geographical character of productions for the American market.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, who is personally engineering the venture, believes that it will greatly influence a turning point which is occurring now within the public mind of this country.

The return of millions of our boys from overseas is causing "the gaze of Americans to turn more and more toward Europe," Mr. Smith is reported to have said in a recent interview, "and a desire is growing steadily stronger for true visions of the old world. The American public has been drawn by historical events of the recent past closer to Europe than ever before. Its interest in the affairs and conditions unfolding across the sea is intensified by political ties that are steadily binding the hemispheres. It is therefore a fulfilment of this interest that will occur in Vitagraph's campaign to bring the old world across the sea to us on this side through the miracle of big films."

The Vitagraph report makes a point of the fact that the forthcoming productions will not necessarily be tinged with the melancholy facts of war. They will not be war subjects, but rather films that visualize post-war romance, and films that reclaim the romance of forgotten days that passed before the red blaze struck Europe.

The names of the director, star and other members of the expedition are being withheld for the time being with the strictest secrecy. Probably the announcement of full facts and details will not be issued until the voyagers are ready to leave.

It is expected that Vitagraph will produce, among other subjects, a number of picturizations of old world masterpieces. These films will have a new quality and significance, impossible of attainment in a foreign subject made on this side of the water.

It will be recalled that Vitagraph sent a company of motion picture players on a tour of the world in 1912-13, producing nearly a score of pictures in various countries of Europe and other continents.

Work Begun on a New Universal Serial

With Kathleen O'Connor, who played opposite James J. Corbett in "The Midnight Man," as the star, the production of a serial version of Randall Parish's well known mystery novel, "The Strange Case of Cavendish," has been launched at Universal City.

"The Strange Case of Cavendish" will appear in serial form in eighteen episodes of two reels each.

Jack Perrin will be seen in the principal masculine role. Kathleen O'Connor will be seen as Stella Donovan, an intrepid newspaper reporter who enjoys personally solving baffling mysteries.

A supporting cast includes such well known players as Barney Sherry; Robert Walker, Gertrude Astor, and Henry Barrows.

Jack Wells, director of numerous Universal productions, will have charge of the filming of this story.

The publicity staff of Realart Pictures Corporation was still further increased when George Landy and Miss Edna S. Michaels joined the newly organized company the past week.

Newest Screen Supplement

Varied Subjects Depicted in Photoplay Magazine Film by Educational

AN announcement of the contents of the eighth "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement," to be released September 1, is made by Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America.

A peep at the Talmadge sisters—Norma, Constance and Natalie, with their mother—is the unquestioned headline feature of the new issue. The Long Island home of this famous screenland family provides a picturesque setting for a visit with the daughters. The arrival of distinguished "company"—and close-ups of noma's pet Pekinese—are variations of the impromptu program.

Fred Stone, in pictures taken at the Cheyenne Roundup, proves that he is more than just a moving picture Westerner. He does cowboy tricks that some of the old-timers haven't thought of, and shows the exciting operation of "bull-dogging" a steer, which is not as hard on the steer as it is on the "dogger."

Then comes pictures of the filming of "Soldiers of Fortune"—on location with Director Allen Dwan, and a cast which includes such favorites as Anna Q. Nillson, Pauline Starke, Wallace Beery, and others. Interesting views of "location chow" prove that there is no "officers' mess" in the movie game, and that stars and extras fare alike.

Making a Mary MacLaren photoplay at the Universal studio introduces this player in scenes around the lot, on the stages, in her dressing-room, and in that sacred sanctum, the cutting room, where well-behaved stars are allowed to inspect the film after it is turned over by the cameraman.

The concluding scenes were pictured on the most photographed corner in the world—Hollywood Boulevard—one quiet Sunday morning, with Director James Cruze and a thousand "extras" engaged in filming the mob scene for Wallace Reid's production of "The Lottery Man." Wally himself, Marguerite Snow, and Houdini, of handcuff fame, are among the spectators watching the angry mob at their nefarious work.

Louise Lester has been engaged by Allan Dwan for an important role in "The Luck of the Irish," which he is now producing for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Plans for Advertisers' Convention

President Harry Levey, of the Screen Advertisers' Association, is continuing his elaborate plans for the entertainment of the members of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World when they meet in convention at New Orleans, September 21 to 25. Besides showing motion pictures which have been selected as typical of the advanced stage to which screen advertising has progressed, he announced this week that a number of unique exhibits of other types would be arranged.

Vita. Feature Finished

"The Gray Towers Mystery," made under the working title of "Fate in the Balance," has been completed at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio. John W. Noble, who recently joined the staff of Vitagraph directors, was fortunate in having splendid weather for the outside locations and took the final scenes much sooner than was expected. This was particularly gratifying to Gladys Leslie, the star, as it permits her taking a well earned vacation.

"The Gray Towers Mystery" affords Miss Leslie her second opportunity to show what she could do with a dramatic role.

Wide Preparations Assured Paramount Week's Success

Selling Idea Like Unto Special Sale at Store; Advertising Big Part of Campaign

BY the time most exhibitors come to this article on the printed page of Motion Picture News, Paramount's long heralded "National Paramount Artcraft Week" will be a reality.

For weeks preparations have been made for this extra drive which is to net profits for the releasing corporation and the exhibitors throughout the country.

This gigantic selling idea of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation may be likened to the special sale of a department store. Famous Players-Lasky has had prints enough to take care of this added business or at least would have gotten them if it hadn't, just the same as the department store has had goods to sell day after day but like the department store it recognizes that extra selling effort, extra advertising and extra attention must be given anything if sales are to be boosted above their normal level. There is the same thought in the special sale as there is in that "In Union there is Strength" saying. You concentrate on one thing, bending all your efforts to accomplish a specific purpose.

There can be no doubt but that Paramount Artcraft Week is going to be a success. It was last year and this year it has the added value of extra effort and a better organization to put the idea over.

Naturally the big gun of this special sale, which is really what Paramount Artcraft Week means, is the advertising. This begins with the home office on Fifth Avenue and reaches out over the country through thousands of mediums until hardly a home in the United States but that will be informed numberless times during the period of August 31 to September 6, that Paramount Artcraft Week is being celebrated and that they are invited to participate.

In the larger cities full and half page ads. are now on the stones ready to carry their message of the big Paramount event to millions of readers. In the smaller towns smaller displays will be used but of sufficient size to attract every reader's attention.

These displays carry the names of the theatres who have tied up for the week with their programs listed. The campaign is all financed by Famous Players-Lasky and represents an expenditure of many thousands of dollars which, however, will come rolling back into the tills of the releasing organization from the increased business which the exchanges will do for the entire week.

According to the Famous Players officials not a print in any exchange will be lying on the shelf for the seven days of the Paramount Artcraft Week.

Advertising the big event has not been confined to newspapers. Rather the newspaper advertising is the final shot. For weeks other forms of publicity, much of it free, has been placed before the public eye from thousands of theatres, and through other mediums.

In the issue of August 23 of The Saturday Evening Post, a full page was devoted to this subject. This page used as it's eye attraction basis the illustration of a September calendar leaf torn off after the first week, which has been a sort of a trademark adopted and used in all the advertising which has gone out on Paramount Artcraft Week.

For some time exhibitors have been showing special one, six and twenty-four sheets on the subject, all of which have been furnished them without charge. A trailer bearing the titles, "A Drive for Better Motion Pictures," a slogan adopted for the campaign and "Beginning the Greatest Motion Picture Season in the History of the Screen," have been added to the prints going out from each exchange. Two special slides bearing practically the same message have also been available.

In addition to these accessories which have been largely used by all exhibitors other matter has been presented them. Electros for newspaper use, calendar cuts in three sizes, post cards for the towns of under ten thousand population, where newspaper space was not purchased and other matters of good advertising value. To encourage the exhibitor to go the limit in exploiting the week, a special offer was made whereby with the regular publicity matter purchased for the features a theatre was running during this week, free material equaling in cost at regular prices of one-third of the amount purchased, was included. This had a tendency to compel the exhibitor to buy liberally in order to get a liberal amount of the free accessories.

Coming just at this time many exhibitors who in the past would not have been able to avail themselves of the opportunity to cash in on the event, have been induced to enter into the plan and in so doing Paramount's sales will without doubt reach a new high water mark.

The week really is more important than would appear at first glance. Sept. 1 marks the beginning of a new era in motion picture releasing ideas. It would seem that Paramount-Artcraft has stolen a march on all other producers by monopolizing a majority of the theatres for a full week. It was a psychological time for the drive and it may indicate the aggressiveness with which Famous Players-Lasky Company is going after the exhibitor's business under the new regime. Salesmen and sales methods have always been a deciding factor in determining success in other lines of endeavor. It may be possible it will be the deciding factor in securing bookings under the open market plan that is all but upon us.—J. S. Dickerson.

Governors Endorse "The World Aflame"

Two of the greatest industrial States in New England, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, have placed official approval on "The World Aflame." This stamp comes quickly following the indorsement given to the picture in Washington, where it was recently shown at a private view in the theatre in the Department of the Interior Building before an audience comprising Cabinet officials, chiefs from the Department of the Interior, Commerce and Labor, members of the House Committee on Labor, members of the Senate Committee on Immigration, and Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, and Messrs. Stone and Lee of the Railway Brotherhoods, who were at the Capital conferring with the President on the high cost of living.

Fay Tincher in a Real Rough Role

With another special cast lined up, headed by Fay Tincher, Al E. Christie has started production of another of his two-reel special comedies, entitled "Wild and Western." The plot is as rough as the name. In the opening scenes which present Fay Tincher as an athletic instructor in an eastern Y. W. C. A., she is knocked out once and delivers a few knockout blows herself.

In the special cast are Fay Tincher, Earle Rodney, Eddie Barry, Neal Burns and Zelletta Du For.

Plan Book to Give Real Aid

World Believes They Have It in the One for "When Bearcat Went Dry"

A RADICAL departure from the general run of plan or press books for special feature pictures has been made by World Pictures for its forthcoming release of "When Bearcat Went Dry." This company, feeling that it had an unusual picture and that the exhibitors who should book it, were entitled to every aid possible to cash in to the fullest degree, determined that the highest degree of showmanship should be exercised in the creation of a guide for the man who runs the theatre and shows this feature.

The exhibitor is placed in the position of an advance agent for an attraction that is coming to his town. The show is booked for a date ten days from the time the agent arrives. Just what a real live wire advance agent would do to promote interest in his attraction and what accessories in the way of advertising material would he have and how he would utilize them is clearly brought out in this plan book so that the verest novice can easily understand.

To begin with in this plan book of "When Bearcat Went Dry" the exhibitor is told just what kind of an attraction he has.

On the second page comes the suggestions that have to do with obtaining the cooperation of the department stores and stationery shops of his town who handle the novel from which the picture was made. Just how to go about getting this cooperation is set forth in plain terms. Along this line of procedure the exhibitor is shown how to use the newspapers to stimulate interest.

The third and fourth pages are devoted entirely to so-called stunts. These are all inexpensive and can be "pulled" in any town, however, small. On these pages are several pertinent paragraphs that have to do with illustrating the fundamental principles of successful showmanship.

Fifth and Sixth pages illustrate the styles of billboard and lobby display paper, from a twenty-four sheet stand down to a one sheet.

The seventh and eighth pages have to do with accessories of advertising as well as little schemes that have to do with creating the right sort of atmosphere in your theatre so that the audience will be in a receptive mood for the feature.

On the following page the music cues arranged by S. M. Berg are given in full with music that can be obtained in any town.

The following pages are devoted to reading notices prepared for newspaper consumption.

After an absence of almost a year from motion pictures, Alexander Gaden, one of the best known leading men of the screen, is returning as leading man for Doris Kenyon in the Louis Joseph Vance feature, "The Bandbox," which is being produced by Deitrich-Bock, Inc.

"Man Who Stayed Home" a Money-Getter

"The Man Who Stayed at Home," the new big Screen Classics, Inc., production released by Metro, proved to be a clean-up attraction for J. J. Cavanaugh, directing manager of the Piedmont Opera House, Piedmont, W. Va. Mr. Cavanaugh played "The Man Who Stayed at Home," and in presenting it did some energetic and clever advertising. He emphasized two features of the production first, that it is a big mystery story, crammed with thrills, intrigue and heroism, and, second, that it is interpreted by an all-star cast, headed by King Baggot and Claire Whitney.

As in the case of the Lyric theatre in Asbury Park recently, "The Man Who Stayed at Home" was a real money-getter. The Lyric did capacity business for three days and on the second day of the run, Tuesday, smashed all box office records for the house.

Script Agencies Unite

The consolidation of the Bess Meredyth Agency with the Manuscript Sales Department of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation is one of the announcements of the week in motion picture circles.

Miss Ann Scott, for some time associated with Miss Meredyth, joins the Palmer organization. Mrs. Kate Corbaley continues as head of the Manuscript Sales Department.

Chas. Logue Prominent in Fischer Features

By the organization of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., Charles A. Logue, well-known writer of screen material, comes into a new position of prominence in the industry. Mr. Logue is an incorporator with B. A. Rolfe and A. H. Fischer of the new company and besides filling the office of secretary will adapt for picturization the Robert W. Chambers series of stories secured by the firm as well as write original material. His time and services will be devoted exclusively to the duties of his new affiliation.

Prior to breaking into motion pictures as an author, Mr. Logue was a newspaper man and magazine writer.

Mr. Logue is the adaptor of "The Shining Band," by Robert W. Chambers, now being picturized under the title of "The American Lovers," as the first of the Robert W. Chambers series presented by B. A. Rolfe through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

Fitzmaurice Progresses on "Counterfeit"

Director George Fitzmaurice, working at the New York studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has completed all the interior scenes for Elsie Ferguson's new Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Counterfeit," and is now awaiting settled weather to proceed with the exteriors.

Added Robertson-Cole Contracts

Demand by First Run Theatres Still Increasing

"CONTRACTS for Robertson-Cole features secured by Exhibitors' Mutual during the past few months presage the showing of Robertson-Cole pictures in the majority of the first class houses during the coming year," declared an official of the Robertson-Cole organization. "Statistics received from Exhibitors' Mutual will serve to bear out that statement.

"In Rochester, N. Y., nineteen theatres out of twenty-six are booking Robertson-Cole pictures through Exhibitors' Mutual. Forty-four of the fifty-nine theatres in Buffalo, N. Y., are showing our productions, and in Erie, Pa., eleven out of a possible sixteen are likewise booking through Exhibitors' Mutual. In Cleveland, twenty-five new accounts, including eight first-run houses, have been opened in four weeks.

"The Waldorf Theatre, Akron, O., booked for the first time a Hayakawa picture, "The Man Beneath," last week. It was continued for the full week and on the strength of the first two nights' business. Manager Barbias contracted for all the Hayakawa pictures for the coming year.

"The Pagan God" played to capacity in two first-run houses in Columbus, the Metropolitan and the Grand, running for the entire week.

"Reports like these give a bare idea of what may be expected with a complete program of Superior Pictures.

"Eight months ago, Robertson-Cole pictures were not booked in a single first-run house. The release of Martin Johnson's pictures, "Cannibals of the South Sea Islands," proved the entering wedge. Those remarkable pictures were shown in the Rialto, one of New York's largest theatres, and in the majority of the bigger houses throughout the country. From that day on the number of first-run houses booking Robertson-Cole pictures through Exhibitors' Mutual has gradually increased. The high standard of productions maintained throughout the summer, brought about so many new contracts that the coming year will see Robertson-Cole features showing in at least two first-run houses in every city.

"Contracts already received that show as many as eight and ten first-run houses in some of the larger cities will run the Robertson-Cole program of Superior Pictures.

"The high standard of our Superior Pictures, 'The Man Who Turned White,' 'The Pagan God,' and 'The Other Half,' have given the exhibitors a confidence that is reflected in the increased bookings.

"We guarantee them fifty-two pictures measuring up to the same standard and we feel assured our increased efforts to maintain this high standard will mean more money for the exhibitor.

"The open and star series booking is a policy proving especially attractive to exhibitors and has resulted in many contracts for special series. Almost five thousand theatres will show the new Hayakawa pictures and this number will without doubt be greatly increased before the first is released.

"The superior quality of the two H. B. Warner pictures, 'The Man Who Turned White' and 'The Pagan God,' has led to bookings for the six others he will be presented by Jesse D. Hampton, Bessie Barriscale, William Desmond, Beatriz Michelena, and Edith Storey, are established business getters."

Plan Handling "Distribution"

State Rights Buyers Will Soon Have Opportunity to Secure This Picture

Rarely has there been greater unanimity of critical and public opinion than in the praise given Helen Keller's picture "Deliverance," which has settled down for a long run at the Lyric theatre and arrangements for the general release of which are now being made.

Here is one case in which the trade press, the photoplay experts on the daily newspapers, and the dramatic critics of the latter have united in giving commendation.

States right buyers and exhibitors soon will have the opportunity of securing this film. A sales plan containing several innovations will be announced next week. Twenty-five prints soon will be playing in as many large cities, each one exploited is such a way as to create an enormous demand for the picture in its territory.

A number of novel and effective advertising link ups are now being perfected, so that each class to whom "Deliverance" appeals will be reached direct. Nothing in this regard will be left to chance. Each class will be made to see just why "Deliverance" is its especial picture and why it cannot afford to miss it.

Exploitation material which will make this result certain is now being prepared for use of exhibitors. This will be quite different in character from what the local manager is in the habit of handling, and therefore should come as a surprise to patrons, and so be doubly effective.

Exhibitors Mutual Announces Shifts

S. J. Rollo, director of sales and exchanges of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, announces the following changes in the field force:

Fred G. Sliter, branch manager at Pittsburgh, and formerly branch manager in New York City, has been promoted to the position of special field representative covering eastern and central western territory.

C. W. Moore, assistant manager at Pittsburgh, has been appointed acting manager of that exchange, vice Mr. Sliter.

W. L. Parker, formerly on the sales force of the Cincinnati and Washington exchanges, has been transferred to the executive offices.

M. L. Mintz, one of the best known exchange managers in Chicago, has been appointed manager of the Chicago branch.

Mutual-Chaplins in Best Houses

THE Chaplin Classics, the new edition de luxe of the twelve Mutual-Chaplin comedies are being booked for pre-release presentation in the largest and finest theatres in the country, according to an annoucemet from Exhibitors Mutual which will distribute them.

The most notable booking secured so far has been for simultaneous presentation of all twelve of the Chaplin classics at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York City. A contract for the twelve productions, to play day and date at the two Broadway houses, has been signed by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of both theatres. The first release, "The Floorwalker" will be shown at the two houses during the week of September 14.

The contract for the Rialto and Rivoli showings is a remarkable tribute to the box office value of the pictures because three of the series were presented last spring by Dr. Reisenfeld as part of his Chaplin revival—"The Cure," "The Adventurer" and "Easy Street,"

On the Pacific coast the first of the big exhibitors to book the series for pre-release was J. V. Clemmer who contracted for the twelve productions to play in Clemmer's theatre, Seattle.

In the Pittsburgh territory the pre-release contract has been taken by the Clark and Rowland interests for presentation at their big downtown house, the Savoy.

Rubin and Finkelstein have signed for the twelve productions to play day and date in their biggest houses in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The biggest booking that has been reported to the executive offices of Exhibitors Mutual is from Loew's metropolitan circuit a total of seventy days to play in the following theatres: Loew's New York. Loew's Avenue B., Greeley Square, Forty-second Street, Loew's 86th Street, Loew's 116th Street, American Theatre, Loew's Seventh Avenue, the Lincoln, Circle, Burland, National, Victoria and New York Roof, in Manhattan; Loew's Metropolitan, Warwick, Broadway, Fulton, Bijou and Brevoort, Brooklyn, Loew's Lyric, Hoboken.

Among other representative bookings in various sections of the country are: Strand, Youngstown, O.; Republic, Jacksonville, Fla.; Electra, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Superba, Raleigh, S. C.; Strand, New Brunswick, N. J.; Majestic, Tulsa, Okla.; Atlantic Gardens, New York City; Alhambra, East Pittsburgh, Pa.; New Liberty, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Alhambra, Canton, O.; Superior, New York City; Regeant, Patterson, N. J.; Pastime, Union Hill, N. J.; Concourse, New York City; Westchester, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; Majestic, New York City and Bunny theatre, New York City.

These bookings, so many weeks in advance of release date, bear out the statement made by officials of the Clark Cornelius Corporation at the time they acquired from the Lone Star Corporation negative rights to the twelve special comedies that a new edition of these pictures in deluxe form would prove as greatly in demand as were the productions when they were first released.

It has been many months since good prints of the earlier of the twelve releases have been available that they will, when released in their new edition, constitute almost new pictures.

Launching $1,00,000 Campaign

Pathe, Through Effort, to Reach Thirty Million Folks

AN advertising campaign of nation wide scope, upon which $1,000,000 is to be expended will be launched by Pathe, and, between the latter part of October of this year and October, 1920, will carry the name and product of Pathe before nearly 30,000,000 persons.

In making this important announcement, Mr. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, said: "Business rapidly has expanded during the last year, and Mr. Charles Pathe, on the occasion of his recent visit, was deeply impressed by the growth and steady development along larger lines. He went into the proposition of a vigorous campaign with minute care—no detail, however small was overlooked. So it is that what is about to be undertaken is not based on theory, but attested fact in which thousands of minds have aided. We have had the advice of an army of exhibitors, of trained observers in our employ, and of the best national publicity and exploitation experts. And the campaign, as planned, it seems sure, will reach a hundred per cent of effectiveness. It will carry its message to even the remotest corners of the country. It is Mr. Pathe's own plan and he is following the development of it with the keenest interest. And it might be that, this campaign, successfully done, will be the forerunner of still a greater one which may circle the globe."

Newspapers, the Saturday Evening Post, motion picture "Fan" publications, electric signs and billboards will be utilized in the campaign to arouse public interest in the Pathe features, serials, comedies and other short subjects. This tremendous advertising effort will be directed at the general public in the interests of exhibitors, who are the real beneficiaries of a campaign such as has been most carefully arranged by Pathe.

Probably fifty of the leading newspapers of the United States will be the medium for the exploitation of the great list of serials scheduled for release during the ensuing year. The combined circulation of these papers will not be less than 10,000,000. From results obtained in preliminary efforts in Boston, Newark and Philadelphia, Pathe is confident that exhibitors will benefit vastly by the newspaper advertising.

The principal papers in every section of the country will appear on the Pathe advertising schedule.

In the heart of New York at Times Square, one of the biggest electric signs in the section has been contracted for by Pathe, and will blaze forth in October for the first time carrying the Pathe message to the hundreds of thousands who pass there nightly. The schedule plan outlined for the gigantic sign is somewhat similar to that arranged for the Saturday Evening Post.

Motion Picture Classic, Photoplay, Motion Picture Magazine, and Picture Play are the "fan" publications that will share in the general appropriation aimed to popularize Pathe subjects with the theatregoing public.

The entire continent will be girded with billboards, which, in their own way, will carry the story of Pathe features where this tale will accomplish the most good for exhibitors.

Accompanying the advertising will be a publicity campaign which cannot fail to react favorably for exhibitors booking Pathe subjects. Pathe is counting upon establishing its unusual schedule for the ensuing year firmly in the minds of the people who frequent motion picture theatres and to create a demand for pictures which will mean big box-office returns for exhibitors showing them.

Traveling Auditor for Realart Pictures

James B. Cunniff, well known in accounting circles in the photoplay world, has been appointed chief traveling auditor of Realart Pictures Corporation. He will assist Dario L. Faralla, the comptroller, in the installation of a branch accounting system and the various branch auditors will be under his direct supervision.

Myriad of Offers for "Lightning Bryce"

There probably has rarely been such keen competition for a serial as there has been on "Lightning Bryce." Joe Brandt, who is handling the selling and distribution of this serial and who is the author of the story, has been between the devil and the deep sea trying to decide what to do with this serial. Two big serial distribution organizations have made Brandt a flattering offer, and state right men have been telegraphing and telephoning offers for their territories.

Jack Hoxie, who has earned the reputation of the fearless Western rider, has taken his life in his hands in some of the scenes in Lightning Bryce. Ann Little has won her spurs in Lightning Bryce, and Paul Hurst, who was directing the serial, is having his own troubles in keeping Ann from taking desperate chances in order to show her fearlessness.

Authors to Co-operate with National Board

Three members of a committee were elected last week at a meeting of the Authors' League of America at Browne's Chop House to cooperate with the National Board of Review on censorship of films. The three are Rex Beach, President of the Authors League, and President of Eminent Authors Pictures, and Henry Sydnor Harrison and Gelett Burgess. They have power to increase the size and scope of the committee as circumstances warrant.

Members of the Authors' League believe they have something to contribute to the point of view of the National Board.

School for Scenarioists in Fox Studio

One of the many innovations connected with the opening of the new William Fox Building, now rapidly nearing completion at Tenth evenue, 55th to 56th streets, is a scenario school, to be organized and operated in conjunction with the regular scenario department of Fox Film Corporation.

In taking this step toward the further advancement of the silent drama it is the aim of Mr. Fox to encourage in every possible manner the best literary talent now being developed under the curriculum of the college. Columbia University already maintains a class on motion picture story writing, but it is the opinion of Mr. Fox that the subject of screen story writing can be only superficially treated unless combined with a course in the technicalities of production. It is for this purpose that the producer is organizing the school, which will have a room allotted to it in the mammoth Fox building.

Hamilton Thompson, head of the Fox Scenario Department, has been selected by Mr. Fox as supervisor of the new scenario school.

Gaiety Comedies, Inc., Is Announced

In answer to a continued demand for comedies of the light farcical type, a new comedy producing company has been formed known as Gaiety Comedies, Inc., to produce in Los Angeles comedies in one reel, to be released on a weekly basis through leading independent exchanges.

Production of comedies begins the week of August 18th, studio space having been secured at the enlarged studios being rebuilt on Gower street and Sunset Boulevard, in the heart of the Hollywood studio district. It is understood that Los Angeles capital is mainly behind the organization, corporation papers of which have been filed, and that E. H. Emmick, president of the Peerless Film Service, San Francisco, and J. L. Friedman, of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, hold interests in the company and will be prominent on the board of directors.

George Ovey, musical comedy man, has been secured as principal comedian for Gaiety Comedies, and will be supported by picked casts in each picture and by the Gaiety Girls.

Northwest Arrainged as Backward

Frohman Official Has a Few Pertinent Observations

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, General Manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation makes some pertinent and interesting observations that might be of benefit to the motion picture industry in general and the independent producer in particular. Mr Goldburg has inaugurated a card index system and has collected data covering every state in the union with respect to the demand for independent productions, regardless of their length, the exploitation by independent exchanges and exhibitors, and now comes forward with the most optimistic statement that has ever emenated from one who is conceded to be an authority on independent production and distribution.

Mr. Goldburg stated:

"At the time of my assumption of the General Managership of The Frohman Amusement Corporation, Mr. William L. Sherrill, its president, requested of me a complete statistical statement of the state right market, based upon my seven tours of the United States and the data which he was aware I have been collecting for the past six years. My report determined a complete change for the time being in the character of releases of the Frohman Amusement Corporation with the result that the Texas Guinan two reel Westerns and Mack Swain single reel comedies were commenced.

"My observations and Mr. Sherrill's judgment were vindicated as appears from the fact that the entire foreign territory was disposed of by contract with J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and every state in the Union excepting Oregon, Washington, Montanna ad Northern Idaho were disposed of on both series of productions. Without any desire to appear egotistical the observations that I made in an exclusive article appearing in the Motion Picture News of March 2, 1918, appeared to be substantiated at least as far as applies to the Northwest, but what is regrettable is that conditions in the Northwest do not seem to have changed one iota, at least as far as progress is concerned for while exhibitors in every other section of the United States have kept abreast of the times, and while independent exchanges have prospered in other territories the Northwest seems to have passed away, as far as progress in independent marketing of productions is concerned. Every other territory has seen new capital invested in the establishing of new state right exchanges, and these new organizations prospering have come to stay.

"In my article of March 2, 1918, I use this language. 'Oregon and Washington as a Motion Picture field, have dropped about thirty per cent. But the conditions in Oregon and Washington are peculiar. There is really but one state right or independent exchange of any consequence with the result that exhibitors are compelled to resort to programs."

"In the issue of the Motion Picture News of March 23, 1918, an indignant member of a State Right Exchange denied my allegations and in such denial made this observation, that my reference to the fact that there was but one state right or nidependent exchange of any consequence in that territory, that I could mean any one of five concerns and then proceeded to mention his own and the four others. The gentleman in question has since passed beyond the horizon of conducting state right exchanges and is now a perfectly good road salesman for a program house. One other exchange named by him as a reputable state right organization is no longer acquiring state right attractions, but merely handling the product of one organization. The third exchange in question will handle only so-called "road shows" and acquires on an average of two productions a year. The fourth is now out of business and has been out of business since April 1918, and the fifth is the exchange that I had in mind. Since then, a combination of exhibitors have gathered together under the leadership of Mr. Clemmer of Seattle, and that organization although but lately born might possibly be the solution for open or state right booking in the Northwest.

"Why should the Northwest with its most practical organization of exchange managers, its cosmopolitan citizenry, its more than prosperous cities, villages and townships, its perfectly well regulated railroad systems, its lumber, and agricultural communities, its seaport and its gateway to the Canadian Northwest, its commodious theatres and its wonderful climate, still remain so unprogressive as far as independent or state right exchanges are concerned.

"Is it because that is being so far removed from the Eastern Motion Picture Center an answer, or is it rather that the independent producers having become discouraged with respect to the opening up of this territory have like the Arab silently folded their tents and crept away?

"As a part of its policy to cover the four corners of the globe, the Frohman Amusement Corporation will not let well enough alone, and even though it brings no immediate return or profit, rather than to allow the Northwest to remain without the fold it plans either the establishment of a Frohman Exchange in Seattle or an alliance with progressive exhibitors for the booking direct of its attractions." This will be a course of last resort, for it is to the interest of our organization to foster and support the establishment of independent exchanges rather than to deal direct with individual exhibitors unless the exhibitors are banded together as a unit or organization in the operation of its own exchange. The Northwest must be open as a unit in line and keeping with every other prosperous territory in the United States for it deserves it.

Pictures to Cater to New Trend

Three Universals Said to Meet Demand for the Unusual

IN answer to the demand of the exhibitor and the public for better pictures has come the uncommon story and screen production. That the coming year will see a change, even more noticeable that was effected within the last year, is evidenced by the type of productions that are now being planned—and among which may be named three Universal ones. According to the sponsors of "The Breath of the Gods," "Lasca" and "The Beach Comber" the three productions are expected to be features of more than ordinary merit.

The three productions will be for early winter release. "The Breath of the Gods" is in the first series of twelve for the fall season and the other two will be in the second series.

The Japanese production, the first large production of its kind to be made at Universal City, will be unique from many sides in that it will feature Tsuru Aoki, the Japanese star, and that every detail will be carried out in obtaining true atmosphere for the production. In the screen version of the novel which was written by Sydney McCall, scenes in the Japanese capitol, Tokio, are to be reproduced.

The novel itself has been widely read. The story is that of the sacrifice of a Japanese girl who has been educated in America and who returns to the land of her birth at the time that war is declared. Her love for a foreigner causes her to get in a serious predicament from which her only escape without disgrace is self-sacrifice.

"The Beach Comber," an altogether different type of picture, is to feature Elmo Lincoln, the star of the serial "Elmo the Mighty." The scenes in the production however are to be laid in a foreign country. The story was written by J. G. Hawks, and tells of the adventures of a ship captain who finds that his craft is being use to smuggle arms to a foreign country.

"Lasca" is the screen adaption of a story written by Percy Heath from the poem of the same name by Frank Duprez. Frank Mayo, who starred in "A Little Brother of the Rich," "The Brute Breaker" and other Universal Attractions, will be featured in "Lasca." The scenes are laid in Texas near the Rio Grande and plans are now being made to obtain some exceptional photography and scenes relative to the Texas country.

This is the first production Norman Dawn has directed for Universal and Edith Roberts, well-known leading woman has been chosen to support Mayo. Others who have prominent roles in the cast are: Arthur Jasmine, Veola Harty, and Lloyd Whitlock.

"Checkers" in a Broadway House

Fox Attractions Enter Still Another Big Theatre

CONSIDERABLE interest has been aroused by the recent acquisition of the Forty-fourth Street theatre, New York, by William Fox, who is presenting there in advance of release dates the big double bill made up of the screen adaptation of Longfellow's "Evangeline" and the fascinating tale of "Kathleen Mavourneen." Newspaper critics, trade papers reviewers and theatrical and picture producers of renown have been practically unanimous in voicing hearty approval of the artistic qualities of both pictures.

Following close upon this success comes the opening of the Central theatre on Longacre Square with the Fox production of "Checkers," based on the celebrated racing melodrama from the pen of Henry M. Blossom, Jr., a play which enjoyed remarkable success throughout the country for years.

Sunday evening, August 24, Mr. Fox opened the Central with "Checkers," announced for an indefinite run—and likely to have it if the business reported by the box office is any criterion. The picture is shown with an orchestra accompaniment of selections listed in the music cues published for use with the production of "Checkers."

The cast is headed by Thomas J. Carrigan as Checkers and Jean Acker as Pert Barlow. Others are in it.

This special production also is shown ahead of scheduled release date.

When "Checkers" was assigned by Mr. Fox to Richard Stanton, the director, he was given carte blanche. The result was that the entire resources of the vast Fox organization were concentrated on the picture for more than three months, and the cost of the picture is reported to have reached $320,000.

An entire New Jersey railroad was chartered for a day to make the scenes showing the thrilling wreck of the train on which the dark horse Remorse is being transported to the race track; and the race-track scenes which formed the climax of the stage play were photographed at Belmont Park, where thousands of people were in attendance.

The element of suspense created and maintained in these gigantic racing scenes is a bright feather in the cap of Director Stanton, who has injected into them a keener racing spirit than has been found hitherto in any picture dealing with this branch of sport. Also these scenes are far more important and thrilling on the screen than they could possibly be on the stage.

"Come on, Remorse!" the famous racing expression which originated in and was popularized by the stage production, live once more with the presentation of the screen version. Jean Acker, who is an expert horsewoman, and a familiar figure on Central Park bridle path, rides Old Rosebud, the thoroughbred who is photographed as Remorse, in a smashing, spectacular finish.

In the all-star cast, in addition to Thomas J. Carrigan and Jean Acker, are Ellen Cassity, Robert Elliott, Bertram Marburgh, Freeman Barnes, Ed Sedgwick and Tammany Young.

Without having seen the picture run, and basing their judgment solely on the reception of the picture by New York audiences and on opinions of the critical reviewers, hundreds of exhibitors have already closed dates on this big feature. Exchange managers, it is said, are overwhelmed with applications from showmen who regard "Checkers" as a record-making winner.

Realart Motto Will Be Lived Up To

"Stories based on successful books and stage plays" was the slogan Arthur S. Kane adopted when he announced the organization of Realart Pictures Corporation.

And now Mr. Kane cites his first Constance Binney production, "Erstwhile Susan," as evidence of his intention to keep faith with exhibitors. "Erstwhile Susan" has been both book and play and involves names well known in literary and dramatic circles. The author is Helen R. Martin and the play has been a vehicle for Minnie Maddern Fiske and Henrietta Crossman. Harrison Grey Fiske was involved in the production and the Century Company as publishers of the novel.

The photoplay adaption of "Erstwhile Susan" was made by Kathryne Stuart and the picture is now being produced under the direction of John S. Robertson. In the photoplay, Constance Binney will portray "Barnabetta." The early Fall will probably see this first Constance Binney release by Realart in the hands of exhibitors.

Camera Work Ends on Big Metros

First Screen Classics Specials Now in Cutting Stage

ACTUAL photographic work on the first three of Metro's "fewer, bigger and better" productions has been completed at the Screen Classics, Inc., studios in Hollywood. These three specials are "Lombardi, Ltd.", with Bert Lytell as the star; "Fair and Warmer," with May Allison in the stellar role and "Please Get Married," with Viola Dana enacting the part of the embarrassed bride, which was created on the stage by Edith Taliaferro.

The pictures were in every instance personally supervised by Maxwell Karger. Mr. Karger not only consulted daily with each of the three directors—respectively, Jack Conway, Henry Otto and John E. Ince—but he provided each of them with a special technical expert to design and construct the ornate and elaborate interior art settings required by the productions.

For this work M. P. Staulcup, who designed the art interiors for the Nazimova production of "The Brat," was the special technician with the Lytell company; J. K. Holden with the Allison company and Amos Myers with the Dana organization of players.

From first "shot" to final dissolve, the making of the three big productions, carried on simultaneously, occupied seven weeks. The film will of course have to be cut and assembled and the pictures titled before they are complete. This exacting work will require from three weeks to a month more.

A ninety per cent feminine cast supports Bert Lytell in "Lombardi, Ltd." It comprises Alice Lake, Vera Lewis, Juanita Hansen, Thea Talbot, Ann May, Jean Acker, Virginia Caldwell, Golda Madden, Patricia Hannan, Joseph Kilgour, Thomas Jefferson, George McDaniel and John Steppling. In "Fair and Warmer" with May Allison and Pell Trenton, Eugene Pallette, William Buckley, Christine Mayo, and Effie Conley. The supporting cast in "Please Get Married," with Viola Dana includes Antrim Short, Margaret Campbell, Harry Todd, Emmett King, Ralph Bell, Thomas Ricketts, Hugh Fay, Joseph Hazelton, W. K. Mesick, W. F. Moran, Daisy Robinson and Thomas Hadley.

Selections of the vehicles to follow their first specials have been made for May Allison and Viola Dana by Director General Karger. Miss Allison is to do "Along Came Ruth," the highly successful stage comedy by Holman Day, which was produced a few seasons ago in New York by Henry W. Savage.

King Baggot and Claire Whitney head a strong cast presented in the Screen Classics version of the stage success, "The Man Who Stayed at Home." Distributed by Metro

United Cigar Stores to Boost "Miracle Man"

United Cigar Stores to the number of 1,250, covering the entire United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf to the Dominion, have been enlisted in a mutual tie-up arrangement by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Home Office Publicity Department to help exploit George Loane Tucker's special production, "The Miracle Man," a Paramount-Artcraft September release. This tie-up, which because of its scope and influence takes rank with the greatest co-operative publicity arrangement ever affected for motion pictures, consists in the posting in United Cigar Store windows of fifteen thousand posters.

These posters, 14 x 26½ inches in size and done in four colors, come in six styles each of 2,500. Each style will receive a two days' display in every United Cigar Store window in the country with an interval between displays to permit of but two posters a week. The set will run out in three weeks but it will be repeated as before for another three weeks, making a total of six weeks' showing in the most prominent store windows in America.

Further Plays Named for Leah Baird

Both in theme and enactment Leah Baird's new plays for Artco production and Hodkinson release grow in power. The third play of Miss Baird's present series went into production this week at the Biograph studios, New York. This is "The Capitol," a great theatrical stage success of its period with Frank Keenan and Amelia Bingham as the stars. It is a story of politics and love and intrigue in modern Washington with the shadow of the nation's political structure and the background of the United States Senate for atmosphere.

This makes three Augustus Thomas' dramas that Miss Baird has had since the launching of the Four Star pictures under the presentation of Arthur F. Beck and the direction of George Irving. These three are "As A man Thinks" "The Volcano" and now "The Capitol."

Announcement is made that Mr. Beck, president of Artco and treasurer of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., the later controlling the Doris Kenyon-Louis Joseph Vance production, "The Bandbox," has as the next three Augustus Thomas' plays for Miss Baird "Harvest Moon," "Indian Summer" and "Alabama." The latter picture will be the powerful spring time special concluding the series.

Bull's-Eye President Is Satisfied

Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, concluded a busy week on the West Coast August 20th when he left Los Angeles on his return trip to New York. The greater part of Mr. Cohen's time in the west was devoted to inspecting the Hollywood plant of the Bulls-Eye and assisting Nat H. Spitzer, studio manager, in perfecting plans for the coming year. Before leaving the studios Mr. Cohen made an address to the 300 employes, who make the Bulls-Eye comedies, in which he said in part:

"In behalf of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation I wish to thank you people personnaly for your part in putting the Bulls-Eye comedies on the motion picture map. About a year ago we began this concern in a small way. At this time we have six, one and two reel features that have made both the exhibitors and movie patrons sit up and take notice. You workers have made this possible and to you goes the credit."

Mr. Cohen was so pleased with the entire staff and their efforts on behalf of the Bulls-Eye comedies that not a single change in employes was suggested.

Monopol's Star Team

George Larkin, star of the Monopol Picture Company's production, "Alma Where Do You Live?" in point of service on the screen is one of the veteran leading men of the films.

The work of George Larkin and Ruth McTammany, former star of the "Red Lady" in "Alma Where Do You Live" is said to have made this Monopol Picture worthy of being termed the most entertaining state right feature offering of the year, and to fill a long felt want for comedy in the list of big productions.

Haworth's Activities Expanded

Edith Storey Signed; Even Bigger Tales Forthcoming

"HAWORTH is expanding and will make more and better pictures during the coming year," according to William J. Connery, vice-president and treasurer of Haworth. "At least two additional stars will be added to the Haworth list, and productions for the coming year will number twenty if not more.

"The success of our pictures produced for Robertson-Cole and distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, has been so marked that it more than warrants increased production. The studios are now being enlarged to accommodate the enlarged staffs.

"The Haworth-Robertson-Cole working agreement has been more than satisfactory. Within the year it has materially aided in bringing Haworth pictures to a foremost position, one that has probably never been attained by any company in such a short period of time. It has enabled us to give entire time and thought to production with the result that our Robertson-Cole features distributed by Exhibitors Mutual have reached a standard of excellence reached by few and surpassed by none."

Mr. Connery is now in New York arranging plans for increasing Haworth's production. He has already closed a contract with one of the most popular actresses, and is now negotiating with another.

Haworth, though only a little more than a year old, has made Robertson-Cole features for distribution by Exhibitors Mutual that have been marked successes. "The Man Beneath," "The Courageous Coward" and "His Debt" are numbered among the best productions of the year.

Asked as to the secret of the success of the Haworth produced, Robertson-Cole features, Mr. Connery replied, "It is no secret. It is simply that we give the public pictures that are unconventional and produced as nearly perfect as possible. It will be noted that the majority of Haworth's Robertson-Cole features do not have the so-called essential happy ending. Instead, highly dramatic stories with sympathetic endings have been picturized and because they are different and true to life they have been marked successful.

"Two things are absolutely essential to the success of stories of unusual type; first the story itself must be dramatic, tense and interesting, and it must be true to every human instinct; secondly, there must be a cast which can interpret the roles humanly, and therein Hayakawa and his associates have proven themselves more adept artists.

"The Illustrious Prince," a picturization of E. Phillip Oppenheim's famous novel, and probably the best picture that the noted Japanese star has appeared in, is another example of the sympathetic ending. The story demands it, and to have to introduce a happy ending would have weakened the story to such an extent as to make its success dubious.

"The Man Beneath" and "His Debt," two features Haworth produced for Robertson-Cole and for distribution by Exhibitors Mutual, are proven examples of successful pictures that do not live up to the conventional in story and ending.

"There are still a few books and plays that may be selected as unusual stories for the Haworth stars, but we feel that writers' unhackneyed ideas and willingness to depart from the so-called conventionalities will supply us with the best stories.

"In keeping with the policy of expansion, Haworth has placed under contract, Miss Edith Storey, and we are now negotiating with another star of equal reputation.

"This will mark her return to the screen after two years absence, during which time Miss Storey has been devoting her time and talents to the greatest of all work, that of serving her country."

Chautard Given Unlimited Time

Realart Contract Allows Director to Work in His Own Way

A contract without a time limit—one unique, it is said, in the history of the motion picture business—is the basis on which Emile Chautard is making "photonovels" Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

According to a statement by Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart Pictures Corporation, through which the Chautard Productions will be released, it is provided in the director's contract simply that he shall make six feature pictures.

"Nothing is said about time," Mr. Kane explains, "for the reason that it is the desire both of Mr. Chautard and President Wolper of Mayflower that the director shall not be hurried. And it is this phase of the matter which appeals most strongly to me, outside of the fact, of course, of Mr. Chautard's reputation as a director.

"It is our idea that one of the banes of the business has been rush production. Often, practically everything is sacrificed to speed. Hasty casting can cause much trouble and cheapen what might otherwise have been a big picture. And too rapid work on sets, filming, cutting and printing, leads to neglect of details which may be almost fatal to the success of a production.

"Of course there is another extreme—that of running up costs unnecessarily by dalliance, or by too much attention to immaterial points—but there is a way of preventing this. The important thing, in my opinion, is that there shall be ample time allowed for good work, and that is what Mr. Wolper and Mr. Chautard had in mind when the provisions of their six-production contract were drafted."

The result of this plan, from the production standpoint, will first be seen in the picture, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," based on a famous detective story by Gaston Leroux. Mr. Chautard is quoted as saying he is enjoying absolute artistic freedom for the first time since he started to make photoplays, which, by the way, was in France with one of the first French producers.

The time he will spend on a picture, he says, will depend absolutely on the picture. About two months were required to make "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," but if three months are necessary, three months will be taken.

Mr. Chautard also emphasizes the fact that he is free to make his productions in his own way, without hindrance from anyone. He is writing his own scenarios, supervising the cutting, and even designing the subtitles. "When the pictures leave my studios in Fort Lee," he says, "they will be finished productions, ready to be shown on the screen."

Repertoire Week of Popular Pickfords

For the past several weeks, a voting contest has been conducted by the management of the Kinema Theatre, Messrs. Emil Kerhlein and G. H. Dumond, to determine which are the most popular productions in which Mary Pickford has appeared during her Paramount-Artcraft engagement. Patrons were given ballots, which were left at the door as they passed out.

The voting showed "M'Liss" to be the most popular. "The Poor Little Rich Girl," second; "Stella Maris," third; "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" fourth; "The Little American," fifth; "Rags," sixth, and "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," seventh. These seven subjects will constitute the program for the week beginning August 24th, each film will be run but one day. The week will be advertised as "Mary Pickford Repertoire Week," and a big advertising campaign will be carried in the daily papers, announcing each day the subject to be shown.

Producing Comedies Is a Serious Business

Henry Lehrman, producer of the forthcoming Henry Lehrman Comedies for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and for many years one of the foremost creative artists in the field of motion picture comedy, gives in an interview this week an interesting exposition of the changing tendencies of film humor, and the difficulties which confront those whose task is to make two laughs flourish where only a smile grew before.

"To the superficial observer," says Mr. Lehrman, "the creation of film comedy appears to constitute the easiest branch of production endeavor. Nothing could be further from the actual facts. The production of comedies is the most serious business in the film world, and involves the exercise of the utmost in resourcefulness and ingenuity. It is probably true that more thought, more labor and more painstaking care are lavished on a successful two-reel comedy than on the average dramatic feature of more than twice its length."

Tips to Screen Authors by One of Them

Clara S. Beranger, one of the most noted scenario writers in the motion picture industry in a recent interview was asked to give a few words of advice to young writers of pictude plays. Mrs. Beranger said:

"In writing photoplays the one thing to bear in mind is, first—Start with an idea that is practical. So many young writers are prone to select as the subject matter of their story a plot that deals with men and women that have never had their counterpart in real life. The consequence is they never sell their stories because the editors of scenarios understand that the public will not be interested in fictional characters that are far removed from human.

"Do not write with one particular star in mind. You are liable to so fashion your tale as to make it impossible for the use of any other actor.

"Avoid lengthy descriptives. Always remember that action is the paramount necessity for successful scenarios."

Cathrine Curtis Prepares for Filming

Backed by Wall Street capital, organization has been completed of the Cathrine Curtis Corporation, it was announced in Los Angeles on August 19th. Headquarters will be maintained in Los Angeles, and New York offices at 120 Broadway. Miss Curtis, who is to have the triple role of star, producer and executive manager, has been made president, and George M. Taylor, vice-president, and Dorman T. Connet, secretary and treasurer.

Miss Curtis is now in Los Angeles organizing her production, and is resolved, according to the company, to surround herself with the most representative corps of helpers available. She was not prepared, it was announced, to explain the nature of her first undertaking, but according to the officials, the company intends to work for a marked advancement in the art.

State Right and Foreign Sales

A CONTRACT was entered into with Greenwald & Griffith, owners of the Exclusive Film Exchange of Cleveland, Ohio, whereby they acquired the state rights to the series of thirteen Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns and twenty-six single-reel Mack Swain comedies from the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Verrett and Johnstone have obtained the Louisiana and Mississippi rights to the motion picture, "Virtuous Men," the Ralph Ince production, starring E. K. Lincoln.

George Stockton, the owner of the Ohio Ivan Film Exchange, has acquired the Frohman Amusement Corporation's six-part special "Once to Every Man."

Jacob Gluckman, who recently acquired foreign rights to the Louis Burston serial, "The Mystery of 13," has already disposed of the Australian rights to Australian Films, Ltd., who at the same time have taken over the Far East rights. Porto Rico, Mexico and other Central American countries have also been sold on the feature.

Hodkinson reports the sale of "A White Man's Chance," featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, for Great Britain and Ireland to the Gaumont Company of London.

Mary Murrillo, who returned from England two weeks ago, having paid a visit to her parents in London, has been engaged by Joseph M. Schenck to join the Norma Talmadge scenario staff.

Paddy McQuire, well known comedy actor, has joined Bull's-Eye Comedies.

Vitagraph Has Noted Stories

Twelve Writers Represented in List of Works Acquired for Production

VITAGRAPH announces acquisition of works of twelve prominent authors, which will be put into screen form. The authors whose work will be represented are Rex Beach, Robert W. Chambers, Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rhinehart, Irvin Cobb, Booth Tarkington, Richard Harding Davis, O. Henry, George Ade, Gouverneur Morris, Amelie Rives and George Randolph Chester.

It is said to be due primarily to George Randolph Chester who is production editor for Vitagraph, that works of the other writers was obtained.

"Following is the list of popular writers for the Vitagraph's twelve, one-a-month big-author feature specials in the season of 1919-20; viz: Rex Beach, Robert W. Chambers, Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Irvin S. Cobb, Booth Tarkington, Richard Harding Davis, O. Henry, George Ade, Gouveneur Morris, Amelia Rives, George Randolph Chester.

"At your insistence, I have included my own name and shall try to make the special "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" picture worthy of the superb stories provided by the other eleven authors.

"I have no hesitation in saying that no motion picture producing company has announced or can announce a list of popular modern authors so illustrious as these eleven other names, and the stories, without exception, are in my estimation the best which have been offered to Vitagraph. These, in conjunction with our "Famous Plays" series make a galaxy such as has never been offered to the exhibitor.

"Starting with Rex Beach's powerful story, "The Vengeance of Durand," which releases on November 10th, there is not a weak spot in the "line-up."

"This letter marks the end of several months of strenuous effort, and I must confess that as I read the imposing array of talent which we have gathered, for this "grand slam" I am much more than content—and I feel certain that, anxious as you are to give the public better pictures than they could obtain from any other source, you too will be more than satisfied with the selection."

Stock Company to Make Industrial Pictures

Under the supervision of Harry Levey, manager, the Universal Educational and Industrial departments have started the organization of a permanent producing stock company, which will serve in the production of subsequent releases of that department. This is claimed to be the first company of its type ever organized, and will include several well known stars of the film world.

The first feature, probably, in which the new company will be started is the one Mr. Levey is supervising for the City of New Orleans, during the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, September 21 to 25.

First Serial Star in Hallmark Serial

Ben Wilson, star of Hallmark Picture Corporation's new serial, "The Trail of the Octopus," released September 1st, in fifteen episodes, holds the distinction of being one of the screen's first actors to work in serial productions.

Simplex Notes

IS SIMPLEXIZING TEXAS

From reports received at the Simplex factory this week Mr. E. J. Callahan, Manager of the Dallas, Texas office of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company, is allowing no grass to grow under his energetic heels where the sales of Simplex Projectors are concerned.

This branch office has only been in existence a very short time, but with the methods that have always characterized those of the Lucas Company the sale of Simplex has jumped considerably. The following owners of theatres in Texas have within several weeks purchased Simplex Projectors through the Dallas office:—

Robb & Hawley, Hillsboro, Texas, 4 Type "S" machines.

Tom Harris, Eastland, Texas, 2 Type "S" machines.

H. H. Keller, Mart, Texas, Simplex Mazada.

Mrs. J. T. McClure, Burk Burnett, Texas, Simplex Mazda.

W. D. Neville, Dallas, Texas, 2 Type "S" machines.

John Saveg, Ennis, Texas, 2 Regulation machines.

T. E. Williams, Kirkland, Texas, "S" machine.

Mrs. Cassady, Gainesville, Texas, 2 Type "S" machines.

T. B. Hunt, Terrell, Texas, 2 Type "S" machines.

H. Phillipps, Fort Worth, Texas, Type "S" machine.

This makes a total of eighteen machines, which is highly gratifying to the makers of the Simplex.

COOPERATES WITH ENGINEERS

Mr. Manfred M. Stophlet, a member of one of Toledo's leading architectural firms, together with Dr. Horator, Managing Director of the Pantheon Theatre Company, were in consultation this last week with the engineer of the Simplex factory relative to the laying out of the new proposed Horator theatre in Toledo.

Dr. Horator besides being Managing Director of the Pantheon Company, holds down a similar responsible position at the Alhambra. The new house which will occupy a section of Toledo's most ideal theatre location, will be erected between Loew's Valentine and Keith's theatre and is designed to seat one thousand.

Since the now famous Newman theatre installation, the Simplex Company have received scores of inquries from leading theatre architects concerning the latest and most scientific methods employed in projection room layouts.

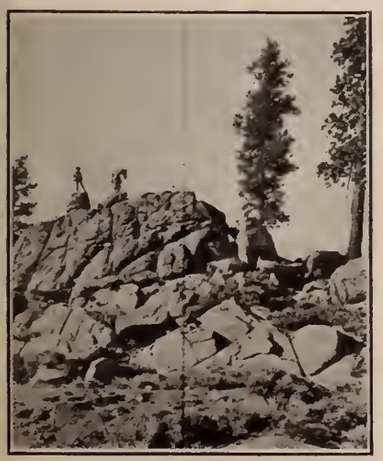
Mr. Stophlet plans for two Simplex Projectors and one of the newly developed Simplex spot lamps in the new house. The firm of Stophlet is well-known around Toledo, having been actively engaged in the construction of church, semi-public and miscellaneous buildings for many years.

PORTER NOW WORKING HARD

Mr. B. F. Porter, the Greater New York City Distributor for Simplex, is kept jumping these days to keep up with the demands made upon him for Simplex Projectors and projection room equipment.

Ben Wilson Serial Is Released Sept. 1

Described as the most unusual serial production of the current year, "The Trail of the Octopus," featuring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, will make its bow to the public the first week in September under the banner of the Hallmark Picture Corporation "The Trail of the Octopus," the first serial production of the new company, carries with it one of the most elaborate and comprehensive advertising campaigns ever inaugurated in the interest of an episodic attraction. In connection with its presentation, the exhibitor is offered a carefully planned business-getter in the Dagger Plan, formulated to incite a new interest, and offers to sure-fire incentive to bring patrons to the theatre.



The Ben Wilson serial is said to leave the beaten tracks of all former serial productions in that the plot of its unique story, based on the adventures of a crimmologist, gives play not alone to the thrill element as exemplified by the actual physical daring but in the mental psychology incorporated that carries with it all the force of the convincing drama experienced in the reading of Conan Doyle's best sellers.

Wistaria to Make All Varieties of Pictures

Lynn S. Card, president of Wistaria Productions, Inc., producing "The Lurking Peril," a new serial co-starring Anne Luther and George Larken, announces that work will be started on a series of comedy productions, featuring one of the screen's most popular comedians. According to Mr. Card's announcement, Wistaria Productions has made plans covering every production activity of the motion picture field. These plans call for two serials, one of which is now under production; a series of comedies and a series of special features starring a well known Broadway star.

Vita Star's New Play

"The Tame Wife" has been selected by Vitagraph as Corinne Griffith's feature to follow "The Climbers" at which she is now at work. Tom Terriss, who is directing "The Climbers" will direct Miss Griffith in her new play.

How the new Selznick plant, on Long Island, will look upon its completion. It will be a veritable city in itself

A Studio Perfect in Detail

Such Will Be the New Selznick Plant Upon Completion; Largest Yet Built

WITH the advance claim made that it will be the largest and most completely equipped studio building in the world, the new Selznick studio is promised as ready for occupancy ten months after the first shovel-full of dirt is removed from the ground.

The construction figures of the forthcoming studio are almost bewildering. The building itself will cover more than 120,000 square feet of ground It will be four stories high and twenty companies can be accommodated at one time.

The site of the proposed studio is in Long Island City, across the Queensborough bridge, fifteen minutes by subway from Times Square. It is next to the Packard Automobile Company's big Long Island City building which is so well known to motorists who tour this part of the country.

The construction of the studio will be undertaken by the Fleischman Construction Company of New York.

One of the many features of the studio will be the two stages which will, themselves, cover a space of 54,240 square feet. The lower studio on the ground floor, will cover 25,200 square feet, while the upper studio will cover 29,040. There will be six passenger elevators and two freight elevators.

A few more of the astounding facts include the announcement that there will be 88 dressing room suites. Private suites of three rooms and bath will be provided for each star. One section of the building will be devoted to a studio restaurant. At the front of the building there will be two mezzanine floors. One of these floors will be devoted to the private office of President Myron Selznick, his principal aides, directors' offices, publicity, purchasing, and other departments. The second floor will be given over to the dressing rooms of the stars, while within ready reach will be located the dress-making department and the wardrobe.

Altogether at least 1,500 persons will find employment within the walls of the studio. Every requirement for this large group of workers will be found in the Long Island City home of Selznick Pictures. It is being built with the express idea of including every phase of motion picture making under one roof, and it is the proud boast of President Myron Selznick that when the building is ready for occupancy his aim for a perfect studio will have been realized.

Dintenfass Arranges Release

Negotiations on for Distribution of Cuckoo Comics; Four Are Ready

"STARTING OUT IN LIFE," "Out Of Luck" and "Ballbearing But Hard Running" are announced by Mark M. Dintenfess as the respective titles of the first three of the series of Cuckoo Comedies, shortly to be launched by that producer, according to a statement from Mr. Dintenfass this week. It is further announced that arrangements are being completed with one of the large distributing organizations for the release of this series of monthly two-reelers, and the name of the selected company together with the details of release is to be announced very shortly.

"Clean and wholesome comedy" is reported to be the slogan of an extensive and high class advertising campaign now being instituted by Mr. Dintenfass for the exploitation of the Cuckoo Comedies. "In presenting the new comedies with Bobby Burns, Jobyna Ralston, May Louis, and other star comedy artists," says Mr. Dintenfass, "it has been our purpose to produce two-reel features that shall prove one hundred per cent in merit and which shall appeal to both young and adult. Moreover, while providing heaps of fun we are insisting that the fun shall always be clean.

"A further object we have kept in view," continued Mr. Dintenfass, "is to make the Cuckoo Comedics a series that shall come to be recognized as a star portion of the exhibitors' program.

Educationals in Canada Through Monarch

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, has completed an arrangement with Messrs. B. Allen, Jule Allen, and Jay J. Allen, whereby Canadian exhibitors will be supplied in the future with "Educational" releases through the Monarch Film Company, Ltd. of Toronto, Ontario, which exchange is operated by the Allen Brothers in conjunction with their numerous theatres.

The Robert C. Bruce "Scenics Beautiful," the new series of "International" Black-and-White comedies, George D. Wright's "Mexico To-day," the Ditmars "Living Book of Nature" and the special "Educational" single-reel features will be available for booking throughout the Dominion. The Messrs. Allen aim to supply a complete short-subject program that will hold up the high standards which they maintain in all their operations, and the affiliation with the Educational organization has been the result of their research in the short subject field.

Mr. Hammons announces that shipments are to begin immediately.

W. H. Will Distribute "Mystery of 13"

Louis Burston, who produced the serial "The Mystery of 13," announces that he has made arrangements for the distribution in the United States of this serial through W. H. Productions Company.

Mr. Burston further announces the sale of the following foreign territories: Australia and the Far East, Argentine, Chile, Uruguay and Paraguay, Porto Rico and San Domingo, Cuba, Mexico, Spain and Portugal and Central America.

In commenting upon the distribution arrangements with W. H. Productions Co., Mr. Burston stated that he considered W. H. Productions Co. one of the best equipped organizations for the exploitation of "The Mystery of 13."

Klein Play This Month

"The Gamblers," the third of the famous dramas by the late Charles Klein to be put into form by Vitagraph, is to be a September release. Harry Morey is the star.

One of filmdom's real pioneers, Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Co.

Goldwyn Secures Two Stage Hits

First Result of Recent Combination with Theatre Men

TWO stage successes of last season have been secured by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. "The Woman in Room 13" and "Roads of Destiny," both Al Woods productions originally, will be screened with Pauline Frederick in the star roles. The selection of these plays is the first important development following upon the recent amalgamation of the interests of the Shuberts, Selwyns and Mr. Woods with Goldwyn, by which the latter has the first film rights to any of the productions of the three producing houses.

"Roads of Destiny" was written by Channing Pollock. It was suggested to that versatile dramatist by the famous story of the same name from the pen of O. Henry. Florence Reed was starred in the play, which won critical and popular applause. "The Woman in Room 13" was a happy composite from the imaginations of Percival Wilde, Max Marcin and Samuel Shipman. Like "Roads of Destiny," it was a great success. A notable cast presented the play, including Gail Kane, Lowell Sherman, Janet Beecher and others equally well known to the screen public.

It is expected that Goldwyn will shortly announce more selections from the wide range of material afforded by its connection with the Shuberts, Woods and Selwyns. For a long time the major complaint in the motion picture business has been the scarcity of good screen material and the difficulty of obtaining it. Goldwyn feels that with "The Woman in Room 13" and "Roads of Destiny" it has begun only to scratch at a wealth of themes for its photodramas and that henceforth it will be a matter of choosing not from too little, but from too much.

"The Woman in Room 13" was one of the outstanding hits of the past season. It received unanimous praise from dramatic critics and for many months did a S. R. O. business, first at the Booth theatre, New York, where it opened in January, 1919, and later at the Republic, a house that was selected because of its larger seating capacity. This play ran for something over six months before it was withdrawn, not owing to any decline in its popularity, but because the house was needed for another attraction. Although "The Woman in Room 13" has received nation-wide publicity, the production has not been seen on the road, and the remarkable story of mystery, suspense and dramatic action will reach thousands of theatregoers for the first time through the Goldwyn photoplay version.

"Roads of Destiny" is an even more recent stage triumph in which Miss Reed gave one of the most notable performances of her career. Like "The Woman in Room 13," it presents a story peculiarly suited to the requirements of the screen and one that will come as a distinct novelty to the great body of picture fans. The play opened at the Republic theatre about one year ago and remained there for nearly six months. Miss Reed will head a company being formed by Mr. Woods to tour the principal cities during the coming season.

New Stages in Big Metro Studio

Million Dollar Plant Further Enlarged for Production

A SECOND "dark" stage has been completed at the million-dollar Screen Classics, Inc., studios in Hollywood, and is already occupied by extensive and elaborate settings in which Viola Dana is making scenes of her clever new play, "Please Get Married," and Bert Lytell of his newest vehicle, "Lombardi, Ltd., both picturizations of Oliver Morosco stage successes to be distributed by Metro.

The new studio building is 150 feet long, and is placed south of the first dark stage built by Metro in the West. It exceeds the earlier building in area by 6,000 square feet. The first building (finished six months ago) is in active use by Nazimova with scenes for "The Hermit Doctor of Gaya," and by May Allison with settings for "Fair and Warmer," Avery Hopwood's farce-comedy of temperament and temperature.

The 90-foot span of the roof of the newest photoplay workshop is bridged by thirteen enormous trusses that weigh two tons apiece. The trusses in themselves are one of the most interesting details of studio construction. They are of the Howe model, standard right-angle construction, and designed to carry the entire load on the upper beam.

The architect who designed the trussness based his figures upon the maximum weight, the roof would be called upon to support. The weight includes 89 banks of Cooper-Hewitt lights aggregating a downward pull of twenty-six tons, to say nothing of ten heavy switchboards installed under the roof, the hundreds of "hard" lights suspended from beams, and the swarms of electricians and other workers active over the actors' heads.

Another feature of the big stage building is the overhead trolley system by which the heavy banks of Cooper-Hewitt mercury vapor lights are swung to any desired position. Eight lines of steel tracks extend the length of the building, side by side, and numerous switches permit the banks to be shifted and concentrated at any point. The idea of the tracks, and the elaboration of the switching device was perfected by three Metro men—Clifford Butler, business manager; Walter Grams, chief electrician, and John Fisher.

The estimated value of the big stage building is $43,000. The frame work is of Oregon pine, sealed inside and painted with fire-retarding paint. On the exterior four coats of rough plaster finished in Belgium green have been shot on with guns.

Life of Military Prisoners Pictured

"The Second Chance" is to be the title of a new single reel attraction, announced by Vice-President E. W. Hammons for release through the exchange of the Educational Films Corporation of America. The picture tells the dramatic story of a military prisoner, and shows the operation and management of army prison, with "Castle William," on Governors' Island, for its background.

Mr. Hammons states that the subject is "not a war picture," but rather a phase of military life which has never before been photographed, and which is of keen interest to motion picture patrons in or out of uniform. "The popular interest in matters that have been created by the war will not diminish in fifty years," says Mr. Hammons, "and there will be numerous occasions which pictures like 'The Second Chance' will bring out the facts concerning little-known details of war-times that will be as interesting a decade from now as they are today."

Too Many Plays of the Moment, Says Berst

There are too many "coming and going" pictures according to Mr. J. A. Berst, President of United Picture Theatres of America Inc.

"By a 'coming and going' picture I mean one in which the characters hurry across the screen entering and exiting and doing little of anything else. There are a lot of pictures in which a reel or two is utilized in apparently aimless procession and scurrying to and fro in order to introduce characters and set the stage, so to speak, for the story.

"Another weakness of many of the present day movie series is the length of time it takes to get into the plot. Two reels or more of 'atmosphere' before anything happens. The United demands films that start with a punch and keep it up right through the plot. We want something doing: action to hold interest, and we find that the public wants the same thing.

"If you start your plot at once, bring on the situations as quickly as possible and introduce the characters logically as they appear in the action of the plot, you will please the audiences."

Many varied roles has Douglas Fairbanks had during his screen career, so it scarcely surprises to find him an intrepid fireman in his initial United Artists production, "His Majesty, the American," performing stunts such as rescuing fair damsels, and little kittens

Journalistic Praise on "Lost Battalion"

"We consider that 'The Lost Battalion' is the greatest screen production of the age."

The following quotations from the Hartford, Conn., papers, where this photoplay broke all precedent in box office receipts on a showing of two weeks, speaks for itself.

The Hartford Courant says:

"Somehow, in some miraculous manner, the producer and director of 'The Lost Battalion' have caught the glorious spirit of the American doughboy, and in every scene filmed is reincarnated for history the homely, humorous and noble characteristics of the product of the 'melting pot of the nations,' the American soldier. In its mightily playing on the chord of human interest, in its appeal to the individual's patriotic pride, and lastly, in its power to produce tears of laughter and tears that spring from sight of rows on rows of tiny white wooden crosses in a graveyard in France. 'The Lost Battalion' is far superior to 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

Ford Weekly Starts for 7000 Mark

A few months ago the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation adopted the slogan of "6,000 or Bust" for pushing the Ford Educational Weekly "over the top" with exhibitors throughout the country.

Now that the Ford Educational Weekly has crossed the 6,000 contract mark at the beginning of the new Goldwyn season, the slogan has been changed. It is now "7,000 or Bust."

Deitrich-Beck Finish "Band Box"

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION announces the completion of the Deitrich-Beck, Inc, production of Louis Joseph Vance's "The Bandbox," starring Doris Kenyon. R. William Neill, director of "The Bandbox," is engaged on cutting the Kenyon picture at the Biograph Studios.

The Hodkinson organization, as with all other big productions it distributes, has mapped out a heavy advertising and exploitation campaign, that includes book-publisher link-ups of an unusual character, on "The Bandbox," which is slated for release in the latter part of September, Arthur F. Beck, treasurer of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., having already arranged publisher advertising on the production.

In this Louis Joseph Vance story Doris Kenyon is said to have big opportunities. A rousing story of adventure, "The Bandbox," one of America's "best sellers" both as a serial in Munsey' Magazine and in book form, is said to reveal Miss Kenyon as a forceful dramatic actress one minute and a delightful dispenser of buoyant humor the next.

Theodore C. Deitrich, president and producing manager of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., has surrounded Miss Kenyon with the following assembly of contributing players: Alexander Gaden, leading man, whose work in "The Bandbox" caused Mr. Beck to engage him as screen vis-a-vis to Leah Baird in "The Capitol," Greta Hartman, Walter McEwan, Helen Montrose, Maggie Weston, Edward Keppler, Logan Paul, Lorraine Harding and William Brotherhood.

The new Doris Kenyon vehicle tells the story of an American actress who smuggles a famous pearl necklace into the United States by hiding it in the lining of a new hat and tricking her innocent fiance into carrying the bandbox, hat, pearls and all through the customs. But on the pier in New York the fiance gets the bandbox mixed with another identically the same carried by a Miss Searle, a young singer. Before Miss Searle can return the bandbox she is overtaken by her father, an international crook, because of whom she left home seven years before, and who has been on the track of the pearls all the way from London. He takes the pearls away from her and, to cover his tracks, spirits Miss Searle herself away to his "roost" on a deserted island in Long Island Sound off the Connecticut coast.

But the crook has been shadowed the whole seven years by a cousin, Wm. H. Iff, who, it turns out, is the real father of Miss Searle but whose life has been a tragedy through his distressing resemblance to the crook, a resemblance so close that even the daughter cannot tell them apart, and unjustly spurns the father through thinking him responsible for the misdeeds of the guilty cousin. In a thrilling duel by night, weirdly illuminated by the flames of the crook's lair, Iff, the genuine father, slays the imposter and proves to the grateful daughter their relationship. The jewels, fittingly enough, are consumed in the fire.

Novel Exploitation on "Upstairs and Down"

Exploitation Campaigns for "Upstairs and Down" have been so frequent and successful in almost all the large cities in the United States that it would begin to seem as if the novelties employed in putting over this picture must be nearly exhausted. However, there has been hardly any one campaign that has not developed some novelty. For example, in Omaha, where Mr. M. L. Overman is Exploitation Manager, he originated the idea of the holding a competition through the Omaha Daily News, to discover a double of Olive Thomas, the young lady who most resembled this star to be rewarded with a ride in an aeroplane over the city.

It was not required that the contestants should be actually doubles of the star, but that by make-up or otherwise, they should be able to get a picture taken which closely resemble the "Upstairs and Down" star.

As a result of this campaign which was held in connection with the showing of the picture in the Strand Theatre in Omaha, first page publicity was secured for two weeks in advance of the run. As a result of this and other novel exploitation features the Strand played to capacity business.

Monopol Runs Teaser Campaign

Monopol Pictures Company, distributors of "Crimson Shoals," the new state right attraction starring Francis Ford, has inaugurated a "direct-to-the-buyer" sales campaign which has created unusual interest throughout the country. Before putting the idea in effect, Max Cohen, president of the Monopol organization, spent several weeks making up a mailing list of responsible state-right purchasers from coast to coast.

Twice each week to all names on this list, a post card carrying "teaser" matter relative to "Crimson Shoals" is sent out. In each card one of the unique qualities of the production is brought out, with a suggestion to watch the forthcoming card for further particulars. This "teaser" service has been in operation only three weeks and the Monopol officials report the receipt of numerous inquiries from buyers whose interest has been aroused in "Crimson Shoals" through this method of advertising.

Press Book on "Miracle Man"

Up-to-the-Minute Twenty-two Page Pamphlet of Interesting Material

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just issued to exhibitors through its exchanges the press book of the George Loane Tucker production, "The Miracle Man," which is scheduled for Paramount-Artcraft release September 14th. The book is approximately 11 in. x 14 in., the dimensions recently adopted for all Paramount-Artcraft press books. Including the front and back covers it contains twenty-four pages and is the largest and most complete ever issued by the company.

The cover is of the finest coated white stock and is printed in two colors, red and black. The front cover carries the title presentation and a portrait of George Loane Tucker. The inside front cover contains photographic reproductions of all the lithograph posters which have been prepared on the production, including one-sheets, three-sheets, a six-sheet and a twenty-four; also an advance slide. These posters and the slide are obtainable at all exchanges.

The third page contains editorial comment, including short sketches of the producer, Frank L. Packard, the author, and George M. Cohan who dramatized "The Miracle Man"; comment upon the cast, a synopsis of the story and a table of contents. Backing this page, as page four, are reproductions of production cuts for use in newspaper publicity, and instructions as to how to obtain them.

Lynch Takes Hallmark Films

Big Southern Corporation Will Handle New Firm's Output in Fifteen States

S. A. LYNCH ENTERPRISES, INC., one of the largest theatre owners and distributors of pictures in the southern territory will handle the distribution of all Hallmark Picture Corporation's features in the South after September 1st, according to an announcement coming from the executive offices of Hallmark Pictures, this week. The arrangement as completed between Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Picture Corporation and a representative of the Lynch Enterprises, will also include the distribution in this territory of all the pictures previously released through Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House, two of the companies which figured in the recent merger of the Hall interests.

This arrangement, according to the directors of Hallmark Picture Corporation, will work to a big advantage in the interest of the exhibitors through the territory controlled by the Lynch Enterprises. Mr. Hall in making the announcement, said:

"In making this arrangement with the Lynch Enterprises I believe Hallmark Pictures have been placed in the hands of a most competent and thorough working organization and I expect from it quality service for the product of Hallmark and those pictures which were in the exchanges of Film Clearing House, Inc., which with other auxiliaries of the Hall interest, has been merged in the Hallmark Picture Corporation."

The states through which the Lynch Enterprises, Inc., operate are:

Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Arkansas and Missouri.

Six Simultaneous First Runs

Deal Closed in St. Louis for Goldwyns, One of the Most Extraordinary

PERHAPS one of the most remarkable deals recently reported has been consummated and arranged by Harry Kaplar, head of the Greater Amusement Co. of St. Louis, Mo., and the Goldwyn Film Co. Mr. Kaplar with what he claimed to be the greatest amount of money ever paid for first runs in the city closed the deal with Goldwyn to play their pictures at six of his largest theatres first run and day and date.

To the film exhibitors at large who do not know the condition of the motion picture business in St. Louis this will probably seem like just another one of those big deals and surprises that are taking place in the new rush for this fall's campaign in the industry. However, to those film men who have been connected at some time or other with the film situation in St. Louis, those people will recall what this means.

Heretofore the city of St. Louis has practically had but one first run account; now there are six that will play the same pictures day and date. During the past in St. Louis the local exhibitors figured that, any picture that played first run downtown was enough to hurt them in their business at their local and surburban theatres, there never was any rush on the part of the exhibitors to clamor for the second run on any picture, with the possible exception of "Mickey" or "The Red Lantern."

When Mr. Kaplar figured out what he should do in regards to the first run propositions for the Pershing, Kings, Lindell, Shenandaah, Grand Florissant, and Juniata theatres he faced quite a problem. He decided after thought, that, the only way to place his theatres before the eyes of the public of St. Louis was with a great big extensive campaign of advertising, and the fact that his six largest theatres will be devoted exclusively to the showing of nothing but first run pictures.

Blackton Picture Distributed by Pathe

"My Boy," a human interest story dealing with the vigorous life of the Kentucky mountains, and the trials and tribulations of existence in New York, will be the first of J. Stuart Blackton production to be distributed by Pathe. "My Boy" is listed as one of the fall issues.

In the cast are nearly a score of prominent motion picture players, headed by Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, whose work in previous Backton features has established them as ideal "oppositcs." Others in the cast are Van Dyke Brooke, whose character delineations in pictures and on the stage are noted for their sincerity; Julia Swayne Gordon, Margaret Barry, Fanny Rice, the famous musical comedy beauty; Leo Delaney, of Vitagraph fame; Eddie Dunn and Gus Alexander, the noted comedy duo; Louis Dean, Robert Melasch, Jay Strong, Slum Rube, and the Blackton "kiddies," Charles and Violet. The youngsters have especially strong parts in "My Boy," and their performance is certain to win for them more unstinted praise.

The first Blackton-Pathe feature was written by the Commodore himself, and worked into screen form by Stanley Olmsted.

Butler Will Exploit "Birth of a Race"

William T. Butler, late Special Representative and assistant to Lloyd Willis of United Picture theatres of Am. Inc., has been engaged by Herman Rifkin proprietor of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, to exploit "The Birth of a Race," the 10 reel production that made such a hit at the Blackstone theatre, Chicago.

Lois Weber, leading woman for Bryant Washburn, Paramount-Artcraft star, graces the center, while facing her is a scene from "The Market of Souls," in which Thomas H. Ince presents Dorothy Dalton. The scene to the right is from George Loane Tucker's production of "The Miracle Man," a Paramount-Artcraft special in the fullest sense of the word

Lionel Barrymore Soon at Work

"The Copperhead" for F. P.-Lasky to Be Begun Sept. 1

ANNOUNCEMENT is made at the Famous Players-Lasky office that the production of "The Copperhead," in which Lionel Barrymore is to appear in the leading role, will be started at the New York studios the first of September, and that Charles Maigne, who directed Irene Castle in "The Firing Line" and more recently in "Should A Wife Forgive?" will be in charge of the production.

"The Copperhead," it will be recalled, was the play which Mr. Barrymore scored the greatest success of his career, his performance being hailed by some critics as the finest piece of dramatic acting by an American actor since the days of Edwin Booth. The play ran for the entire season of 1917-18 in New York and continued for a full year thereafter in other large cities of the country.

Mr. Maigne, in speaking of the play said: "'The Copperhead' is the one all-American play and one that every American should see. I have always wanted to place this play before the public where everyone could see it and I am thankful of my opportunity. It has no 'eternal triangles' but is filled with that deeper emotion that gets everyone."

Elaborate plans are being made by the studio staff for the filming of this production. In the Art and Technical Department an entire city is being laid out. Through the courtesy of the Newark Public Library original sketches and drawings, showing the style of buildings of that period, were procured. These houses are being faithfully reproduced on paper scale. A plot of ground has been leased for a short time in the vicinity of Elmhurst, L. I., and here this city of 1846 will spring up.

The motion picture interpretation of "The Copperhead" will go further back than the stage production, beginning with the period of the Mexican War. The city to be constructed will first be shown in 1846. The next period will be 1860. Then 1862 and after that 1904. In 1846 will be seen the public wells and houses of that period. In 1860 the people and places will be more prosperous than before as they were just before the Civil War. Then in 1862 will be seen the effect of the war. Then in 1904 it will be in a fairly prosperous condition again and show some modern improvements. This naturally will take a great deal of skill to put over correctly.

The scenes of "The Copperhead" are laid in Southern Illinois, near the point where the Ohio joins the Mississippi, a section where the bitterest feeling existed between the respective sympathizers of the North and South during and for many years following the Civil War.

Lionel Barrymore, although he has appeared in motion pictures, is best known for his work on the legitimate stage, his career dating from 1893 when he was seen in "The Rivals," in which his grandmother, the late Mrs. John Drew, was appearing as Mrs. Malaprop. It was as Tony in "Arizona," in 1899, that he first commanded the attention of critics. Later he played two seasons with his uncle, John Drew. Outstanding performances which made his reputation secure were in the title role of J. M. Barrie's "Pantaloon" and in "Peter Ibbetson," in which he appeared with his brother John and Constance Collier.

Wide Variety in Pathe Season Line-up

Never in the annals of Pathe's American history has that organization been able to present such a line-up of stars and features as it will offer exhibitors during the coming season.

While still in a more or less incomplete stage, the Pathe schedule for the Fall and Winter months contains a big list of "special" attractions.

Beginning with "A Woman of Pleasure," Jesse D. Hampton production, Blanche Sweet will appear in a minimum of six and a maximum of ten special attractions under the Pathe banner during the ensuing year.

Frank Keenan will appear in eight productions, to be divided in the "special" and "series" divisions.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who has just signed a contract to release all his productions through Pathe, will make eight "specials" for 1919-1920 release. The first is "My Boy."

Albert Capellani Productions, starring June Caprice and Creighton Hale, will have a prominent position in the Pathe schedule. Following "Oh, Boy!" and "The Love Cheat," will come "A Damsel in Distress" a special offering.

Dolores Cassinelli, whose successes include "The Unknown Love" and who has just completed "The Virtuous Model," will be seen also in "The Right to Lie" another "special."

Paul Scardon Engaged for Crest Picture

Carle E. Carlton, general manager of the Crest Pictures Corporation, announces that he has engaged Paul Scardon to direct his forthcoming productions. Mr. Scardon has been identified with Vitagraph, for whom he superintended the direction of approximately thirty-nine feature pictures, one of his most recent being "The Gamblers," by Charles Klein.

Mr. Carlton's first feature film is to be "No Children Allowed." Edith Day, whose success in the musical comedy "Going Up" was one of last season's theatrical events, will appear in the play.

Mr. Carlton is planning to produce from four to six feature films with all-star casts headed by Miss Day.

Secretary Daniels Sees Film Wheels Turn

Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, visited a motion picture studio for the first time in his life while he was in Los Angeles, incident to the ceremonies welcoming the Pacific Fleet to Western waters. Not only did he get his first peek "behind the scenes," but he made his debut as an "extra."

Accompanied by Congressman H. Z. Osborne, Mayor M. P. Snyder of Los Angeles, Rear-Admirals McKean and Jayne, Commander P. W. Foote, and other naval officers of high rank, Secretary Daniels spent an interesting hour at the Los Angeles studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The distinguished visitors were made welcome by Frank A. Garbutt, a vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Cecil B. DeMille, director general; and Milton E. Hoffman, general manager of the West Coast studios.

"Man's Desire" in Place of Films Contracted

Exhibitors Mutual reports two cases where exhibitors shelved pictures already contracted for to show the Robertson-Cole feature, "Man's Desire" starring Lewis S. Stone.

The solid sold theatre, namely the Standard Theatre, Cleveland's big first run house, which has pay or play contracts with other companies, played "Man's Desire" all last week. When this theatre puts on any outside feature it means laying on the shelf and paying for another production.

Another booking for "Man's Desire" last week was John H. Kunskey's Washington Theatre, Detroit. Mr. Kunskey is said to be losing his lease on the Washington Theatre, September first, to a producing company, and he had thirty-five pictures under contract which he would have to play off or shelve during the month of August. Naturally, he had room for only four pictures. However, he agreed to see "Man's Desire," with the result that he played it all last week.

What are claimed to be the first exclusive pictures of the birth of the Polish Republic appear in the International News No. 34, the news reel put out by the International, through the Universal exchanges. General Joseph Pilsudski, President of the new born Republic and Ignace Jan Padcrewski, Prime Minister, are shown at the first convention of the Polish Parliament. The populace paraded the streets with banners bearing the legend "Hats off to Wilson!"

Directing Exchange Publicity for Universal

Joe Mayer, formerly publicity manager at the Cincinnati exchange of Universal has been brought to New York to take up the position of director of exchange publicity during the absence of Harry Rice who was injured a short time ago.

Mr. Mayer is well known in Cincinnati newspaper circles having been dramatic critic for the Commercial Tribune.

Westerners on Two Circuits

Chicago First Run Houses Book First Hampton—Great Authors' Production

CONTRACTS for complete circuit wide bookings of the Ascher Brothers and Lubliner and Trinz chains of theatres in Chicago have been signed with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Authors' production, "The Westerners," the novel of Stewart Edward White. These contracts were taken by Sidney J. Goldman, the Hodkinson Chicago manager, and follow a circuit-wide booking in New York of the United Booking Offices (Keith and Proctor time) by Marx S. Nathan, manager of the metropolitan district.

"The Westerners" will play day and date over the Chicago zone, and will be the opening attraction of the new amusement season by both of these powerful Western circuits. During the past twelve months only one other production has gone through the entire length of these two chains of theatres day and date, and that incidentally, was the Hodkinson release of "Sahara," the big J. Parker Read, Jr., Louise Glaum production.

"The Westerners" has promptly challenged the attention of the great first-run factors of the industry. Other first-runs signed during the past few days include the Colonial theatre, Akron, the Goldberg Brothers' first-run and circuit in Omaha, the Sequoia theatre, Sacramento; the Laughlin theatre, Long Beach, Cal., and more than one hundred other points, representing an even distribution across the thirty Hodkinson sales zones.

In New York during the run of "The Westerners" at the Strand theatre, no less than fourteen of the city's larger book stores devoted their windows to a display of "The Westerners," and department and drug stores also took special pains to bring the Stewart Edward White novel before the public eye.

Burston Serial Is Progressing

Fourth Episode Finished; Expect It to Rival "The Mystery of 13" Serial

FROM the Coast it is announced that the new Burston-King Baggot serial, in which the latter named is to be featured, is well under way, and that the fourth episode has been reached and passed without accident or injury to any member of the cast, in spite of several thrilling scenes in which the actors portraying leading roles took important parts.

The release title of this latest Burston production, which promises even at this early date to rival "The Mystery of 13" in popularity, has not as yet been announced. In the matter of a title, its producers will not select one until such a one is suggested as will give some idea of the serial's really thrilling story, and which at the same time will contain value from the exhibitors' standpoint.

It has been announced, however, that the already strong cast has been materially strengthened by the addition of Rhea Mitchell. Miss Mitchell has been engaged to play opposite King Bancroft, and is well known in the film world for her work in other productions. She has proved her ability in lead roles in several Thomas H. Ince productions, as well as appearances under other well-known standards.

So that the finished production will meet with all his own requirements as to excellence of photography, direction and acting, President Burston is in Hollywood himself, supervising the work. In recent wires to the New York offices, he enthusiastically commented upon the great support being given the directors and principals by the company as a whole.

Keystone Determined to Find New Ideas

Some folks may be willing to believe there isn't a new idea under the sun but the Keystone Film Company is hot on the trail of original thoughts to be used in presenting the Keystone comedies in a novel way. The search, which is to be countrywide, started in New York with the publication of a series of advertisements in all of the important newspapers, offering from $1,000 to $10,000 in cash for ideas to be used for this purpose.

Although no definite information was forthcoming from the Keystone offices, it was reported on good authority that the campaign has already borne fruit. According to this report, two of the ideas submitted in reply to the newspaper advertisements were considered so good that plans are already under way to put them into execution.

In planning the preparations of these comedies for revival, insistence will be placed on clean wholesome comedy. The aim will be to make them pictures for the whole family.

The prizes for ideas are open to exhibitors as well as to the public in general, and it is believed that their more intimate knowledge of the inner workings will give them an advantage in the contest.

Propaganda Picture Is Receiving Attention

From advices received from all parts of the United States the propaganda motion picture "Look Out For The Snake" being used by the American Defense Society in its campaign against Bolshevism is attracting nation-wide attention. It is being exhibited it is claimed in a greater number of theatres than any film shown since the distribution of Liberty Loan reels and because of the timely appeal of the subject the picture is receiving much favorable comment.

Scores of city and state officials and theatrical managers have expressed a wish to cooperate to the fullest extent in spreading the warning against acceptance of radical politics. It is estimated that several million people who could not have been reached otherwise with anti-Bolshevik arguments have been instructed and benefited through the exhibition.

Special Service Section on

Fritzi Brunette in "The Woman Under Cover"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

GENERAL SUMMARY OF FILM

EXHIBITORS who have booked "The Woman Under Cover" have secured a picture where the plot pivots about two professions which are always of interest to the public and which lend themselves well to romance and drama, the newspaper game and the acting profession.

There is a charm and a mystery about both to everyone but those actively engaged therein, and therefore this picture has something to build upon beside the essentials of a plot and the players who enact the roles.

This picture is another adaptation of a stage play, the legitimate vehicle being titled "Playing the Game," and comes from the library of stage successes of the Henry B. Harris Estate. It was directed by George Seigmann from a continuity by Harvey Thew.

Besides the star the principals in the cast are George McDaniels, Fontaine La Rue, Edward Cecil, Harry Springler, Carl Stockdale, Fred Gamble and Marion Skiner.

The locale of the offering is principally in a New York newspaper office, a theater where a musical show is running, and a fashionable apartment. There are no exteriors and no attempt to provide scenic beauty. The production is in six reels, is not burdened with excessive subtitles and its action moves forward without excess footage.

Reduced to absolute theme, the story concerns a girl reporter on a Metropolitan paper who secures the confession of a woman who has murdered her husband, but who has not been indicted. The girl gives the story to her editor in spite of the fact that her brother is implicated to a certain extent and then leaves the reportorial field to become the home manager for the editor of the paper.

Fritzi Brunette has the part of the reporter, Marion Skinner is the murderess and George McDaniels is the editor and hero.

The value of the production as a stage success may be negligible, but it is worth remembering in your billing as adaptations from books and plays are especially popular just at this time.

WHAT FEATURE IS ABOUT

THE opening sequences alternate between the theater and newspaper office, and establish the identity of the characters, and that the popular actor husband of one of the members of the show troupe doesn't get on well with his wife. After a scene in their dressing-room she shoots the actor and unobserved by everyone but the girl reporter's brother who is in love with the woman. These scenes are well presented and get the story away to a good start.

Sequences in the newspaper offices inform that the editor is in love with the girl reporter and that the owner of the paper insists that the sheet scoop the field on penalty of the whole force being discharged. The chance of doing this seems small, unless the murder mystery can be solved. Efforts along this line are unavailing until the brother who has exacted a promise of marriage from the murderess under duress, becomes jealous of a rival and goes to the newspaper office with his story. He signs a statement and the type is set for the spread. In the meantime an attempt is made to get the woman to confess. This is accomplished when the brother goes to her apartment and meets the man whom she wishes to marry. The girl would save her brother the disgrace of being implicated in the affair, but her loyalty to the paper is greater than this desire, and she telephones the editor to start the presses. The editor comes to find the girl and they close the reel with some very clever scenes in which newspaper terms are used to tell the audience that they have started on the route to marital happiness.

COMPARISONS AND OPINIONS

Compared to other releases from this same source, this offering ranks well enough and carries some suspense and enough originality of development to allow it place among the better class of program features.

At no time does it rise to any great heights, but at all times does it keep consistently to its theme and its individual scenes are marked by considerable interest. It will please in houses where people do not want too much originality in plot and who are satisfied as long as a story keeps going without resort to useless padding or scenes which have no bearing on the story. This ranks very closely to melodrama at times and the suspense is largely provided by the two rivals for the widow's affections.

At no time is there any doubt concerning the love affair of the two principals nor are there any complications to this romance, the development of the plot having to do largely with the way the murderess will be brought to justice. This accomplished, the interest in the picture is at an end, except to see the two lovers plight their troth. What becomes of the brother or the newspaper afterward is inconsequential.

ADVERTISING ANGLES

IF Miss Brunette is popular you will of course play her up to good advantage. If she isn't and you have booked the picture, it is up to you to protect your own financial interests by trying to make her so. Some of the other members of the cast will probably mean something to your audiences, people as a rule being well versed in supporting players as well as the stars. If there are any of those mentioned who are favorites give them a place in your billing.

Mention of the fact that this was in the original a stage play should by all means be made, even if you are in doubt that this fact will carry weight. It is one of the legitimate angles on which you have to work.

Characters other than the star who appear in "The Woman Under Cover"

Advertising This Film as a Newspaper Theatrical Story

We have told you that there is interest in newspaper and theater stories, so you should explain that this is one where the two professions are used as a background.

As to what to do in the publicity line we suggest the usual liberal use of lithographs and the buying of liberal newspaper space. In addition you may make good use of the "stills" which are provided in a large assortment of scenes and which depict interesting action. In billing close to your theatre, try mounting some of these stills on nice cardboard, with a caption underneath, and get them in windows if you can.

As for a lobby display this subject is one which admits of something along that line. You might dress your lobby over into a stage by hanging wood flys on the ceiling, and providing wood wings for the sides with a back drop covering the entrance, except for an opening which will suggest a hole in a stone wall or something of that order.

Or you might build an orthodox stage entrance of scenery, with the "No admittance" door out on the street, and some old character who will look like the kind of an old super people have been led to believe guard back stage around every theatre sitting in a chair outside.

The no admittance sign would attract attention, and passing into the lobby through the single door will be a novelty.

If your lobby is large enough so that after you have filled it up with your scenic wall of a theatre, if there is room you might construct a 24-sheet stand and paste up a lithograph of "The Woman Under Cover."

If you want to add further atmosphere, get some girls and dress them up in clothes of the ballet and let them hang around the entrance as is the usual thing about a stage entrance, where the chorus is not too busy changing their costumes.

You might have one sitting on the doorkeepers' knee part of the time. A call boy could also be added.

If you go in for prologues, there is plenty of opportunity to use a pony ballet on the stage and have the number fade out and into the film itself with actual dancing in the film being depicted.

"THE WOMAN UNDER COVER"

A FEATURE which has many angles in which audiences will find interest and amusement. It is straight drama with very little attempt at comedy, with Miss Brunette, who will be remembered for her work in "The Sealed Envelope,'" "Play Things," "The Velvet Hand," etc., in a role of a girl reporter.

She is ably supported by a rather large cast of principals.

The story is an adaptation of the stage play, "Playing the Game," produced by the Henry B. Harris Estate.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAY ADVICE

We suggest some catch lines for your newspaper advertising:

"Her loyalty to her brother was only exceeded by her devotion to her work—"

"The Theatre and the Newspaper combine in forming a background for—"

"The Girl Reporter scooped them all and saves her lover editor's position in—"

For some selling talk we offer the following:

"A story from a stage success produced by Henry B. Harris, filled with suspense and romance and surrounded by the glamour of the stage and newspaper life. Fritzi Burnette is a newspaper reporter in this picture. She solved a murder mystery for her editor and then promised to marry him."

"The girl reporter solved the mystery of the murder of a famous actor, saved her editor lover his position and won for herself a worthy husband. This is a story builded with the theatre and the newspaper life as a background and provides entertainment of the best sort."

"A famous actor was murdered and no one could prove who fired the shot. A girl reporter on a Metropolitan newspaper solved the mystery, having to choose between loyalty to her scapegrace brother and devotion to her editor, in so doing. It is an interesting story with the theatrical and newspaper life of a great city as a background."

PREPARED FOR YOUR USE

THE producers' aids on this will be found adequate. There are one, three and six sheets in assorted styles, all of which advertise the feature to good advantage. Newspaper cuts have been prepared and also a special layout to which you only need to add the date lines, name of the theatre and such other information as you may desire.

Photographs of scenes from the production are available at the usual prices and show the action of the productions to good advantage.

A musical synopsis has been prepared which will give your orchestra leader all the information he requires for his musical program.

Holmes Serial in Big Demand

Rights in Many States Are Bought; Canadian Rights Also Disposed Of

SHERMAN S. KRELLBERG is meeting with success in selling the state rights to the new Helen Holmes Serial, "The Fatal Fortune." Mr. Krellberg, president and general manager of the S. L. K. Serial Corporation, which company is producing this serial, announces the sale during the past week of the following territories: California, Nevada, Consolidated Film Corporation of California; Canadian rights, purchased by J. C. Brady, president of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Ltd.; Michigan, purchased by A. S. Hyman, president of the Hyman Attractions, Western Illinois and Indiana, purchased by J. L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Company. In addition to these, the entire world rights have been sold with the following few exceptions: Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, North Dakota, Nebraska, Utah, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Louisiana, Kentucky, and Upper New York.

Many novel features in the way of advertising novelties will be at the command of the exhibitors who book the new S. L. K. Series featuring Helen Holmes in "The Fatal Fortune."

A beautiful pocket mirror with a handsome photograph of Helen Holmes on the back may be used as a souvenir, and presented to the patrons at the showing of the first episode. These mirrors while inexpensive are unusually attractive, and will be carried by the women in their handbags for years.

Another novelty is that of a song entitled "Pretty Helen," the words of which were dedicated to Helen Holmes. Copies may be had very reasonably and also used as souvenirs. These songs are sure to help the exhibitor exploit "The Fatal Fortune" because a copy of the song on the piano is a twenty-four sheet in every home.

The Herald's measure, 11 x 28, and are of various colored paper with sensational pen sketched drawings which will surely attract attention. The big idea of exploiting this serial is to circus it, and if the exhibitor will only use the advertising which is available, it is claimed he can't go wrong.

Feature Starring House Peters Is Begun

This week additional producing activities were in evidence at the Garson studio when Monte M. Katterjohn began making his first production which has been titled "Love, Honor and Obey," with House Peters in the featured role. Al Green, who was director for Selig several years ago, and more recently has been associated with Marshall Neilan up until July 1st, when he accepted a position as director for Fox, will be in charge of filming this subject, which had to do with present-day problems of married life. Katterjohn, who is the author of this story, will serve in the supervising capacity, and it will be the first Katterjohn Production released through the Equity Pictures Corporation.

Christie Studios Will Be Further Enlarged

In order to take care of the increased volume and scale of productions which have already been undertaken and mapped out for the coming twelve months, the Christie Film Company has found it necessary to elaborate on the recently planned improvements of its property occupying the city blocks at Sunset and Gower streets, Hollywood.

The program of enlargements which is called for by the demands of the two-reel Special productions now under way and for the regular schedule of Christie comedies includes three new stages, the largest of which will be 186 by 80 feet in dimensions.

Story Picked for Owen Moore

Selznick Announces "Piccadilly Jim," by Wodehouse, for Stars Re-appearance

AFTER many weeks of the most painstaking search for exactly the right story for the first of the Owen Moore pictures to be produced by the Selznick Pictures Corporation, Myron Selznick has bought P. G. Wodehouse's novel, "Piccadilly Jim," for this purpose. Wesley Ruggles will direct the production.

"Piccadilly Jim" appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post, and the unique story and character creation created a literary sensation. Mr. Wodehouse already had been successful as a playwright and author of various magazine articles, but this story at once placed him at the top in still another profession, that of novelist. The book rights for the story were acquired immediately by the Dodd Mead Company, which will publish the novel very shortly. Comstock and Gest have secured the dramatic rights, and preparations are now being made for a big production to be staged as early in the fall as theartical conditions permit. It is probable, however, that the picture production will be completed before the play reaches the footlights.

The character in the story from which "Piccadilly Jim" gets its name is one which is perfectly adapted to Owen Moore's personality. He is best described as an aristocrat with a sense of humor. In fact, while the story is romantic, it is the characteristic Wodehouse humor which makes it distinctive even more than its unique plot. The story is such that a remarkably magnificent production can be built around it, and preparations are already under way to this end.

It is now several weeks since the series of Owen Moore productions was announced as forthcoming.

Many States Sold for "Hall Room Boys"

Joe Brandt, special Eastern representative of the National Film Corporation, reports that State Rights territory on the "Hall Room Boys" comedies is selling fast.

Although the announcement was only made a few days ago that Mr. Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn had decided to offer the series of comedies to the State Rights buyers, the response was so quick that already a great deal of territory has been closed.

Within the last few days the Standard Film Service of Cleveland bought the rights for the States of Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky, while California, Arizona and Nevada rights were purchased by the Consolidated Film Corporation of California, with offices in San Francisco and Los Angeles. Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia have been acquired by the Quality Films Corporation of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Freedman of Celebrated Players, Chicago, has signed contracts purchasing the rights to the States of Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana and the rights for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey have been bought by Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia.

Gertrude Atherton Returns Satisfied

Abraham Lehr, Vice-President of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and in charge of the western studios was the only one to utter a word of complaint when Gertrude Atherton arrived to confer on the production of her novel, "Perch of the Devil," for Eminent Authors. "Here we are all smiling and bowing and kowtowing to Gertrude Atherton, the famous novelist," he said, "and yet she comes out here and is apparently only anxious to get away and go back east."

Mrs. Atherton returned to New York last week and expressed complete confidence in the Goldwyn studio organization. Besides her first picture, she had discussed two more with J. G. Hawkes, Editor in chief, with Rupert Julian and Mr. Lehr.

More Enlargements on Goldwyn Studios

Within twenty days eight companies will be making pictures at the huge Culver City studios of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Six directors are busy, T. Hayes Hunter having commenced this week. Wallace Worsley starts Monday, and Rupert Julian begins September 1. The added production makes the plant a very busy place, and to properly accommodate this large staff it was necessary to make considerable enlargements. A new $25,000 stage is nearing completion. It will allow eight companies to work at once.

Several buildings are under way, the largest being a concrete power house for the new motor-generator set.

"Checkers!" It's the exhibitors' move. William Fox releases "Checkers," under the schedule arranged for the season of 1919-1920, on August 31.

"Checkers" is a screen adaptation of the great racing melodrama—the play by Henry B. Blossom, Jr., which for years in its original stage form crowded theatres in every part of the globe.

Desmond's Newest Offering

"Dangerous Waters" First Fall Offering for Jesse B. Hampton, Star Player

"DANGEROUS Waters," presented by Jesse D. Hampton, will be William Desmond's first picture on the Robertson-Cole fall schedule distributed by Exhibitors Mutual. It is a society drama based on events that happened a few years ago in New York. Desmond plays the part of a wealthy society man, who returns from his ranch in the West expecting to find happiness with the girl. She, however, is so satiated with society life that she is not all she should be to him. To give her a taste of the unconventional, the idler arranges an Olympian banquet. The revels almost result in the girl losing her reputation, but Jimmy is there to protect it, and before it is too late she realizes that Jimmy Moulton is the man, the man whom she really loves.

The Bacchanalian revels at the Olympian feast are scenes that are said to have seldom been attempted in a picture. They are unusual, picturesque and lavish it is stated. The event takes place in the Ritz, where the ball room is transformed into a rocky grotto. The guests are all accustomed to represent the various gods of the Pantheon. The feast is a reproduction of one that was held by New York society some years ago, and which created what amounted to a sensation.

The unusual events based on real happenings is said to give the picture a value to exhibitors that can seldom be attained by a production. It also offers widespread exploitation possibilities.

Midnight Show of "The Brat"

Nazimova Hostess to Select, Critical Audience at First Exhibition

WITH a select gathering of studio associates as her guests, Nazimova was hostess the other night at a special pre-view of her newest screen production, "The Brat," in which Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger present the Russian artiste and which is scheduled for first of September release by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Nazimova selected The Iris theatre, on Hollywood Boulevard, a short motor ride from her studios in Hollywood, for this pre-showing of her new picture. For, as well as for her guests, it was the first time she was to see the completed production, with titles approved and passed and with the seven reels spun off through a projection machine to the accompaniment of a special musical score.

It was her first view of "The Brat" in its final form, notwithstanding that the star had assisted daily in the cutting and titling of the picture.

The showing was unique in many respects. The time of the pre-view was midnight, and those who had gathered in the small, darkened theatre too witness the latest and most signal instance of Nazimova's versatility, resembled in all ways those present at the dress rehearsal of a spoken play. The showing, moreover, constituted in its small and analytical audience, a test of unusual severity. Lighting, direction and the work of the entire cast were subjected to the most searching and critical scrutiny.

Among those who attended the midnight showing in the Iris theatre, in addition to Nazimova and Director General Karger were Mrs. Karger, Charles Bryant, leading man to Nazimova and co-adapter of "The Brat"; Herbert Blache, who directed the picture, and Madame Blache, June Mathis, Al. E. Kelly and John Ince.

"The Golden Shower"

Gladys Leslie has begun her next Vitagraph feature. "The Golden Shower," by Marie Eve. John W. Nobe, who directed Miss Leslie's last picture, "The Gray Towers Mystery," is directing the new picture.

Say "Birth of a Race" Is a Winner

The manner in which "The Birth of A Race" is said to be booking and cleaning up for exhibitors bears out the judgment of Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, who declared it a winner as soon as he saw it and then immediately made arrangements to handle it in the New York territory.

"Probably," says Mr. Hirsh, "few pictures of recent years has created the great interest that 'The Birth of A Race' has. Literally it has taken the public by storm, playing to enormous business wherever offered and breaking box office records in most every instance. I am particularly well pleased that I was fortunate enough to get this picture for the large number of exhibitors that I do business with."

Reynolds, Author of Serial Story

Sidney Reynolds, president of Supreme Pictures, is said by the publicity department of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., to be the author of the 15 episode serial starring J. Robert Pauline, the former hypnotist and vaudeville star, who has appeared repeatedly before the public of every city of importance in the United States, as well as on the European continent. Mr. Reynolds has written and been responsible for the success of many feature productions and is said to have incorporated some unique effects in this serial which are strikingly different from anything ever attempted on the screen.

Lois Weber to Direct Again Soon

Following a long vacation in the East, during which time she underwent a successful operation on her arm, Lois Weber, who recently signed a contract to make a series of productions for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to Los Angeles, accompanied by her husband, Phillip Smalley.

Miss Weber expects to commence work on her first Paramount-Artcraft production early in October.

"Give Best Pictures" Robertson-Cole's Policy

Fiscal Year Will See Release of Fifty-two Features, and Added Specials and Scenics

THE announcement of Robertson-Cole, covering the fiscal year of 1919-1920 with the release of fifty-two features, twelve specials, comedies, scenics and new Martin Johnson pictures, shows a remarkable broadening of scope, increase in number and raising of the standard of productions to be released by that organization for distribution by Exhibitors Mutual.

The fifty-two features will be released as Robertson-Cole Superior Pictures. They will be produced by Brentwood, Haworth, Jesse D. Hampton, B. B. Features Inc., and Beatriz Michelena Pictures. Southern California Producing Company will furnish a one-reel comedy each week and Martin Johnson's new series will be pictures of unexplored parts of the South Pacific, which he is now taking. Haworth will be one of the producers of the twelve specials, completing the year's releases.

The five Robertson-Cole stars, Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale, H. B. Warner, William Desmond and Beatriz Michelena will appear in new series of pictures. In addition, three new stars have been engaged. Miss Edith Storey will be the first of these to start work on a series of eight pictures.

This will mark Miss Storey's return to the screen after an absence of two years. Without doubt the public and exhibitor alike, will welcome her return under the Robertson-Cole banner.

Announcement concerning the other stars, one of whom is a man, said to have the highest box office value, and the other, a woman of equal reputation, will be made by Robertson within the next few weeks.

In summarizing the policy for the coming year, an official of the Robertson-Cole organization declared, "The one and only policy of Robertson-Cole is, to secure the best pictures, pictures that will make money for the exhibitor and satisfy public demand." With this in view, Robertson-Cole will release only Superior Pictures.

"The first of the new Superior Pictures will be released in October, continuing througout the year at the rate of one each week. Sessue Hayakawa will be starred in a series of eight of them, produced by Haworth; B. B. Features will make eight pictures with Bessie Barriscale; George E. Middleton will direct Beatriz Michelena in two more pretentious productions this year, and Jesse D. Hampton will present H. B. Warner in six pictures, succeeding, "The Man Who Turned White" and "The Pagan God," and William Desmond in two. Haworth will also produce the eight Edith Storey offerings. Brentwood will furnish three additional productions directed by King W. Vidor. Four of the twelve specials will be produced by Haworth. Contracts for the other eight are being arranged and will be concluded within a few weeks.

Fifty-two Strand Comedies, each measuring up to the highest refined comedy standards and a series of unique scenics photographed in all parts of the world and having an educational as well as entertaining value which will serve to round out a well balanced program for theatres.

"Martin Johnson is now visiting unexplored islands of the South Pacific taking a new series of pictures which will be included among the year's releases. These pictures will be entirely different from "Cannibals of the South Seas" which created a sensation in that they will show only the very unusual and unheard of conditions as discovered by this famous photographer in his trip of exploration.

The talent of the Robertson-Cole stars will be utilized to the fullest extent. They will be cast in strong roles in the best stories that the market can furnish. Some of the best authors in this country are now writing for companies producing for Robertson-Cole. Among these writers whose works are now being produced by Haworth, B. B. Features and Jesse D. Hampton are Bret Harte, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Arthur Stringer and P. G. Wodehouse.

"There will be no lowering of the quality established by Robertson-Cole under any circumstances and exhibitors may rest assured that all pictures during the coming year will measure up to the classification required, that of the highest standard of excellence.

"Comparing a resume of the activities of the Robertson-Cole for the past year with the plans laid out for the coming year, an almost phenomenal growth is represented.

"It was in January that Robertson-Cole's first contribution to the silent drama appeared on the domestic film market, Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South seas." Several years of success in the exporting trade was back of the Robertson-Cole movement in the United States—experience that has resulted in that organization becoming one of the staunchest business firms in the country.

"During the past eight months, since the release of the Johnson feature, Robertson-Cole has placed before the public through its distributing agents, Exhibitors Mutual, about forty features, among them some of the best productions of the current season."

"Right to Happiness" Has First Showing

Even if the "Right to Happiness" were not noteworthy in its timely theme, this latest Universal-Jewel production of Dorothy Phillips would probably, Universal believes, have an instant reception because of the star's past work. This is the statement made by the sponsors of the exceptional drama which is to have its premier showing at the Park theatre, New York City, Saturday night, August 31.

In this new screen drama Miss Phillips is said to rise to the heights of her career in dramatic roles. She in every way compares, so Universal officials believe, with the greatest stage actresses of today or yesterday.

First Weber Subject for World

The Lawrence Weber Productions have notified the World Pictures that the first of their series of special features they will make for the World Company will be put in work this coming week.

The initial subject will be a picturization of "The Blue Pearl," Anne Crawford Flexner's play that was the opening attraction at the Longacre theatre last season. Edith Hallor has been selected as the star.

On Lasky Sales Force

Frederick P. Flannagan has been added to the sales force of the Educational Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under the general management of Nathan H. Friend.

Advocates Contact With Public

Robertson-Cole Official Sees Benefit in Connection

"THE great drawback to the producer of motion pictures is, to my opinion, the lack of direct connection between those who actually produce the picture and the alternate consumer,—the picture public," states Mr. L. C. Haynes, president of the Brentwood Pictures Corporation now making Robertson-Cole features for distribution by Exhibitors Mutual. "However due to the wide success of our two recent Robertson-Cole features we have in a sense established a contact with the public and "The Other Half," I believe we are giving the public just what it wants.

"The market has been surfeited with eternal triangle and grimly melodramatic photoplays and the demand appears to be for wholesome, sane and constructively optimistic pictures. Pictures presenting naturalness and truth-to-life in story built on a strong theme and imparting cheerfulness and thoughts of practical benefit are a panacea for the general unrest following the war.

"The Other Half" is a clean and wholesome picture, free from sensationalities and touching upon one vital subject so pertinent to social unrest, the effect of the war on our young men and whether those effects are lasting.

"Taking the subject from a constructive viewpoint, 'The Other Half' shows that one of the great lessons learned is brotherly love and the breaking down of class distinction barriers and that this lesson is so moulding itself into the characters that it will be lasting.

"'The Other Half' does not attempt to moralize nor is it a preachment. It is a simple appealing story of two young men, from the two classes of life, the aristocracy and 'the other half' the masses, who have become buddies through trench life and resume their former stations of life. Of course they have their sweethearts and the lesson is so strong that it not only breaks down the barriers between the two girls but demonstrates that their is no real human barrier between capital and labor.

"'The Other Half' is a King W. Vidor picture breathing the same sane optismism and cheerful uplift that pervaded 'Better Times' and 'The Turn in the Road' which he also wrote and directed and which contributed so largely toward their success.

"'The Other Half' follows the Brentwood policy of having no individual star. There are four principal characters in the story and to make them all ring true to every human instinct it was necessary to have all four players of the highest type.

"The Fatal Fortune" is the title of the S. L. K. serial in which daring Helen Holmes has the star part. This is one of the interesting moments in the picture

Earle Williams as the French-Canadian in Walter's "The Wolf," which Vitagraph has adapted for the screen

Aywon Release Plays to S. R. O. Sign

Since Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, took over the bookings of "The Law of Nature" he reports it has been going like a house afire. As a matter of cold fact, exhibitors all over are said to be cleaning up on it while in Greater New York the S. R. O. sign has been hung out at theatres where it has been shown.

"The Law of Nature," through the efforts of Mr. Hirsh, played a very successful week's engagement at the Majestic Theatre, New York City, while it scored equally as strongly at the Mount Morris, on the David Picker circuit, the Sydney Cohen circuit, in the Loew theatres and many others.

A Universal Offering

"The Strange Case of Cavendish," a most absorbing story written by Randall Paris, well-known author of such books as "The Devil's Own," "When Wilderness Was King," and "My Lady of the North." It has been adapted for the screen by William Pigott for Universal, and scenarioized by Karl Coolidge. Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin have the leading roles.

S-L Feature Good Road Show Attraction

The interest manifested by exhibitors in all sections of the country in "Virtuous Men," the first S-L production, has increased steadily since the initial presentation of the picture several months ago. The various purchasers of territorial rights to the E. K. Lincoln feature report long runs and continued bookings of the production by the representative exhibitors of the field.

T. E. Larson, purchaser of "Virtuous Men" for thirteen states in the west and southwest, announced this week the first run of the feature in his territory at the Royal Theatre, Tulsa, Okla. The S-L production will be presented for a two-week run and an extensive advertising campaign has been inaugurated in its behalf by Larson. It will open on August 31st.

In many instances the various buyers of "Virtuous Men" are presenting the first S-L offering as a road show attraction at legitimate theatre prices. It is said that thirteen companies of the production are at present touring in various parts of the country.

Equity Closing on Territory

Entire United States Soon Sold for "Eyes of Youth" Releases in October

FRANCHISES for territorial rights for Equity Pictures Corporation are reported as being closed very rapidly and at present President H. K. Sonborn is on the West Coast conferring with Harry Garson of the Garson studios.

In the middle west Joseph I. Schnitzer of the Equity is meeting the prospective franchise men and report has it that all the United States will soon be disposed of.

Within two weeks the first Clara Kimball Young production will be completed and "Eyes of Youth" will therefore be released in October. This is said to be just the first of ten productions a year which Equity will handle. The executives of this company emphasize that they are not dealing in the so-called program calibre of pictures.

"Nothing but the biggest and best productions, fully worthy of the real 'special' class, will be distributed or produced by Equity Pictures Corporation," declared Mr. Schnitzer. "Miss Young will produce four of these, there will be four by another well-known star, and two surprise super-specials."

Harry Garson is declared to be very active since moving into the new Garson studios on the West Coast and says that "Eyes of Youth," starring Clara Kimball Young, will far surpass all her past productions.

Mr. Garson has signed House Peters for a long term contract and he will have the leading role in Monte M. Katterjohn's play, "Love, Honor and Obey." In support of Mr. Peters in this production will appear the following well-known screen artists: Mary Alden, Ruth Sinclair, Sam Sothern, Mildred Riordan and Edward M. Kimball.

"Love, Honor and Obey" will be directed by Alfred E. Green, under the personal supervision of Harry Garson. Dave Kesson will handle the camera.

Gareth Hughes has also been placed under a three years' contract by Mr. Garson for juvenile leading roles. And Harah Ellis Ryan, woman author, has contracted to write five big special plays for Clara Kimball Young.

First Drury Lane Production

"The Best of Luck" Announced as the First of Acquired Plays for Screen

THE first of the six Drury Lane melodramas purchased by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, for all-star productions to be made by Screen Classics, Inc., will be "The Best of Luck." Selection of "The Best of Luck" as the initial picturization of the English plays was announced by Maxwell Karger, who will supervise every detail of these elaborate dramas in their conversion to the silver sheet.

"The Best of Luck," the most recent as well as one of the best known of the Drury Lane plays, was first produced in London on September 27, 1916, and despite the tension of the British public due to the world war, ran for several months and drew tremendous audiences nightly to the Theatre Royal (Drury Lane). Madge Titheradge, familiar to American theatre audiences by her work in the leading role of the English stage production, "The Butterfly On the Wheel," enacted the leading feminine role in "The Best of Luck."

Besides Miss Titheradge there were forty-four principal characters in the spectacular piece, and a host of supernumeraries figuring in the thrilling scenes of massed dramatic action. "The Best of Luck" is from the pens of Henry Hamilton, Arthur Collins and the late Cecil Raleigh. It was produced at Drury Lane by Mr. Collins.

A Link Added to the Pioneer Chain

The seventh link to the fast growing chain of Pioneer Cooperative Exchanges will be the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, controlling the eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey territory.

Ben Amsterdam and L. Korson, two of the best known exchangemen in the Quaker City are behind the Masterpiece, and were in New York for the better part of last week completing the arrangements for the early release of the full list of Pioneer attractions.

The main offices of the Masterpiece at 1235 Vine street, are being enlarged to take care of the big increase in business which is expected as a result of the deal.

The Masterpiece Film Attractions will offer for immediate release "Virtuous Sinners," "Sins of the Children," and Henry B. Walthall in "The Boomerang" and the "Long Arm of Mannister." The other productions are "The Girl From Nowhere," "Suspicion," and Grace Davison and Conway Tearle in "Atonement."

Minter Picture Given by New York World

That it pays to advertise in photoplay trade papers is conclusively proven in the case of Realart Pictures Corporation, according to the publicity department of that company. The insert of Mary Miles Minter which appeared in the trade journals dated August 16 and August 30 included a reproduction of a portrait of the little Realart star as its most outstanding feature and the many requests that have come from exhibitors from all over the country for this picture prove beyond doubt to Realart officials that the trade papers have a very wide circulation, that they are well read and that the subscribers have vital interest in what is going on in photoplay circles.

In order to satisfy the demands for this picture of Mary Miles Minter, which have flowed into the home office and the twenty branches, Realart is having 1,000,000 extra copies printed. The largest part of the—600,000—will be circulated by the New York World, one of the leading metropolitan dailies, with its issue of Sunday, September 14.

Lardner Tales in Film Expected to Go Big

Although Ring W. Lardner, author of the "Dear Al" stories in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines of national circulation, is one of America's foremost humorists and is one of the highest paid authors today, the new series of comedies, "So This Is America!" which are being produced by the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, mark the first of his work to reach the screen.

Because of the Lardner genius for writing humor that has practically a universal appeal, Nathan H. Friend, general manager of the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky predicts that Lardner's work on the screen will have even a greater vogue than his writings in magazines.

Nazimova in "The Brat"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

THERE is little use of beginning this section with the usual If you are going to book this picture. Every exhibitor who can get "The Brat" at a price which he thinks will allow him a proper amount of net profit will run it. Those who can't get it will have regrets.

To begin with Nazimova's reputation is made. With the string of successes each dominated by this star's energetic, vibrant personality, she has had she now has come into the class of the sure fire box office attraction and will remain there until something happens to make the public lose faith in her productions.

If this is a fact and we believe that it is, the exhibitor has only the angle of the particular vehicle in which she appears to consider. In "The Brat" you have first for consideration the fact that it is an adaptation of a play which made a great hit on the legitimate stage and in which Maude Fulton was starred. This production besides having a big run in New York toured the country successfully and has also been used to quite an extent in stock. The picture adaptation therefore comes to you with a reputation and the title itself means something to your patrons. That a person may have seen the stage version will not detract from it as a box office attraction. It will rather add to it.

IN presenting Nazimova in the role of this girl of the chorus who in spite of her surroundings chooses poverty and suffering rather than the "easiest way" because of an inate virtue, a role has been provided which is entirely different than anything she has yet done. She is presented as an American girl, in an American story of the type which seems to please American audiences best. In the film depiction of a girl who has never had an opportunity to enjoy the good things of life, falling in love with and being loved by, the good man of prosperous circumstances, and after a series of incidents proving fictionally that the course of true love does not run smoothly, marrying him to live happy ever after.

There may be those who argue that this is commonplace which is true yet nevertheless this is the sort of a story which American audiences like if the development of the plot is kept human and convincing and the cast which interprets it is adequate to the demands of the roles.

This is the sort of a story which Nazimova and her supporting cast have in "The Brat."

The scenario for the "Brat" was written by June Mathis from the original script by Maude Fulton (Miss Fulton wrote the play and starred in it) and the direction is by Maxwell Karger. In both cases the tasks have been well done. The continuity is excellent and the direction adequate. The production has been well staged, good sets being provided and the matter of details well taken care of.

THE screening of "The Brat" is through art titles, and the opening sequence is New York's sky line photographed at night.

The first action scenes show Charles Bryant as Maximillian Forrester, an author of novels trying to write a book with a girl of the slums as his leading character, a type with which he is not familiar.

Other introductory scenes follow introducing Amy Van Ness as the authors mother, Frank Currier as a Bishop of the "well fed but sincere type," Bonnie Hill as Forrester's fiance. They also depict the author as rather eccentric and absent minded absorbed in his work to the exclusion of everything else. Another sequence begins in which Darrell Ross is introduced as Maxmillian Forrestor's brother, and showing Nazimova as a chorus girl, a rehearsal being in progress with Nazimova as one of the participants and Stephen Forrester watching the events with the evident intention of picking out one of the girls for his own entertainment. His choice falls on Nazimova but she refuses the offer of a good time at the price asked, and is discharged by the manager. It is here that she gets her title of "The Brat."

These scenes at the theatre where the rehearsal is being held are well carried out and the character of Stephen Forrester that of a young man about town sowing his wild oats and believing that all women of a certain class, meaning any that have to work for their living are fair game, to men who have the money to pay for what they want.

WITH "The Brat" out of a job and in despair because she has no home and hungry, Stephen thinks his conquest will be easy. He follows "The Brat" up the street through a pouring rain, which is most realistic, and overtakes her at the entrance of a store. His overtures are again refused and when he insists a struggle follows. A policeman comes to the scene and Stephen tells the officer that the girl has accosted him. "The Brat" is taken to the night court. With Maximillian Forrester, eating is of second consideration and social etiquette a matter of no importance, so when an idea strikes him that he can find the kind of a girl he is writing about in the police court and from talking with her learn what he wants to have his fictional character do and say, he leaves the dinner table where he and the people mentioned having been dining and rushes to a court where a friend of his presides. "The Brat" is one of those waiting trial. Maxmillian chooses "The Brat" as the type he wants for his work and secures her release.

These scenes in the police court are well staged, many good types being assembled which provide atmosphere.

Forrester takes the Brat to his home. For some footage sequences follow which do not advance the story but which do allow Nazimova to clinch her characterization, and during which many good titles we should judge lines from the play are used. The first action bearing on the story to follow is when Stephen comes home broke after losing at poker at his club and recognizes the girl. Good suspense is secured here as to what will happen. However, both Stephen and the girl remain silent.

FOLLOWING this are more scenes principally characterization, showing the author and the girl at work, the latter having been provided good clothes. Of course the other characters appear in these scenes but they do not advance the story.

These sequences are not to be considered just padding, however, for the reason that the star makes them interesting by her characterization.

The next advance in the story is a scene disclosing that Stephen has forged his brothers name to a note and that the money lender is threatening exposure. He is also drinking heavily and "The Brat" who has been intrusted with the key of a wall safe, locks the decanter compartment and keeps the key.

The book is finished but the author doesn't like it. It has an unhappy ending "The Brat" shooting herself. During a discussion between "The Brat" and the author, Stephen comes in for a second time asking for money. He is refused because his brother is out of funds until his book just completed is sold, except some bills the sum not being identified in the picture which have been lying on the table, and which you are told by a speaking title are to be given to some one who has earned them.

Stephen needing a drink insists on having the key to the decanter cupboard and by mistake "The Brat" gives him the key to the money safe. Stephen registers the temptation to take the money placed there by his brother for some other person.

The next sequences are rather convenient. "The Brat" is pressed into service to dance at a charity theatrical performance and all the Forrester household attend. In these scenes rather interesting but having little to do with the story "The Brat" dances a number she learned when rehearsing for the musical comedy but is heart broken when through the efforts of Forrester's fiance a pistol shot cue is missed off stage and the finale of her act ruined.

Three column head cut of Nazimova. Suitable for any sort of paper

WHILE the others are at the theater, Stephen decides to steal the money and goes to his home with the key which will open the wall safe. The supposition will be that the Brat stole the money.

"The Brat," now that the book is finished and her dance has proven a failure goes back to the Forrester home to change her clothes for those she wore when she came before leaving the house for good. On her dressing table she finds the envelope with the money Maximillian had refused Stephen. She starts to go out but on her way surprises Stephen rifling the wall safe. Knowing that he will be disgraced unless he can pay his debt, "The Brat" gives the money to Stephen and begins to pick up the papers which he has thrown from the safe on the floor. While engaged in this Maximillian and the rest of the family return and they infer that she has attempted to rob the safe. To save Stephen she allows them to believe that she is guilty. Stephen overhears, however, and rushes into the room and tells the truth. "The Brat is vindicated, the mother accepts her as an equal, Forrester's fiance returns his ring and "The Brat" becomes the promised bride of Maximillian. All of which especially the latter sequences are conventional and convenient. Nevertheless Nazimova has been able to lift the action of the scenes until they register as good drama in spite of a certain obviousness.

IF you are going to figure that any picture in which Nazimova appears has a market already established for it, and we see no reason why it should not have, your main idea should be to sell the star, with the story a second consideration, but in view of the fact that this picture is an adaptation of a very well known play you will find it profitable to give this story more attention than if it was an original plot selected or written for the star.

However, in both cases your advertising should be along dignified lines, but strong enough to let every one know that Nazimova has made another picture and will show it at your theatre on certain dates.

If you are booking for a centrally located house, one which may expect to draw from all parts of your city or even from other cities you should not neglect the bill boards going well out of your own section in billing the picture.

It is probable that the reputation of Nazimova is much wider than that which you have established for her. Neighborhood houses have played her other successes, people have seen her former pictures in other cities and have read about them and the star. Consequently your job on this is to reach everyone who will want to see this latest production regardless of whether they naturally belong among your clientele. To do this you will have to do a lot of advertising. For an extended campaign in advertising there is no better medium than the newspapers and the bill board stands.

BILLBOARDS tell their story quickly and to people who may not read an ad in the papers. There is also a certain psychology in a big 24-sheet stand. It is exemplified in the business a circus does. The bigger the flash, the larger people seem to think the show will be. This same rule holds good in advertising anything, especially amusement enterprises.

This picture is one on which you can afford to advertise heavily because it's appeal is larger than many productions. In other words for the two reasons, star and a well known story and title it sticks it's head up above the ordinary picture, will draw more business and interest more people, so you are justified in increasing your advertising appropriation. If we were to play this feature we would cover every well located bill board in any district where transportation to the theatre was reasonably good. The fact that it costs money to do this would not deter us at all.

As for newspaper display, it is always a sure fire method of reaching people, especially the theatre going public. On "The Brat" do not stint yourself in your display space. Buy plenty of it in all of the papers. Be sure that you reach everyone who can be sold. There are times to spend money for advertising and times not too, but this is one of the best bets, for the appeal here is to all classes.

In framing your newspaper ads, be sure that you use a cut of the star which will print big enough and sharp enough so everyone will recognize it.

The producers have provided three "head" cuts of the star, which were made from hand drawn portraits, and which are very good likenesses. These will be effective in big space but do not try to use them where the cut will fill the whole width purchased. A good ad cannot be framed in this manner.

HOWEVER, there is at least one smaller producer's cut which will answer if you really insist on limiting your space.

For your selling talk be sure and tell your people that this is an American story with the star in a role of an American chorus girl. If there has been objection to other Nazimova productions it probably has been because of their foreign flavor.

If we were going to frame an ad, we would start out something like this:

"Nazimova, in a story of a chorus girl who valued virtue above luxury at the price she must pay for it, who went hungry rather than sell herself for life's material necessities, but who after fate had been exceptionally unkind finally came to the turn in the road which leads upward to love and happiness."

This is one of the one sheets available

Then tell them about the pictures being an adaptation of the play, mention the supporting cast, etc.

If you go in for original advertising and discard all of the producers materials, we would recommend using some of the stills tied into your reading matter. There are a lot of mighty good scenes depicted in the unusual number of photographs available and each of these shows the star in one of her characteristic poses dressed in the shabby gown and short sweater she wore as the chorus girl.

For your benefit we are reproducing some of the paper which has been prepared.

Star Thinks "Sinners" Best in Film Form

"'Sinners,' the photoplay, is a better, bigger and more gripping production than 'Sinners,' the stage play."

That is Alive Brady's opinion, as expressed through Realart Pictures Corporation, which will release the picture.

"I was the star of both productions and ought to know," Miss Brady says. "Of course, I am not considered competent to predict the financial outcome of the release of the new 'Sinners,' but I do know that my father made a great deal of money from the stage version, and I know, too, that the situations and the acting which obviously made the stage version a success will be found, multiplied many fold, in photoplay."

Miss Brady points out that in her acting of the spoken production she had ample opportunity to ascertain, from the applause given by the public, wherein lay the strongest appeal of the drama. She explains that she has cooperated with her director, Kenneth Webb, in indicating what the public has most heartily approved in the play and argues that the picture, "Sinners," consequently represents months of actual try-out work before the public.

Taylor Holmes a Drawing Card in West

From their Detroit manager Triangle not only receives enthusiastic reports with reference to the reception and booking extended to their Taylor Holmes specials just released in that territory, but, to substantiate the fact, H. "Sacred Silence" Ready Oct. 5

William Russell Under His New Director Now at Work on Another Film

From Lake Hopatcong comes word that Emmett J. Flynn, recently engaged by William Fox to direct the second of William Russell's Victory pictures, and Roy Somerville, of the Fox scenario staff, are making fine progress in preparing the manuscript for the new play.

With the contention that rural surroundings are more conducive to correct picturization of a story that deals with the open, this capable pair of technicians have made themselves comfortable in a bungalow near the lake.

The new story, as announced, is William McLeod Raine's novel entitled "Eastward Ho!" which achieved phenomenal success when published in Munsey's Magazine and was declared one of the most complete and entertaining stories of the West and East given to literature in many moons.

Meanwhile Mr. Russell is keeping pace with Mr. Flynn. The popular Fox star, under the direction of Harry Millarde is nearing completion of his first Victory picture, a strong dramatic vehicle entitled "Sacred Silence," in which a cast of unusual strength is supporting him.

Prominent in the cast are Agnes Ayres, Mabel Juliene Scott, James Morrison, George MacQuarrie and Tom Brookes. All are well known to picture fans.

According to arrangements perfected by the Fox organization, Mr. Russell will finish the last scenes of "Sacred Silence" as Mr. Flynn and Mr. Somerville complete the preliminaries for "Eastward Ho!" and without loss of time work will be started on the second production, for which the supporting company is now being selected by casting director James Ryan.

Little has yet been made known regarding the details of Mr. Russell's first Fox vehicle, but it is announced that it will call for the heaviest dramatic effort of this actor.

The release date which has been set for "Sacred Silence" is October 5th.

Picturizing Chambers' Story

Rolfe Fast Progressing on Screen Version of "The Amazing Lovers"

AT the former Thanhouser plant in New Rochelle, N. Y., renamed the A. H. Fischer studios and laboratory, B. A. Rolfe, with Chester DeVonde as co-director, is making rapid progress with the work of picturizing "The Amazing Lovers" and now has the subject well under way. "The Amazing Lovers" is an adaptation by Charles A. Logue of Robert W. Chambers' story "The Shining Band," and is the first of a series of stories by that author to be produced by Mr. Rolfe for presentation through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

Practically all of the exterior scenes have been photographed and considerable inroads have been made into the list of interiors. For a week now Mr. Rolfe and Mr. DeVonde have been shooting in the biggest interior set in the picture, a representation of the main room of the ultra-exclusive Sagamore Club, yet there remains a number of scenes to be made in it, notably those marking its destruction.

In writing "The Shining Band," Mr. Chambers created a story that has more than a generous measure of piquancy for which his works are noted. The setting is in the Adirondack Mountains where a group of fifteen self-contained millionaires who by the power of their money put a fence around God's country, building in this paradise a great mansion with fifteen suites and fifteen servants' quarters. Yet they were unhappy for in the midst of their exclusive social barrier dwelt O'Hara, recluse and man of mystery, who guarded his small holdings in the heart of the Sagamore Club's domain with fiery hatred for all society because he had suffered at society's hands. The ensuing struggle for the land develops many tense moments.

Concerned in the enactment of the story is a large cast of well-known players, among whom are Grace Darling, Ramsaye Wallace, Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, E. J. Ratcliffe, G. V. Seyffertitz, John Goldsworthy, John L. Shine and Robert Paton Gibbs.

Metro Stars Make Our Sailors Welcome

Screen Classics, Inc., threw wide the doors of its studios in Hollywood lately to welcome the officers and men of the Pacific Fleet who landed bent upon exploring the mysteries of the motion picture colony in and about Los Angeles.

Bert Lytell, Viola Dana and May Allison, all of whose productions were in work at the studios at the time, took it upon themselves to make the officers and "gobs" from the U. S. S. Wyoming eventful. After being conducted about through the great studio lot, where the magnificent sets for the Screen Classics, Inc., productions are created, the sailors had the opportunity to witness Miss Dana in some of her scenes in "Please Get Married." They also formed a group with this diminutive Screen Classics, Inc., star in the center and were photographed.

Later Bert Lytell introduced the grinning crew to the six beauty mannequins appearing with him in "Lombardi, Ltd.", and entertained them by giving an impromptu act of his own.

Rothacker Party Seeks "Outdoor" Material

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. has sent a completely equipped camera crew into Canada for the purpose of securing thousands of feet of scenic subjects which will be given fall release as part of the "Outdoor" series.

The crew is in charge of Stanly Twist, Head Cameraman Ernest Powell and Assistant Cameraman Charles Geis. The first stop will be Banff and Lake Louise and Golden will be covered. It is planned to secure some scenes of big game hunting and fishing. The crew will return to Chicago the middle of October.

Theda Bara in a Role Not Vampirish

"Kathleen Mavourneen" is the title of the third Fox super-production with Theda Bara as the star which is being presented by William Fox in line with his elaborate policy for 1919-1920. For a fortnight it has now been showing to crowded houses at 44th Street Theatre.

This play, described as "the sweetest of Irish love stories," was written for the screen and directed by Charles J. Brabis. It was inspired by the famous poem by Mrs. Julia Crawford. It is a production the strength of which lies in its simplicity and powerful love element.

With the Irish question among the big issues of the day "Kathleen Mavourneen" will have a strong box office value outside of the fact that it is a big play by a big author, interpreted by a big star. But the Home Rule question in no way enters into this love drama of the Emerald Isle, which is purely a heart story told in a manner that arouses the deepest and finest emotions.

Co-operative Group Prepares

Truart Pictures, to Star Minta Durfee in Comedies, Names Its Players

A NEW idea in organization of a motion picture producing company is Truart Pictures Inc., which is to make a series of two reel polite comedies starring Minta Durfee (Mrs. Roscoe Arbuckle). This is claimed to be the first truly co-operative motion picture company,—a company in which all of the leading players as well as the Director General, Chas. H. France, will share in the profits.

Bory Osso, Vice President and General Manager, who is also the associate American representative of the French Society of Authors and Composers, conceived the idea of profit sharing which he feels sure will instill a keener interest in his players than would be otherwise possible.

The star of Truart Pictures, Miss Minta Durfee, was a leading figure in Mack Sennett productions until about two years ago when she retired temporarily from the screen.

Billy Quirk, former Vitagraph comedy star, will return to the screen after several seasons in vaudeville to play the leading male roles in these productions. Agnes Nielsen will be seen in the same type of character roles that she created for the Arbuckle-Keystone comedies under the Triangle banner. Mary Anderson is the ingenue, and Alvin Knechtel will operate the camera.

"Tommy" Gray, prominent journalist, who is renowned for his humorous writings, has been engaged to write the stories. Although each picture will be a complete comedy in itself, it is planned to have each successive release deal with the same characters so that a screen intimacy with the fans may be established.

Mr. Bory Osso has as yet made no plans for the distribution of his pictures.

Exhibitors Capitalize Star's Nearness

New England exhibitors are endeavoring to capitalize the presence of Mary Miles Minter in their vicinity. Several of them in Boston and neighboring communities already have introduced her to their patrons and others throughout New England, have extended invitations for personal appearances which, on account of the distance, Miss Minter has not yet been able to accept.

Practically all of the exteriors of "Anne of Green Gables," which is to be Miss Minter's first Realart release, are being taken at Dedham, Mass., a short distance out of Boston. Comparatively few big pictures have been made in the Boston neighborhood and the exhibitor interest is reported to be unusual.

Brabin As a Writer for William Fox

In answer to the many inquiries which have been received at the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation since the introduction of Theda Bara's latest vehicle, "Kathleen Mavourneen," at the 44th Street Theatre in New York, regarding the authorship, William Fox feels it incumbent on him to disclose the name of the adaptor.

Charles J. Brabin, whose name appears on the introductory titles of the film version of this tale of Irish folk life as the director of the production, has proved himself in this endeavor more than an able director. He also adapted the story to the silent drama.

Fox Is Renovating His Big Playhouse

With the idea of making his Academy of Music a house known throughout the world as the home of motion pictures of the highest type, William Fox is refitting and refurnishing the famous old building with an effect that recalls the appearance of the Academy when it was the brilliant center of grand opera.

Mr. Fox, who owns a big chain of theatres throughout the United States, has an especial pride in the Academy of Music. Here he intends to give initial showings of Fox productions with such stars as Pearl White, William Farnum, Theda Bara, Tom Mix, William Russell, Gladys Brockwell, George Walsh, Madlaine Traverse, Peggy Hyland, Albert Kay and Elinor Fair, and such features as Fox News, the famous Mutt and Jeff Animated cartoons, and the irresistible funny Sunshine Comedies.

The Academy of Music is believed to have the largest seating capacity of any picture house in the world, and it draws its audience from all parts of greater New York.

Hodkinson Release in Canada

"Sahara" Is Bought for Entire Dominion by Allens; Big Exploitation

COMPLETE Canadian rights to J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, successful Louise Glaum production, "Sahara," have been sold by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, Canada's largest distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures, an organization that owns and operates under its own name more than forty theaters in the Dominion.

As indicating the Allen brothers' belief in the power and popularity of "Sahara" there comes news from Toronto that "Sahara" will be their opening big attraction for the mid-September season from their extreme eastern show-place out to Winnipeg in the far West. For the first time also a Dominion-wide billboard campaign in behalf of an individual production is being made in advance of the Canadian release.

R. E. Pritchard, who recently left MOTION PICTURE NEWS to join the Allen interests, has taken as his first work the preparation of the "Sahara" campaign for the Dominion and will there parallel the campaign made on this production in the "States."

America's big first run theatres continued their booking of "Sahara" during the past week, notable among the theaters signing for immediate play dates being William Sievers' New Grand Central theater, St. Louis, to be followed with dates over the entire Koplar circuit and the Spyros Skouras circuits in St. Louis; Liberty theater, Spokane, Goldberg Brothers' first run and circuit of theaters in Omaha; the Sequoia theater, Sacramento and a dozen other big houses.

To Direct an O. Henry

Warren Washington has been engaged by Vitagraph to direct the next of the series of two-reel screen versions of the O. Henry stories which will be called "Buried Treasure." The cast has not yet been selected.

"Desert Gold" Inserts

An elaborate, specially-designed insert for use as bookstore hangers, is the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's newest feature of its aid-to-exhibitors campaign for the promotion of "Desert Gold," the powerful picturization of Zane Grey's story produced by Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner for Zane Grey Pictures Inc.

The insert, which has gone forward to 23,000 booksellers the country over, is part of the Hodkinson link-up with Grosset & Dunlap, publisher of Zane Grey stories.

Dwan Dedicates a Photoplay

"Soldiers of Fortune" Named for Engineers, Whose Trials Are Shown

BOOKS and plays have been dedicated, but seldom a photoplay. Allan Dwan has done the unusual by dedicating "Soldiers of Fortune," his first production as independent director, to civil engineers. "Soldiers of Fortune" was made by Mr. Dwan for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation and will be released by Realart Pictures Corporation. The picture is based on the story as written by Richard Harding Davis and dramatized by Augustus Thomas. Mr Dwan explains the dedication by citing the fact that the story is based on the activities of engineering pioneers who blaze the way for civilization.

"Civil engineers and their co-workers," he says, "are the pioneers and martyrs of place. I know of no men more picturesque, more essential to civilization, whose work is so little appreciated, building railroads, harnessing rivers, tunneling mountains, blazing trails to new frontiers, battling every foot of the way so that we may live and travel in comfort. I have always been deeply interested in the great sacrifices that these men are always making for civilization, and I am proud indeed to dedicate this, my first photoplay as an independent producer, to such a wonderful body of men."

The hero of "Soldiers of Fortune" is a civil engineer who falls in love with a New York society girl as a result of reading about her in the newspapers. When he meets her later in his own environment—the rough country where he is developing a great mine—he discovers that her interests and his are by no means similar and that her younger sister is the member of the family who has inherited her father's fighting spirit and wholesome interest in the practical things of life.

Canada Takes to Big Serials

Dominion Wants Fast-Moving Tales; Heavy Bookings on the "13th Chair"

LEON OUIMET, head of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., controlling the Canadian rights to Pathe features, was in New York last week, and reported unusually heavy business on American films in the Dominion.

Canadian exhibitors are particularly keen to obtain big features, according to Mr. Ouimet, and are now giving good pictures longer exploitation than was considered possible in Canada before the war. Following the footsteps of American showmen, they have created a big demand for the Pathe special, "The Thirteenth Chair," adapted from the stage play by Bayard Veiller. This production was made by the Acme Pictures Corporation under the direction of Leonce Perret, who also made the adaptation. The featured players are Yvonne Delva, the French star, and Creighton Hale.

"The Thirteenth Chair" was a sensation on the Canadian stage. It had long runs in Montreal, Winnipeg and Toronto, which, in a measure, accounted for the big demand for the film production.

Pathe serials are gaining in popularity every day, according to Mr. Ouimet. He has succeeded in accomplishing something that has never been done before in the serial line, when he placed one of the Pathe offerings in a leading Toronto house for afternoon performances only. The theatre management was dead set against playing serials of any kind; but, under the persuasion of Mr. Ouimet, agreed to use the continued subject at matinee performances. The experiment has been such a success, and the serials have met with such strong popularity that the management now contemplates adding them to the evening program.

Hunt for Stories Continues

Universal Announces the Purchase of Thirteen Tales by Prominent Authors

ONE of the largest and most recent activities of film producing companies, about which much is being written, is the acquisition of numerous stories by well-known authors. For many seasons past Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, has advocated the idea of the story being the foundation of the successful picture.

The Universal president announced late last week the purchase of thirteen excellent stories. And the number is not considered unlucky.

Heading the list are the two stories by Henry C. Rowland. They are "The Peddler" and "Germaine." Monroe Salisbury will probably be starred in "The Peddler."

"No Experience Required" a story by Frank R. Adams, well known short story writer, and which was published in The Blue Book has been purchased for a feature production to be directed by Paul Powell. Adams has contributed many stories to the Cosmopolitan magazine.

Mary MacLaren is to be starred in the new story from the pen of W. Carey Wonderly, titled "Myself Becky." Wonderly is a writer of short stories of adventure and romance.

"The Strange Case of Cavendish" the popular novel by Randall Parish is to be made into an eighteen episode Jack Perrin.

"Wits and the Woman" a novel serial starring Kathryn O'Connor and which has just been published by Small Maynard and Company is also to be made into a chaptered melodrama. J. G. Hawks, author of the Monroe Salisbury production "Sundown Trail" is the author of the new vehicle for Elmo Lincoln. This story is "The Beach Comber."

As has already been announced "The Breath of the Gods" the widely read Oriental story by Sydney McCall has been purchased by Universal as a vehicle for Tsuru Aoki, the Japanese star.

H. Tipton Steck, author of several screen successes and scenario editor for the Bret Harte story "The Outcasts of Poker Flat" has written a story especially for Harry Carey, entitled "The Hillman."

Allen Holubar, not satisfied with directing also writes one of the stories which features his wife, Dorothy Phillips.

"Betty Reforms" a story written by Mildred Considine is to be produced with a carefully selected cast under the direction of William C. Dowlan.

Frederick J. Jackson has written another story for Harry Carey. The new story "A Man of Wrath" will be produced following the completion of "The Hillman."

Rupert Hughes' Attitude on Screening Novels

Rupert Hughes has been learning the ways and methods of motion picture production at top speed the past month. He has just returned to New York from daily conferences with the Goldwyn studio staff. He learned a lot on the camera lot of general interest. He took great pains with his first continuity from "The Cup of Fury" for production by Eminent Authors Pictures.

Mr. Hughes stated he is not the sort of author who instituted on his novels "this is God's work, do not touch a single line," and welcomes changes made for the better. His objections would only be aroused, he said, when titles that don't fit, and lines that mean something are ignored in production, are impressed into the film version of a novel.

Wharton Starts Serial

Theodore Wharton will start production at Ithaca, N. Y., next week on his forthcoming serial for the Pathe program, "The Crooked Dagger," starring Jack Northworth. The studio which he had to build on a rush order is about completed, and the company is now assembled in Ithaca, ready for work.

Frances White, well known in pictures, has been engaged by Mr. Wharton, to play the principal feminine heavy in the serial.

The complete cast for "The Crooked Dagger" is as follows:

Jack Norworth, star; Janet Adair, lead; Bertram Marburgh, principal heavy; William N. Bailey, second heavy; Frances White, heavy; Phineas Nares, Frank Honda, Walter Morton and Polly Van, characters.

Staff of Fox News Is Now Complete

With the recent appointment of Ernest Howard Culbertson as editor of the Feature Department, Herbert Ernest Hancock, director of Fox News, announces that his staff of executive and heads of departments is complete.

As it stands today, Fox News, latest entrant into the weekly film field, represents one of the most powerful organizations of its kind. Fox News is divided into two distinct sections—a Feature Department and a News Department. As announced a few days ago, Pell Mitchell, formerly in charge of the Gaumont weekly, is Mr. Hancock's news editor, while Mr. Culbertson presides at the feature end of the reel.

Pickford Reaches Coast

Jack Pickford, the new Goldwyn star, arrived at the Culver City studio last week, was welcomed by Samuel Goldwyn and other officials of the organization now on the coast, and is prepared to start work on his first production as soon as a suitable vehicle has been selected.

Several books and plays of nation-wide fame are being considered, and it is probable that a choice will be made within the next few days. Pickford spent most of his time during the cross-continent journey in reading a number of manuscripts from which his initial production will be picked.

"Happy Ending" Still Wanted

Monte Katterjohn Denies Such Plays Are Now Doomed to Become Obsolete

COMMENTING on the clamorous statements recently voiced by a prominent film executive that the shadow play with the happy ending is "doomed to become more or less obsolete." Monte M. Katterjohn, who is creating four special plays for distribution by Equity Pictures Corporation, in an interview last week, pungently stated his convictions regarding this prophet's revolutionary vision.

"The unhappy or tragic ending in screen dramas, as a general diet, is not wanted, neither by the exhibitors nor his patrons. Gloom will always prove off-color entertainment.

"A well known figure in the industry said recently that a great change was taking place in the wants of the picture theatre audiences; that the pendulum was swinging toward the unhappy ending. Tragedy, according to his statement, would soon become the popular dish.

"A canvas among exhibitors will quickly dispel this illusion.

"Perhaps no incident serves as a better illustration of this point than viewing a romantic play, as I did recently, within a state penitentiary, where the audience consisted of murderers serving life sentences, forgers, stick-up men—the very dregs of criminal humanity.

"Never was a hero and heroine more loudly cheered. Never was the silvery thread of romantic love more heartily applauded. Never was a villian more roundly hissed than took place among this audience of convicts. They were highly pleased in the final reel when the girl, who chanced to be Mary Pickford, fell into her screen lover's arms with a satisfied smile.

"The world has just emerged from a great tragedy. We are only beginning to get on our feet. We have seen enough of misery and sorrow. We need happiness and joy and our picture plays must reflect it on the screen."

Semon Comedies Booking

Vitagraph Reports Increasing Demand and Leading New York Houses Contract

THE Larry Semon comedies are said to be coming into their own in New York. Always popular throughout the country, New York and its environs have now awakened to the fact that Vitagraph was offering something unique in the comedy line and that Larry Semon with his funny face, acrobatic stunts and clean, clever stories was one of the greatest fun makers before the screen. But the big New York exhibitors are now thoroughly awake, and Semon bookings in New York hereafter will be a regular feature.

Following the showing of the last Semon comedy, "Between the Acts," at the Strand theatre where it met with success, the management of the Strand signed a contract with Vitagraph for the first run showing of all the succeeding Semon comedies.

The Strand theatre, one of the most pretentious in Brooklyn and soon to open, has also contracted for the Semon comedies as a regular feature. The new Brooklyn motion picture theatre is under the same management as the New York Strand.

New York is not alone however in adding the Semon comedies to its regular programs. Bookings coming into Vitagraph's General Offices from all parts of the country for "Between the Acts." The wide interest in the comedy is indicated by the fact that the last three contracts to arrive came from the LaSalle theatre, in South Bend, Ind. The Majestic theatre, in Pueblo, New Mexico, and the National theatre in Winnepeg, Canada.

"Topics of Day" on Orpheum

Big Circuit Books Pathe Release of Quotations from the Literary Digest

ONE of the most important contracts in the history of Pathe, was closed last week when "Topics of the Day," a compilation by the Literary Digest, of the brightest and timeliest sayings of the world's newspapers, was booked over the entire Orpheum Circuit, the biggest chain of vaudeville theatres in the South and the Middle and Far West.

Beginning on Sunday, August 17, the first of thirty theatres in the Orpheum chain will begin the exhibition of "Topics of the Day," which are produced by Timely Films, Inc., and by September 21 every house in the circuit will be showing the popular short feature.

Some weeks ago, "Topics of the Day," were booked in every theatre in the B. F. Keith chain in the East, and now with the Orpheum Circuit taking the feature, its exhibition will extend clear across the continent in the biggest vaudeville houses in the country.

W. S. Wessling, serial and short subject sales manager for Pathe, closed the Orpheum deal with Frank Vincent of the vaudeville circuit. Negotiations had been pending but a short time.

Several Canadian theatres are included in the list, which will add "Topics of the Day" to their program beginning this month.

Collectively, this deal represents one of the biggest ever negotiated by any motion picture organization. It is the biggest motion picture contract ever entered into by the Orpheum Circuit, and is indicative of the sweeping popularity being gained by "Topics of the Day."

Only the snappiest quotations gathered by the Literary Digest are included in "Topics of the Day."

In New York Keith's has recognized the "Topics of the Day" to such an extent as to break all vaudeville precedent by leading off the second half of the Riverside show with the sayings.

"The Open Door" Is an Artclass Offering

Lifting the veil of mystery that has enshrouded the producing of the film "The Open Door," it has come to light that the Artelass Pictures Corporation, composed of a trio of film executives, is sponsor for this seven-reel vehicle from the pen of Mr. Garefild Thompson, who gave to the screen many of William Fox's successes. The production is under the supervision of Dallas M. Fitzgerald. The technical end is in charge of Mr. James Wollnough, formerly with the Fox Film Corp. The photography is by Jack Holbrook, formerly with Florence Reed, and William Hutchinson, formerly with Triangle Film Corp.

It is said that "The Open Door" has the distinction of carrying one of the strongest and highest salaried casts ever assembled for a single feature production, namely, Edith Stockton, Anna Lehr, John P. Wade, Diana Allen, Frank Evans, Bob Broderick, Walter Miller, Sam J. Ryan, William Cavanaugh and Johnnie Walker.

Latest Universal Educational Subject

A real Salvation Army lass serves real doughnuts in a new release of the Universal Educational Department, called "The Charm of Music." Miss Eddie Hodges is the girl.

During the course of the story, "The Charm of Music" details the manufacture of talking machines, particularly showing the uses to which portable machines of this type were put during the war. It is being released by Universal, under the supervision of Harry Levey, manager of the Educational Department.

Government Supervised Sub-Sea Feature

J. E. Williamson submiting for inspection the scenario of his latest submarine production to Major E. E. Turner, Commandant of Forces, Bahamas, West Indies.

The British authorities in the Bahamas were watchful of all movements during the war on land and under the sea, and the making of the latest Williamson Sub-Sea Thriller, which is about completed and is heralded as the greatest yet and full of new thrills, received careful Government supervision.

Alice Joyce Back at Work Again

Alice Joyce, who has been resting for a month at Hot Springs, Va., returned to New York late last week. Her next picture for Vitagraph, work on which has begun under the direction of George Terwilliger, will be called "Pride." It was written by William B. Courtney. Miss Joyce's last picture was "The Winchester Woman." which is awaiting release.

Stirring Drama for Fox Star

IN one of the most intensely dramatic roles it has been her fortune to enact in motion pictures, Gladys Brockwell will make her bow in her September release under the William Fox expanded scheme of productions for 1919-1920. "Broken Commandments" will be released on the 21st of the coming month.

Those who have witnessed the advance showing of this photoplay have been unanimous in unstinted praise of both the actress and her vehicle. They declare unreservedly that in "Broken Commandments" William Fox has entrusted Gladys Brockwell with the biggest dramatic screen production of the past four years. They declare, moreover, that here at last Miss Brockwell has attained the position to which she has been steadily advancing—that of one of the greatest emotional actresses of the screen.

"Broken Commandments" tells a story that is intensely human, full of pathos that makes up the every-day life of every-day people. It is full of tragic incident and tears, yet it is a story rarely beautiful and uplifting. It pictures the sorrows and suffering into which an inexperienced girl plunges herself and two others by the breaking of one commandment—a sin due to two of that triangle, impulsive with youth, being thrown into perilously close contact. Through rapid, gripping, convincing action, "Broken Commandments" carries those three through the first of purification by reason of noble sacrifice, the story ending with a most unusual appealing climax.

William Fox has demonstrated not only his faith in Miss Brockwell as an actress, but the more practical fact that she is a proved good investment, by launching her in this first of a series of great new season pictures for her—the second of which is now being filmed.

Another manifestation of the supreme esteem, both artistically and financially, in which Fox Film Corporation holds this brilliant young woman is the fact that the paper issued on "Broken Commandments" has been prepared with more than usual care—not only attractive, but costly.

Ship Scenes a Feature

Much of the action in "The Bandbox," the first of the Louis Joseph Vance series starring Doris Kenyon, produced by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, takes place aboard ship. Some remarkably beautiful effects on the steamer have been secured by R. William Neill, who is directing "The Bandbox," and who knows as much about ships as the men who build them.

Named Branch Manager

Oren F. Woody, who has been connected with the selling end of many of the foremost producing and distributing companies since the earliest days of the photoplay, has been appointed manager of the Los Angeles branch of Realart Pictures Corporation by Arthur S. Kane, president of the company.

Long Heralded Film is Ready

American Announces Big Drama "Six Feet Four" Will Soon Have Release

American's long-heralded feature, "Six Feet Four," founded on Jackson Gregory's famous novel of the same name, will shortly reach the screen through pre-release bookings in the larger cities. It is a photo-drama to which every one interested in motion picture literature has been looking forward with keen anticipation.

Critics and exhibitors who have seen the production at private showings declare it one of the greatest dramas of our virile, wholesome American life ever brought to the screen. On any number of important counts—cast, story, settings, photography, direction—the picture justifies that claim.

And yet it is from the standpoint of dramatic values—the meticulous care that has been taken to observe the laws of governing drama—that "Six Feet Four" stands high above the ordinary run of feature plays. In Owen Wister's "Virginian," to select a point of comparison, the big fight of the picture is staged in the streets. In "Six Feet Four," on the contrary, although likewise a drama essentially of the out-of-doors, the thrilling duel between Six Feet Four and Ben Broderick which forms the great dramatic climax of the play is fought out within doors.

What is the importance of that point, when dramatic values are being weighed in the scales of criticism? We find the answer to that question in a most interesting analysis of the matter as viewed by no less an authority on drama than S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc.

He answers it with another question of his own:

"Are the big, vitally dramatic moments of our lives, when will clashes with will and emotion clashes with emotion—are such moments lived through in the open, where all can witness what is transpiring?

"Or does not the human animal at such times rather seek the four walls of his own home, or the dwelling of some other with whose life the threads of his own destiny are inseparably entwined?

"None of us court publicity when enacting the really important scenes of our own lives. Why, then, should a drama violate truth by giving an outdoor locale to happenings that are essentially intimate in their character?

"Drama, if it is to be truly such, must hold the mirror up to life."

Animated Drawing Device

Invented for Paramount Magazine by W. O. Hurst of Educational Department

A new device that is expected to revolutionize methods in the production of animated drawings for the screen has been invented by W. O. Hurst, production manager of the Educational Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It already has been employed in forthcoming numbers of the Paramount Magazine, the new weekly one-reel subject being produced by the Educational Department under the management of Nathan H. Friend.

By the device evolved by Mr. Hurst it is possible to show animated drawings simultaneously with photographic subjects. Thus when actual photography will lend greater clarity and atmosphere to an animated drawing it will be used with the drawings.

Mr. Hurst, it is said, hits upon the method during the production of "Forty Minutes to France," which is one of the subjects in the second release of the Paramount Magazine, September 14. This picture treats of the route, construction and operation of the long discussed tunnel between Dover, England, under the English Channel, to Calais, France. One of the scenes in the picture shows an animated drawing of a tunnel train passing the French landscape after it has emerged from the tunnel. In ordinary animated subjects the landscape would be drawn by the artist; but in this subject the artist-drawn train passes against a background of real French scenery.

This new method of producing animated subjects, it is said, gives them greater semblance of actuality and takes the subject out of the realm of something that has been done only on paper and puts it in physical being.

Animated Cartoons in Color

Startling Innovations Promised by Goldwyn in Coming Bray Pictographs

A SCREEN production said to be unlike anything previously offered by any distributor will reach exhibitors during the week beginning Sept 7 when the first of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs will be circulated. Among other numbers it will present results of years of experimentation on the part of Mr. Bray and his associates, which have resulted in the New Bray Animated Drawing, now developed to a state of perfection that gives to the figures on the screen absolute life-likeness of movement.

Heretofore, only a few hundred feet of film made under these improved processes, when they were still in an experimental stage, have been shown. The title selected for the initial Goldwyn-Bray release, a unique comedy, is "Out of the Inkwell." From a scientific, as well as entertainment standpoint, Bray's New Animated Drawings mark a momentous step in this important branch of the photoplay art.

Another matter of the first importance to exhibitors who are looking for the best in science, educational and travel subjects, is the news that Bray Pictures Corp. has secured a selected series of Chester Outdoor films, which admittedly stand pre-eminent in their particular line. Each issue of Pictographs will contain "Chester Tidbits" striking the high spots in some interesting Chester subject.

The second Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, week of Sept. 14th., may prove even more startling to the trade than the initial release, in that it contains the world's first Animated Colored Cartoon, an invention of the Bray Studios in which the colors are perfectly true, even to the reds, that have caused so much trouble for experimenters in colored photoplays. The processes used in making these colored films are completely covered by patent rights held by the Bray Corp.

Curiosity on "House Without Children"

Inquiries by the score are reported to have been received by Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., on "The House Without Children," regarding the road-show possibilities of the production, the latest by Robert McLaughlin.

Telegraphic announcements were sent to the principal newspapers throughout the country the night "The House Without Children" Opened at the Opera House, Cleveland, Ohio, and then it was that the flood of inquiries began to flow in.

Priscilla Dean Signs Long U Contract

Priscilla Dean, the young star who has become widely known within the last year, has signed a long-term contract with the Universal Company under which banner she has been starred for some time. Miss Dean, since her illness last spring, has not been named in Universal productions, and will no longer be featured in the Special Attraction brands according to Carl Laemmle, Universal's president. Miss Dean will have the unusual distinction of having two directors and all of her new production will be released as Universal-Jewels.

"Weakly Indigestion" to Make Its Bow

The premier number of A. Lincoln Miller's news absurdity, "The Weakly Indigestion," which the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, the distributors, claim is an eight reel comedy offering in one reel, has been completed and will be marketed on the states right basis Sept. first. The California theatre at Los Angeles has already contracted for the picture, which is a burlesque news weekly.

Morey Completes Film

"Out of the Dark," Harry T. Morey's latest Vitagraph feature, has been completed and the star and his supporting company are taking a vacation before beginning a new picture. The next vehicle for Mr. Morey has not yet been selected.

About New Pictures

Myron Selznick announces that he has purchased the motion picture rights to the well known stage success, "The Girl From Out Yonder," which is to be used as Olive Thomas' fourth Selznick production.

The cast selected to support William Farnum in his big Fox picture, "If I Were King," the stage success by Justin Huntley McCarthy—will include Miss Eddie Hodges, a young southern girl recently returned from France.

The Fox comedy directors, now engaged in a producing race, will be marked on the system followed in arranging the standings of league baseball teams.

Charles Spers, a juvenile, has been engaged by Vitagraph to play the leading male role opposite Bessie Love in her next feature.

Ray Ripley, a Broadway dramatic favorite, is now with the Universal.

The Geraldine Farrar company of Goldwyn players, under the direction of Reginald Barker, leaves this week for the Imperial Valley desert country to secure scenes for the second Farrar production which is well underway.

"The Cup of Fury," by Rupert Hughes, first of the Eminent Authors' productions announced by Samuel Goldwyn, has been started at the Culver City Studios under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter.

The title of a recent Christie Comedy, "Oh My Dear," has been changed to "Some Boy!" in answer to a request by F. Ray Comstock, the producer of a musical comedy "Oh My Dear."

The interior of a very complete general merchandise store in a rural community is now being occupied by "Fatty" Arbuckle and his company in making the new Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Hayseed."

Work is being rushed at Universal City on the new theatre structure, which is to be used whenever theatrical scenes are to be filmed. It will be christened by Allen Holubar in "Ambition" which he is now producing with Dorothy Phillips as the star.

The final scenes of Hilliard Booth's mystery story, "The Black Gate," in which Earle Williams will star, were filmed last week at Vitagraph's Hollywood studio.

The second of the Paramount-Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies will be released August 24. This is entitled "A Sisterly Scheme," and is said to be in Mrs. Drew's best comedy vein.

Lila Lee has just finished her Paramount picture, "Heart of Youth," under Robert G. Vignola's direction, the final scenes having been taken.

Kathleen Kirkham and Henry Miller, Jr., have been added to the strong cast supporting Tom Moore in his current Goldwyn picture.

The report published in a recent issue of a motion picture trade publication to the effect that Monroe Salisbury, Universal star, was planning on starting his own company, has not been confirmed by Universal officials.

Blanche Sweet is taking a much needed rest after her strenuous work in "A Woman of Pleasure," a seven-reel melodrama, filmed by Jesse D. Hampton for Pathe.

Ida Darling, well known stage and screen player, has the important part of Mrs. Sanderson in the Screen Classics, Inc., all star screen version of "The Man Who Stayed at Home."

Harold Lloyd does some tall and fancy roller skating in his exhilarating comedy, "Don't Shove," which is included in the list of Pathe releases for August 31.

Leah Baird, the star of Artco Productions, Inc., has just had a birthday and to celebrate the event, Adam Kessel gave her a week's cruising party on his yacht, "The Orson."

The next picture which Miss Sylvia Breamer will be engaged upon at the J. Stuart Blackton studios will be "Sunset," which was written expressly for her by Stanley Olmstead.

F. P.-Lasky's Art Department

Many Noted Artists Contribute to Its Output; Wide Ranges of Work

PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT pictures are advertised extensively, not alone in the trade papers and newspapers but also in the magazines of national reputation—and these advertisements are not just merely an arrangement of type! Artists of national repute are responsible for the attractive appearance of these advertisements. And this is only part of the artist's work.

The splendidly organized art department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation complete both in talent and equipment, had a humble beginning, with Vincent Trotta in charge and doing all the work.

The department is divided into three divisions, under the direct supervision of Mr. Trotta. They are: Production Photo Art Work under Mr. Coester; Trade Paper Advertising, Mr. Lapp; and Progress-Advance, Mr. Schiavone. Each division is a department in itself and the full pressure of all departments is directed at the one target—to give the exhibitor the best of publicity art work available.

Oftimes the nature of some special work requires the services of outside artists. A certain artist's creation may be making a hit in the outside world; a magazine may be featuring the work of a certain artist. Such successful artists are often invited to lend their ideas in cooperation with the Art Department.

In the past few years many artists of national reputation have contributed. Among them we find such names as Aaron Ackerman, Burton Rice, Mon Randall, Wendall Phayer, R. Van Buren, Harold T. Wetterson, Albert Halpert, Rosenbuam Studio, The Ethridge Association of Artists, Ralph Deienenger, A. Isherwood, F. W. Hammell, Norman Jacobson, F. J. Edgars and Peter L. Lanuza.

Of Mr. Trotta's assistants, hardly one but has had at least four years in the motion picture business along his specific line of work.

Great Air Battle Scene Made

Night Sky Illuminated as Never Before in Scene of Universal's "Winged Trail"

FIVE thousand dollars was one night's electric light bill when Lieutenant O. L. Locklear, the aviator who changes planes in air, staged a sensational aeroplane battle at night for the Universal cameras.

Lieutenant Locklear is starring "The Winged Trail," a remarkable serial photodrama, under the direction of Jacques Jaccard. The story required that a fleet of aeroplanes, engaged in carrying United States mail, give battle to an equally large fleet of pirate ships. The battle was to occur at night.

The Universal City flying field is 2,000 feet long by 1,000 feet wide. It was necessary to illuminate this field so that it was equivalent to sunlight. Harry Brown, chief electrical engineer at Universal City, was allowed three days in which to accomplish the biggest job of illumination ever undertaken in the production of moving pictures.

At one end of the far-flung field a United States Aerial Mail post-office was erected. It was outlined against the darkness by 500 sixty-watt lamps, 12 one-thousand-watt lamps, 25 seventy-five ampere arcs, and one two-hundred ampere searchlight.

At intervals along the edge of the field were placed twelve 20-foot towers to which were attached compressed air blowers to throw the light from 300 flares high and wide.

At the landing spot in the center of the field there was a grand beacon; four immense covered holes in the earth with brilliant arc lights glowing to guide the intrepid birdmen in landing.

At a signal from Jaccard the battery of light-giving devices burned a luminous swath in the darkness and threw the glow of daylight over the field.

Five hundred flares of various colors were ignited by the aviators high in the air and used as signal rockets.

Resembling nothing so much as a flock of comets flying duck fashion after a leader, the planes described parabolas of fire in the air.

At the sounding of a signal cannon the long line of ships straigtened out and, at regular intervals, zoomed through the white gates of the field and landed at terrific speed.

Robertson-Cole Summer Hits

With the closing of the summer season in the next two weeks Robertson-Cole believes that it will have released through Exhibitors Mutual a consistently higher class of productions than has ever been heretofore attempted during the socalled dumping season. Twelve pictures, some of them considered among the best offerings of the year have been released and the entire program will be completed with "The Other Half," a successor to "The Turn in the Road," and "Her Purchase Price," a Bessie Barriscale picture.

The release of these pictures is the result of a definite policy to test out the summer market and provide exhibitors with means to increase their summer patronage. The results more than proved the soundness of this policy. Reports from exhibitors booking the Robertson-Cole feature through Exhibitors Mutual were not only favorable but numerous.

Exhibitors reported unheard of summer business with "The Man Who Turned White" and "The Pagan God" even bids fair to rival its success.

"The Mints of Hell" and "Man's Desire" two "snow" pictures proved to be excellent attractions for exhibitors, and the snow atmosphere apparently acting as an antidote for the summer heat.

Two popular Hayakawa productions, "The Man Beneath" a dramatization of Edmund Mitchell's story "The Nigger" and "The Gray Horizon" one of the most artistic productions ever released were among the productions that proved a boom to exhibitors. Bessie Barriscale in "Tangled Threads" and "The Woman Michael Married" established the fact that she has just as great a hold on a picture public in summer as in winter.

Alice Brady's Picture Nears Completion

Alice Brady's company, which went to Nantucket Island, off the coast of Massachusetts, to film the exteriors for her first realart production, "Sinners," adapted by Eve Unsell from the stage play by Owen Davis, has returned to New York. While most of the picture has been filmed, active production has not yet been completed.

Pioneer Managers Convene in New York

The first conference of the managers of the Pioneer Chain of Coopative Exchanges was held in New York last week. Among those present were Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, Earl Simmons, of the Simlec Exchange of Pittsburgh, I. Cobe, of the Pioneer Buffalo office, Ben Amsterdam and L. Korson, of the Masterpieces Attractions of Philadelphia and Floyd Brockell, of the Greater Stars Productions of Chicago.

The sessions were presided over by M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer, and matters pertaining to the operation of the exchanges handling Pioneer attractions were thoroughly discussed.

Convicts to First See Realart's "Sinners"

"Sinners," in which Alice Brady will make her initial screen appearance for Realart Pictures Corporation, will have its first public showing at Sing Sing Prison.

An unusual letter from the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing, brought this about. It pointed out that the first presentation of "Sinners" as a stage play was given to the prison inmates on Christmas Day 1914, and was the first dramatic performance ever given in the institution. Naturally, the letter went on, the prisoners were interested in Miss Brady's works, and wished to see the play in screen form.

Billie Rhodes' Next Is "Hearts and Masks"

As a successful follow-up of her first story, "The Blue Bonnet" to be released everywhere during the next fortnight, Billie Rhodes' next will be the star of Harold MacGrath's international novel, "Hearts and Masks." This story was purchased during the week for Miss Rhodes by William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation of America, and work of production began a few days after purchase in Hollywood.

All Billie Rhodes' productions henceforth will be distributed throughout the entire world by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The productions of J. Stuart Blackton are in future to be distributed through Pathe

Schomer Starts in Producing

Playwright to Make Four to Six Films Yearly; E. S. Manheimer Handles Output

ABRAHAM S. SCHOMER, playwright and director, has completed all the plans for the Schomer-Ross Producing Corporation, and is now making preparations for the starting of his first picture under the new banner.

The policy of the new organization will be to produce from four to six special pictures a year, each with a well known star, whose money making possibilities has been proven. Mr. Schomer, as before will write and direct; and he has already completed the writing and adaptation of "The Scarlet Flame," which will be the initial vehicle under the new organization. The leading role is to be portrayed by a prominent theatrical and picture star, whose name will be divulged very shortly. Space has already been leased at the Biograph Studios, and it is expected Mr. Schomer will start work during the course of the week.

Mr. Schomer will be remembered for his plays, all of which were produced on Broadway, most notable of which were "The Yellow Passport" which caused quite a sensation in theatrical circles. "Today" afforded Emily Stevens a starring vehicle at the Lyric Theatre, and later portrayed by Florence Reed on the screen. "The Inner Man" was presented by the Shuberts, with Wilton Lackaye in the leading role.

In commenting on the new organization Mr. Schomer says, "I believe in "Ruling Passions" and all my other productions, I gave the public something with a moral, and it is my idea that work and ideas are wasted if the creation one is striving to bring out does not have that something to it, which causes it to be imbedded in the mind for many days, after seeing it, and then to drop up anew when the same situation comes to pass in real life. And that is my ambition in this new series of productions."

Release of MacFadden Series

Pioneer Acquires the Fifty-two Subjects; Physical Culture and Comedy

AS an answer to the repeated demands of the independent exchangemen throughout the country for a reliable supply of high class short-length subjects, the Pioneer announces that it has acquired the entire series, fifty-two in number, of the McFadden Physical Culture Comedies which will be released at weekly intervals.

Each subject is a complete comedy in itself, with witty titles and a humorous and farcial turn, incidently showing the value of brawn and muscle. The cast of these pictures is composed of men possessing classic physiques, and of women who have beauty and perfect forms.

One of the special features of the series is the development of the female form, showing how every woman can attain physical perfection and retain her youthful form.

While the series is a serious attempt to instruct, its greatest value lies in its mirth provoking and entertaining power. The production is under the personal direction of Mr. McFadden and has behind it the combined cooperation of all the physical culture publications with a circulation totaling nearly a million.

The first release will be announced shortly, and will be preceded by an advertising and publicity campaign in both the trade papers and general press.

In the negotiation which resulted in the Pioneer acquiring the McFadden Physical Culture Comedies, Albert Teitel, a film man of long experience represented the MacFadden interests while M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer signed the contracts on behalf of his concern.

Frank Currier, the "grand old man" of Metro pictures, has been loaned to Famous Players-Lasky to play the role of the soap baron in "It Pays to Advertise."

Release Dates of Fox's Specials Advanced

The two big William Fox productions, "Evangeline," from Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's love epic, and "Kathleen Mavourneen," the photoplay inspired by Julia Crawford's poem of the same name, are proved successes. Demands for these features are already pouring into the Fox office after a run of little more than a week at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre.

"Evangeline" has received exceptional praise from the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures for its fidelity to Longfellow's great poem, and "Kathleen Mavourneen," has won similar laudatory comment. Not only have these two classic productions been indorsed by the Board of Review, but also by public through the medium of the newspaper critics.

The release date of "Evangeline" has been advanced a month and that of "Kathleen Mavourneen," nearly two months.

By special arrangement with Messrs Lee and J. J. Shubert, the 44th Street Theatre has been leased for an indefinite run and already requests are being made by various educational organizations, including Public Schools, that these Fox features be continued in this city at least until the Fall terms are opened so that arrangements may be made for a showing to students.

Change in Schedule of World Releases

World Pictures announces a change in schedule of September releases. On September 22 "Where Bonds Are Loosed" which was adapted from the novel of that name by L. Grant Watson will be released in place of "The Oakdale Affair," as previously announced.

"Where Bonds Are Loosed" is a five reel picture directed by David G. Fischer who is familiar to picture-goers as an independent producer as well as the director a number of screen successes. Besides directing the picture, Mr. Fischer plays the leading role, opposite the star, Dixie Lee who is well-known to Broadway theatre-goers as a leading woman for Charles Frohman and other prominent producers and who besides has been a headliner in vaudeville for two years.

On the Sunny West Coast

RAY GALLAGHER, who has not been seen in films for several years, and who recently returned from an overseas' trip with Uncle Sam's army, has been engaged by Universal, and is playing the leading role in a film now being made by the Irish prince, Douglas Gerrard.

Robert G. Vignola has been selected by Famous Players-Lasky to make the first subject starring Ethel Clayton, who has just returned from a four months' vacation spent in this country and Japan. This selection is, no doubt, largely due to the very successful results obtained by Mr. Vignola in the making of "A Woman's Weapons" and "Vickey Van," both of which were vehicles starring Miss Clayton.

When Harry Garson presents Clara Kimball Young in "Eyes of Youth" in October, the public will have an opportunity to see what perfect organization, production and managment can do in the way of making really big pictures.

"Eyes of Youth" will be the first picture to be produced at the Garson Studios Inc, situated in the heart of the Edendale district in Los Angeles.

The firm hand and general ability of Harry Garson, president, director-general and organizer of this big studio has found immediate results. In the first place, the studio, which is one of the most compact and complete in the west, as well as one of the most beautiful, was built in record time. Its first production, "Eyes of Youth" was one of the greatest stage successes of the past ten years in New York and througout the country. In support of the star, Clara Kimball Young, Mr Garson has placed a company of the finest names to be found in the motion picture business, including: Edmund Lowe, Sam Sothern, Gareth Hughes, Milton Sills, Ralph Lewis, William Courtleigh, Vincent Serrano, Lionel Belmore and Pauline Starke

Alan Forrest, whose work as leading man, opposite Mary Miles Minter, for three years, won him prominence in the memories of thousands of fans, recently was engaged by the Universal Company to play the juvenile lead in the special aerial picture staged by director Jacques Jaccard in which Aviation Lieutenant Locklear performed some remarkable feats of climbing and jumping from plane to plane in mid-air. Forrest has a most important role, and opposite him as leading feminine player, is attractive Francelia Billington.

William Desmond and Beatriz Michelena, two stars seen in Robertson-Cole offerings through Exhibitors Mutual

Production has been begun by Robert G. Vignola at the Lasky studios of the first picture in which Ethel Clayton is to star, following her recent vacation in the Orient. The story is said to be one in which Mr. Vignola will have opportunity to make use of all Miss Clayton's ability for keen characterization and entertaining comedy.

Arrangements have been completed whereby Fred Granville, veteran cameraman, and associated with several of the strongest productions made on the West Coast, soon will assume charge of direction of a feature to be made at the Universal studio. Several stories are in course of consideration for Mr. Granville's production, while an all-star cast, it is said, is being assembled.

J. P. McCarthy, a former associate of D. W. Griffith from the time of the latter's inception of "The Birth of a Nation," has just completed a striking seven-reel feature, it is declared, of early western life, for which he has chosen the attractive title of "Out of the Dust." In it, Mr. McCarthy, who in addition to directing the production, furnished most of the material for the feature, has succeeded in telling a story that is full of human sympathy and touching pathos, enlivened with several bits of amusing humor. The cast of "Out of the Dust" is an all-star one and included Russell Simpson, Dorcas Matthews, Robert McKim and the clever juvenile, Pat Moore. The feature is the first of a series to be produced under the financial backing of a group of Los Angeles capitalists.

Louis Burston, one of the most widely known independent producers in the business, is engaged in preparing for release, the final episode of "The Mystery of 13" in which Francis Ford is starred. Burston colloquially, is known in the Hollywood district as "The Serial King," for his establishment occupies several acres in a central part of the city where the serial featuring Francis Ford, and a new one in which King Baggot is the featured player, are being made. Burston has several other profit-making serials to his credit.

Production of his first story written under his present arrangements with Producer George Loane Tucker, is being watched keenly by Jack Cunningham, the photoplay author, in order that all the detail which he visualized in his story may be put on the screen. Cunningham, who contracted for a series of stories to be produced by Mr. Tucker, believes that the author's or continuity writer's responsibility does not end when his script has been accepted, but that it is equally his duty to co-operate in the actual screening of the story as well as to his benefit to do so. For this reason, Mr. Cunningham daily may be seen on the stages in consultation with the director as to the various incidents.

Jacques Tyrol—Reticent Producer

We've just seen "The Red Viper" off, starting in its marvelous blaze of burning red, presaging serious events to come, and ending with one of the most sympathetic and comprehending titles we have ever had the gratification of seeing on the screen: "While I bin lyin' here, it come to me what's the matter with our people. They come from a land of darkness and they ain't learned yet to look at the stars."

Doesn't that cover our Boshevist situation, that expression of the poor little atom in the melting pot who had been rather long in learning the lesson that America has to teach? And the credit for that goes to Winifred Dunn, the scenario writer, who isn't the reason for this story at all, but has somehow managed to slip in ahead of our main objective—the director.

Perhaps that's because the director, Jacques Tyrol, was so very nice and tried to inveigle Miss Dunn into doing the talking herself, which she just as courteously declined to do. So Mr. Tyrol let us look through his press book, and we discovered page after page of photographs of old, white haired men, "Lehr," "Macbeth," "Beethoven," "The King" in "Hamlet," and many other characters that he played during the beginning of his career, in Italy, Austria, France and Germany. Incidentally, Mr. Tyrol speaks at the present time no less than eight languages, while at one time he was able to discourse in twelve. As a consequence of which he was perfectly qualified to appear on any stage, presenting his part in the language of the country.

Before entering the dramatic profession, he studied medicine, and afterwards psychology and languages, receiving his Bachelor of Arts degree on the Continent. Then he fell victim to the lure of the footlights, and finally, that of the camera. Selig acquired his services first, but it was not until the appearance of "And the Children Pay," that the moving picture public awoke to the fact that there was a new genius to be reckoned with among the directors. According to some of the Chicago papers, this picture made him famous overnight, and in practically every city in the country it assured his popularity.

"Your Wife and Mine" came next, and now the Tyrad film "The Red Viper," which has been endorsed by the Grand Master of the Loyal Order of Moose, as a film that will wield tremendous weight against the Bolshevist menace and one that approaches the zenith of Americanism. Mr. Tyrol realizes the immense power for good or evil that motion pictures can be made, and he works, whenever it is possible, with a theme in mind that he wants to bring home to his audience. He shows a deep sympathy with human frailties, and a keen understanding of the whys and wherefores of the injustices and wrongs that surround us, and is eager to hasten their elimination by pointing them out to a public that he is sure will right them when once it sees the way.

When asked about some of his own adventures, Mr. Tyrol said laughingly that he had managed to keep out of prison so far, except once when he expressed his views of the ex-Kaiser too loudly in Berlin. "That gave me a lot of trouble," he declared, "but I should say the same things again if necessary."

And yet Mr. Tyrol was at one time presented with the St. Joseph Order, the highest decoration that could be given a civilian by the ex-Kaiser, as well as a medal from the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria. Such mere details he values lightly, however. He prefers talking about his travels, and the various countries that he has visited at one time or another. He is eager for information and likes to have his facts accurate. His story for "And the Children Pay" was gleaned almost entirely from personal experiences told by children, such as those portrayed, and social workers who understood their cases better than they did themselves. In fact, it was only because his interest was aroused in what seemed to him unnecessarily distressing conditions, that he pursued the subject further, and finally undertook the production in an earnest attempt to better their fate.

This is typical of the man. The kindness that his whole personality expresses is absolutely unmistakable, and we think that such a combination as Jacques Tyrol and his star, Gareth Hughes, ought to go far on the road to success.

With the Eastern Studios

RUTH STONEHOUSE, whose work as the feminine "heavy" in the Paramount serial featuring Harry Houdini, led her into many strange situations and characters, finds herself the object of rather unpleasant conspicuousness on Los Angeles streets since the serial has been shown locally. Much of Miss Stonehouse's work was in masculine attire and as a result, several times while in riding costume she has been recognized from her work in the serial.

Upon completion of his direction of his latest Vitagraph comedy, featuring Babe Hardy, Noel Smith has begun staging of a New York City tenement story in which the largest street set ever constructed at the western Vitagraph studio was devoted to his use. Much of the atmosphere of the slums, both literally and figuratively, has been supplied and the result is a slice of "The Bowery" transferred three thousand miles.

Production of "Right After Brown," the detective comedy drama which Al Green is directing at the Fox West Coast studio, with Peggy Hyland, the noted English actress, as his star, practically has been completed and Green now is in consultation with the studio scenario staff in preparation of his next story, the details of which they are withholding for the reason that many novelties not only in the story itself, but in its method of presentation, have been embodied.

Joseph J. Franz has been given charge of the direction of the Harry B. Warner Company in that star's latest vehicle at the Jesse D. Hampton studio, which is a screen version of "Maruja," the Bret Harte novel of the early days of Southern California. Franz recently completed direction of the William Desmond feature, "Bare Fisted Gallagher" and "Dangerous Waters."

Scott Sidney, Christie comedy director, is having little difficulty in finding locations for his pictures in which Bobby Vernon and Helen Darling play the leading roles, following Mr. Sidney's purchase of a bungalow in the foothills of Hollywood. His residence almost daily, is the scene of bits of action in his latest pictures, and the neighbors have ceased to be alarmed at the unusual happenings around the Sidney home.

William Beaudine is directing a two-reel Christie comedy with Harry Depp and Gertrude Selby prominent in the cast.

Fred Le Roy Granville, recently with the Fox Studio as cinematographer of the spectacles which Director Frank Lloyd staged there, has returned to his old associations at Universal City, where he will be in charge of the photography of several of the forth-coming features there. Granville, it is remembered by those who are conversant with the "ins and outs" of the film colony, is the "Gabby Le Roy Frazer" of the Charles E. Van Loan stories of the Saturday Evening Post.

Sherry Harris, formerly assistant to Cameraman Rudolph Bergquist, has been chosen by Raymond Smallwood Metro director, as his assistant.

I. A. R. Wylie, the noted Australian novelist, whose stories "The Hermit Doctor of Gaya" and "The Native Born" are to be put in pictures with Nazimova as star, was a visitor at the Metro studio, where the beginning scenes of "The Hermit Doctor" were being filmed.

Bert Lytell, who is nearing completion of his stellar work in "Lombardi, Ltd," promises to follow the example of the new lawn in front of the Screen Classic studio, which recently received the benefit of a mower, and have his hair cut on completion of the picture.

Philip Rochford du Bois, for four years with D. W. Griffith and later with the Triangle studio, has been engaged as cinematographer for the A. Lincoln Miller comedy pictorial digest of current events, being marketed by the Bulls Eye Company under the name of "Weakly Indigestion."

Margarite Villmore, who recently was engaged in support of Bert Lytell in a Metro feature, has been engaged to play the leading feminine role in the Charles Dorety comedies under the direction of Charles Parrott at the Bulls Eye studio.

Changing the typewriter for a make-up box, Charles Amador, who formerly wrote Larry Semon's Vitagraph comedies, has joined the Bulls Eye studio and will play in support of Charles Dorety.

Gale Henry, the elongated comedienne for the Bulls Eye Company has had specially made for her a new wardrobe of freak clothes. Contrary to general opinion, the outlandish costumes worn by the screen comedienne are not merely those picked up in a second-hand store, but are made specially by milliners and tailors.

The scenario staff of the Jesse D. Hampton studio is finding its collective self heavily engaged with screen work in supplying material for Blanche Sweet, Henry B. Warner and William Desmond. George Elwood Jenks is writing a new story for Miss Sweet; Julian Lamothe is picturizing Bret Harte's "In A Hollow of The Hills" for Warner, and Vernon Hoagland is writing the screen version of an original story by George C. Hull for William Desmond.

Final scenes were taken of the latest comedy starring Gale Henry at San Pedro, California, during the arrival of the Pacific Fleet at that Harbor. Some striking exterior and interior shots of the big war vessels were obtained, it is said, for the comedy, "Dizzy Lizzie."

Unusual submarine scenes, it is said, were made by Irvin Willat at San Pedro, California, recently for the big special production under way at the Thomas H. Ince studio. The technique gained by Mr. Willat during his experience in filming other underwater action in his screen adaptation of "False Faces," was employed to strong advantage in the newest scenes, for which special photographic apparatus had been arranged.

Charles Giblyn, for many years associated with Thomas H. Ince during the former days before Triangle forces were dissolved, has been reengaged by the producer to direct Dorothy Dalton in her next Ince-Paramount Feature "Black is White." The screen story has been made from a popular novel by George Barr McCutcheon and Mr. Giblyn, it is expected, will duplicate and add refreshing novelties to the thrills and surprises contained in the book.

Gladys George, the Ince studio's latest acquisition from the legitimate stage, has completed her work in her first film role and found it one of surprises and painful strenuousness as the result of her experience in a fight scene.

Reginald Barker, who is directing the latest vehicle starring Geraldine Farrar at the Goldwyn studio, claims to have the only musical camel ever used in an Egyptian desert scene. The camel, which is of the two-hump variety, is declared to be an artist in trills and yodels, and during the recent filming of a scene persisted so much in exercising her talent that it was necessary for Barker to employ a system of signals to make himself understood while directing the action. Some do say at the studio that the atmosphere of the grand opera created by the presence of the famous singer is effecting even the other live stock at the plant.

Kathleen Kirkman is the latest acquisition to the roll of noted actresses at the Goldwyn studio. She has been engaged in support of Tom Moore in his newest picture, under the direction of Harry Beaumont, and has, it is said, an unusual characterization of a humorous type to portray in a story which is based on a celebrated comedy by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero.

Noel Smith, whose similarity of name to that of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, leads to much confusion at the West Coast Vitagraph studio where Noel Smith is directing comedies, has undertaken a campaign of advertising in order to remove any ambiguity or identity with the well-known name. Neither is Mr. Smith any relative, he states in forty-eight point type, to the Smith Brothers of cough drop fame.

To Montgomery and Rock, Western Vitagraph comedians, has come the inspiration of opening a drug store as a result of the many cures for poison oak, which have been volunteered since Joe Rock became poisoned with that unpleasant affliction. Following wide spread accounts of the difficulties with which Rock labored in making his comedies while tormented with the poison oak, sympathetic motion picture fans have deluged his mail with samples of cures which are guaranteed to remove the oak. Rock's dressing-room now resembles an apothecary's shop.

DENISON CLIFT, well known as a writer of big feature plays for the screen, and for the past year and a half special writer at the Fox West Coast studios for Madlaine Traverse and other stars, has been appointed by general manager Sol M. Wurtzel to be made in California by Fox.

Clift's advancement to the head of the scenario division comes after a remarkable record of photoplay successes, which began two years under Cecil and William de Mille at the Lasky studio. Later Clift wrote William S. Hart's greatest success, "Wolves of the Rail," and that thrilling melodrama of the San Francisco police and Chinatown. "The Midnight Patrol." When Sessue Hayakawa entered the independent field he engaged Clift to write his first feature, "His Birthright."

When William Fox decided to star Madlaine Traverse in a series of powerful emotional dramas, Clift was engaged as special feature writer at the Fox studios, and he has written the script of every play in which Miss Traverse has starred.

Additional Notes of the Players

The inheritance of the roving disposition of her mother, who was a gypsey, and of a talent for music gained from her father, an English composer is responsible for the presence with the Goldwyn stock company of Florence Deshon, who is playing with Pauline Frederick. At about the time Miss Deshom first donned long dresses and abandoned her girlish braids she left her home at Tacoma, Washington, and travelled until she reached New York City, and from that time on seldom has been in one part of the country for more than six months at a time. Her musical impulses led her, while in the East, to obtain a tryout with Oscar Hammerstein only to be taken with amusement. She found a place in a chorus however, and from that time on, her progress was rapid.

Any sort of a spy glass would seem unnecessary for Charlie Dorety to see these Bulls-Eye "Follies"

John Bowers finds himself with double duties during his engagement at the Goldwyn studios, for in addition to playing opposite Pauline Frederick under the direction of Frank Lloyd, he often is called upon to furnish music for Miss Frederick in the emotional scenes in which he does not appear. Frequently on the stage he may be seen with his guitar playing such melodies of a former generation as "Ben Bolt," "Shall We Meet at the River," and "Just a Song at Twilight."

Mabel Normand recently completed her first flight in a seaplane, but those who expected her to be thrilled by what they thought a novel experience for her, were disappointed when they were reminded that the Goldwyn comedienne was the first girl, it is said, ever to make an airplane ascension, back in the days of the Sennett-Keystone comedies.

Douglas MacLean and Doris May, who are being co-starred by Thomas H. Ince, have completed their work in the widely-read story by Mary Roberts Rinehart, called, "Twenty Three and One-Half Hours Leave." "Mary's Ankle," from the stage play of that name, will be their next production.

A long vacation in New York City has been begun by Le Roy Stone, who has been film editor for two years for William H. Hart productions.

Louise Weddock, former newspaper man, most recently in New York, has been added to the Douglas Fairbanks scenario staff, where he will work with Tom Geraghty in the preparation of future Fairbanks United Artists stories.

Evidently, Mr. Sidney Reynolds, president of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., who is making the big 15 episode serial featuring the former hynotist and vaudeville headliner, J. Robert Pauline, is regarded as a judge of winners not only in the line of scenarios (he was scenario editor for Fox) but of pretty girls as well. Together with Mr. Pauline's director, Will S. Davis, Mr. Reynolds was invited by Manager Leon D. Langsfeld of the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre to assist in the selection of six beautiful girls from the audience of that theatre, the evening of August 11th for Mack Sennett's famous beauty battallion for Keystone comedies.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Universal Newsettes

THREE features and one serial have been begun at Universal City, while several others are well under way.

Harry Carey has begun stellar work in an enlarged version of "The Three Godfathers," from the story by Peter B. Kyne from the Saturday Evening Post, which was offered several years ago as a three-reel production. Jack Ford has charge of the direction and Joe Harris and J. Farrell McDonald are prominent in Carey's support.

Tsuru Aoki is playing in her first scene of "The Breath of the Gods," which is being directed by Rollin Sturgeon, from the story by Sidney McCall. The picture is the first in which the wife of the noted actor, Sessue Hayakawa is to be offered among Universal releases. In her supporting cast are included Stanhope Wheatcroft, Barney Sherry, Pat O'Malley, Ethel Shannon and Paul Weigel.

First scenes of "The Beach Combler" are being made at San Francisco, where director Rex Ingraham has taken his company of players headed by Elmo Lincoln. Opposite Lincoln is Mabel Ballin and other important players are Frank Brownlee, Dick La Reno and Ethyl Irving. The story was by J. G. Hawks and the continuity by Harvey Thew.

The first episode of "The Strange Case of Cavendish," the new Universal serial, is being produced under the direction of Jack Wells from the story by Randall Parrish.

Director Norman Dawn and his company have left Universal City for Victorville where they will shoot the round-up and stampede scenes for "Lasca," a six-reel feature starring Frank Mayo and Edith Roberts. The story was adapted for the screen by Percy Heath from Frank Dupreze's famous poem of the same name.

John Lynch, a recent addition to the Selznick scenario staff

"Polly"—or rather Mrs. Sidney Drew, and a Lake Placid background from the Paramount-Drew comedy, "A Sisterly Scheme"

Frank Coleman has just completed a one-reel comedy, "When Cactus Corner Went Dry," in which he played the principal role, and also wrote the story.

Fox Studio Doings

WITH three new pictures just begun, increased activity is being shown at the Fox studio. Under the direction of Scott Dunlap, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair are co-starred in a recent story which Dunlap calls, "A Little Prayer for Rain." It is said to be a swiftly moving comedy-drama. The following are in the cast of their new vehicle: John Cossar, William Ryno, George Millum, Al Freemont, Lloyd Bacon and John Reese.

Madlaine Traverse has begun work on "The Heritage of Eden," with Edmund Lawrence, who formerly directed several Theda Bara pictures, in charge of production. The story is of South Africa, and included in the cast are Frederic Starr, Henry J. Herbert, and Edwin Booth Tilton. Miss Traverse has just finished "The Snares of Paris" under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell.

The third production to be begun is "The Devil's Riddle," being directed under Frank Beal, with Gladys Brockwell as star.

Plans are being made for the production of another picture with Peggy Hyland in the leading role, under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell. Miss Hyland has just returned from San Francisco where final scenes were taken of "The Web of Chance" with Al Green directing.

Several Sunshine comedies also have been begun. Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director, and his assistants have on hand or have recently shipped East, six comedies scheduled for release in the near future, and five companies are at work with six directors.

About Metro Players

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made that the five Drury Lane melodramas purchased in England by Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Corporation, which will be produced in the near future under the direction of Ray C. Smallwood, the first of which will be "The Best of Luck," will have an all star cast. Others are "The Marriage of Mayfair," "The Great Millionaire," "Hearts Are Trumps," and "The Hope."

Henry Harmon, who had the role of the brother in "Out of The Fog" with Nazimova, has been engaged for a strong part in the star's present production, "The Hermit Doctor of Giya."

Paramount-Artcraft

WITH several new features under way and one big special production practically ready for submission to the film cutters and editors, activities at the Lasky and Morosco studios are conspicuous for their volume. In the latter place, Ethel Clayton, under the direction of Robert Vignola, has begun work in a story which, while it has many opportunities for that star's humor and characterizations, still is of a lively melodramatic nature. This is the first subject for Ethel Clayton since her return from the Orient.

Marguerite Clark is nearing completion of "All of a Sudden, Peggy," which is being directed by Walter Edwards. Miss Clark, it is expected, will leave for New York City about September first.

The special attraction of "Everywoman," upon which all the resources of the Famous Players-Lasky Company have been lavished for several weeks, soon will be completed, with the exception of the cutting and editing. Final scenes were taken the week of August 18th of the work in which Violet Heming, the leading woman, appears and Miss Heming left for New York City to resume her stage work. The feature is under the direction of George H. Melford.

Ruth Roland telling the Pathe rooster about the formation of her own company which will produce "The Adventures of Ruth" a serial

Gertrude Astor, who has had leading parts in a number of Universal attractions

With Wallace Reid as star and diminutive Lila Lee as his leading woman, James Cruze has begun production of "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," the lively romantic comedy adapted from the well-known stage play of the same name.

Within a week or ten days, C. B. DeMille will begin production of "Why Change Your Wife," the companion play to his former offering, "Don't Change Your Husband." In the cast, which will be an all-star one, Gloria Swanson and Thomas Meighan will have the leading roles.

C. B. DeMille's production of "The Tree of Knowledge," with Major Warwick starred, soon will be under way. A special angle of this is the fact that Yvonne Gardell, noted dancer and daughter of the New York sculptor, will be engaged with Theodore Kosloff, the Russian dancer, to take part in an allegorical representation regarding Adam and Eve.
Eve.

Production will also be begun in the near future by George H. Melford of an elaborate revised version of Jack London's famous story, "The Sea Wolf." The company has arranged for the purchase of a ferry boat which is to be sunk in the inception of the picture and for the chartering of a schooner in which most of the action takes place. The cast has not yet been selected.

Vitagraph News Bits

ANTONIO MORENO has returned from New York City to begin production of a new serial, not yet titled, under the direction of William J. Bauman. The latest Moreno picture will be made almost entirely at the studio and in the vicinity of Los Angeles, consequently it is expected that a record will be made for rapid production.

A new two-reel comedy has been begun by Montgomery and Rock under the direction of Gilbert Pratt and having the cliffs at Balboa Beach for its background.

Production of "Pegeen," the rural romance adapted from the novel by Elinor Hoyt Brainard, is well under way with Bessie Love in the leading role and David Smith in charge of direction.

A burlesque on cafe life will be Larry Semon's vehicle for which an unusually large restaurant set has been erected.

Earle Williams is selecting the cast for his next feature, details of which are being withheld.

At the Ince Plant

TO provide a punch in the special production of "Americanism vs. Bolshevism" which is being filmed under the direction of Fred Niblo, a three-story brick building was boomed and an entire business street burned, during the week of August 18th. Several thousand extra people representing workers, Bolsheviks, and plain citizens were employed and the entire company was employed for four nights on the scenes. The cast includes Lloyd Hughes, Barbara Castleton, Jack Richardson, Claire De Brey, Walt Whitman, J. P. Lockney, Wallace Beery, Gordon Mullen and others.

Characterizations of a youth who has so much money that it sours on him, has been begun by Charles Ray in his new picture.

Here and There

PROFOUND secrecy surrounds the production by Al Christie of a special comedy in which Fay Tincher is to be the featured player and several Christie comedy favorites included in the cast. That part of the Christie studio which Al Christie is using is carefully guarded against encroachment by outsiders, but it is rumored that Al has succeeded in hitting upon something which is really novel among comedies.

Director Harry Beaudine and "Megaphone" Scott Sidney are engaged in the production of two new Christie and Strand comedies. Harry Depp, Bobby Vernon, Helen Darling and several others of the more widely known Christie funmakers are prominent in the casts.

As the first of its Eminent Author's Productions announced by Samuel Goldwyn, "The Cup of Fury," by Rupert Hughes, has been begun under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter, from a story written by E. Richard Schayer. In the leading roles are Helene Chadwick and Rockcliffe Fellowes, while among those in support are Kate Lester, Florence Deshom, Sidney Ainsworth, Clarissa Selwynne, Frank Leigh and Dwight Crittendon.

Clarence G. Badger has begun production of Will Rogers' second feature in which Irene Rich makes her first appearance as the cow-boy comedian's leading woman. Others of importance in the cast are Rowland Lee, Wade Butler, Marguerite Livingston, Milton Brown, Victor Potel, William Courtwright, Sidney De Gray, Lillian Langdon and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

Frank Lloyd has begun production of the Rex Beach novel, "The Silver Horde," and has taken a company of fifty players to Bellington, Washington, for location work. Myrtle Stedman returns to the screen as Cherry Mallote in the picture while a large cast has been engaged in support, including R. D. McLean, Robert McKim, Hector V. Sarno, Betty Blyth, Bull Durham, M. B. Flynn, E. J. Denneck, Frederick Stanton, Carl Gerrard, Curtis Cooksey, Neola Mae, and Murdock MacQuarrie.

The latest production to be begun, with Bessie Barriscale as star, had its first showing at the Brunton studio, August 15th. The picture was named "Her Purchase Price" from the sensational story by Maie B. Havey, and it is said to afford wide opportunity for Miss Barriscale's versatility. The action takes place in the Moroccan desert and England.

Production of the fourth feature, the name of which has not been chosen, has been begun by King W. Vidor with Florence Vidor as the star. The story deals with the policy of judging a man's real value by exterior appearances. Charles Meredith plays opposite Miss Vidor while others having important roles are Za Su Pitts, Lillian Leighton, and William P. Du Vaull.

June Caprice and Creighton Hale in "The Love Cheat," distributed by Pathe

Roscoe Karnes, who recently closed an engagement with the Morosco stage production of "Civilian Clothes" in Los Angeles, has been engaged to play opposite Za Su Pitts in a production just begun by King W. Vidor.

Leon T. Osborne, general manager of the Baby Marie Osborne Productions, and another recently organized company which will make western films starring Edith Sterling, is in New York on a short business trip. The first of the Edith Sterling pictures will be of five reels, and is produced under the direction of William Bertram and title at present is "The Arizona Cat Claw."

L. H. Moomaw, general manager of the Life-O-Graph Company of Portland, Oregon, is in Los Angeles engaging a cast for a picture shortly to be made by this company. Several years ago this organization filmed "When Cowboy Was King" which was sold nationally and proved very successful.

At the Selig studio, the third episode has been begun of the animal serial, starring Juanita Hansen and George Chesebro, while word comes from Newhall, where Franklyn Farnum is playing on location, that the two Western subjects being made there are nearing completion.

Statements made at the office of the Capital Film Company studio in Hollywood by General Manager Harry Owens, points to material increase in production at this plant for independent release. Additional stage space is to be added, sufficient to accommodate four or five companies. This will make possible three additional producing units being added to the present two organizations which are headed by Al Jennings and Neal Hart. As papers have not been signed, the featured players for the other films to be made have not been announced.

The Al Jennings Company is this week at work on "Long Riders," being a tale pertaining to the meeting of Jennings and O. Henry, which is laid in Honduras. Vivan Gain continues as leading woman in this subject.

The Neal Hart unit is at work on "Out of The West" with Jane Talen playing opposite Hart.

President S. L. Barnhard of the Capital, who has been at the studio for the past two weeks, plans to remain in the west for an additional two weeks.

GOOD TIME HAD — —

All the trade scribes of the west coast film and dramatic circles were invited to luncheon the other day when a new company's organization was anounced, and a contrivance consisting of wires, batteries and switches made it necessary for most to eat the meal as Job would have done. The attendance was very good, however, and everyone will swear the luncheon was a huge success even though there was a lot of food unconsumed. All the guests were sincere in wishing Catherine Curtis Corporation every success in the world. A big red sign on the wall said "Welcome Live Wires of the Press," but the guests did not welcome the other live wires, and therefore, there were no thanks extended to one K. O'Hara from Brooklyn who conceived the plot. Covers were laid for thirty, and red lemonade was served. Space does not permit a description of the gowns.

Last Week We Met—A. F. Victor

WE expect an avalanche of congratulations on the good looking cover on this week's Equipment Service Section. Surely we know of no other decoration that would be so compatible with the dignity and history of this page as the perfect likeness of Monsieur Alexander Victor, reproduced with perfect fidelity above.

The space left for his "doin's" is purposely small. Everybody in the film industry knows without being told what Victor has done; they know of his strict integrity in a business way; they have listened to his forceful oratory as he argued for better and safer pictures—but their children's children may want to cut out the picture for framing and we figured this size would be best.

Victor is Mayor of the City of Animatograph, near Davenport, Ioway, and a good Mayor, too. Besides administering the affairs of his colony he finds time to delve into the highways and byways of art, being, so we have heard, an accomplished musician on the 'cello, violin and pianner, not to mention the ocarina and the versatile comb. As an entertainer he has never been surpassed. If the M. P. industry goes to the dogs we are certain he could find a niche waiting for him on the "big time."

Not long ago Mr. Victor was the recipient of the first medal ever awarded by members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers "in recognition of valuable work accomplished with the least aid and the most opposition." This medal was the largest and best sounding medal it has ever been our fortune to see awarded; in fact, it was so large and delicately wrought that the usual presentation on a tray was omitted and an unveiling ceremony substituted. Mr. Victor's short but pithy reply will always be remembered with tears by those who witnessed it.

But by-play aside, it is safe to say that Victor enjoys the confidence and the friendship of the whole industry because of his straightforward business methods and his personality which accompanies them. Others may look on him as an enemy, but no one we believe is an enemy of Victor.

That is the type of man who is Mayor of Animatograph.

W. C. Wing of Argus' New York office has been on a jaunt to Washington, D. C., with big orders for the Crystal Bead Screen as a probable result.

The Philadelphia Transactions of the S. M. P. E. will be ready for distribution the latter part of next week, so we hear.

H. A. Campe, president of the Society, and Mrs. Campe, were in town for a short stay. One evening, so the story goes, was spent at the Greenwich theatre. Soon afterwards Mr. and Mrs. Campe returned to Pittsburgh, business being the reason for their departure.

Although appearances may be mighty deceiving it doesn't look as if the new Capitol theatre on Broadway would be opened for several weeks yet. The interior is still a mass of debris and wood framework.

THE ONLY SCREW HOLES IN THE WORLD

You drive the screw holes with a hammer in any material.

The screw holes are made for wood screws or machine screws to fit all sizes of screws. The head is removed and you leave a permanent screw hole.

DEPARTMENT 20

The Biggest Little Thing in the World

Some of the Reasons Why Screw Holes Will Be Bought and Used and Not Become Dead Stock for Anyone

1—They can be used without damage to receiving material.

2—They enable you to standardize to wood or machine screws in all material.

3—They are made of brass and will not rust under atmospheric or moisture conditions.

4—ECONOMY—They save more time value than the holes cost.

5—You get them for nothing and are paid for using them when you count time saved.

6—Screw holes have been needed ever since the first screw was used.

7—Special tools are NOT needed in using them in any material.

8—They can be used in any place a screw can be used.

9—By using screw holes, screws can be used in many places, and in many materials where it is impossible to use screws without them.

10—These are the only ready-made screw holes in the world.

11—No special screws are needed. These screw holes fit any wood screw or machine screw now in stock.

12—They make the neatest possible job in any material.

13—Every store where screws are sold must carry them in stock, because the line of screws is not complete without screw holes for them.

14—Every shop and factory where screws are used must also have these screw holes to fit the screws.

15—They are endorsed by all dealers in screws and by all users of screws.

16—Screw holes are entirely new and the world supply is yet to be furnished.

17—This is a progressive Old World of ours, and every active person in it must adopt all improved methods, and all new articles that will help him keep in the front line of progress.

18—Be among the first to stock up in screw holes if you are a dealer in screws.

19—Be among the first to install screw holes in your shop or factory, as you begin to save money soon as you use them.

20—In spite of the high cost of brass, screw holes are yet cheap.

21—We are letting the world know that screw holes can now be secured, by means of extensive advertising in all the principal Trade Journals that have the largest circulation among dealers in screws as well as users of screws.

22—Do not let your customer ask you for screw holes before you have them in stock. BE A LIVE WIRE.

23—They make everlasting holes in any material.

24—They mean "Plug-No-More" screw holes.

25—They are the result of Necessity being The Mother of Invention.

26—Anyone who can drive a nail can use screw holes.

27—Send for a sample and convince yourself.

28—Mechanics who see them say, "What do you think of that?"

29—In fact there are NO REASONS why screw holes should NOT be used.

Each of these reasons are enough to sell Screw Holes. There are many other reasons.

Write at once for our handsome Color Card showing screw holes in various materials which will be sent on request, together with samples and price list.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Solution of Emulsion Trouble

CLARENCE E. IRELAND, of the Jefferson theatre, Sullivan, Ill., writes in as follows:

"I am a regular reader of the Projection Department of the NEWS and I find it very beneficial, besides being entertaining. I am always glad to see pictures of other projection rooms for I get an idea of the conditions other fellows work under besides getting ideas for my own room.

Now the main reason why I am writing you is this: I want to know what is the best thing to use on the aperture plate, tension shoes, etc., before running new films. Up to this time I have used a wax candle but this does not remedy the trouble completely.

I wish the Projection Department the success it deserves.

Please answer this letter through your department or by mail. The way that is most convenient for you will suit me best."

Answer: You ask a question which is pretty hard to answer direct. As far as we know, the best way to get around the old trouble of emulsion deposits has not as yet been found. The method one man has used with success has been tried by others and called "no good." But some time ago a projectionist who had been in the game for some years told us about the scheme he has been using for quite a while with complete success. Here it is for you to try out in place of your wax candle.

Take an old shoe and from the top part cut strips of the leather of the right size to cover completely the tension shoes. Get some good quality crockery cement and use it to stick the leather strips on to the steel surfaces.

This kink has been tried out by several men and has been found to eliminate entirely the trouble experienced with new film. In fact, one theatre located close to a laboratory where "news" reels were printed and developed, got its weekly topicals in the worst possible condition for projecting. Sometimes when the "news" was late the reel was received almost wet, so hurriedly had it been prepared and finished. By using the scheme just described the projectionists at this theatre were able to run these films with no trouble whatsoever. No longer are they bothered with emulsion covered shoes and gate.

Other men have used chamois skin in the same way but the texture of chamois differs materially from that of common tanned leather and consequently does not stick so well to the metal surfaces.

Try out the leather strips and see if you don't find them a big improvement over the waxing, besides being much simpler in every way. Whether your trial is a success or a failure write us a letter giving the results so that other readers of the department may be guided by what happens in your case.

As you see, your letter is being answered through the department instead of by mail. A considerable number of questions are answered via the post-office department because they are merely repetitions of questions that have been asked and answered time and time again in these columns.

If you like to see photographs of other projection rooms so that you may get tips for yours, why isn't it right that you should send in some photographs of the room where you hang out in order that the other fellow may get some of your ideas? We shall look for the photographs.

Wages Here and in England

AS a point of interest to projectionists in this country we reprint a letter which appeared in a recent issue of the English "Kinematograph & Lantern Weekly." Here is a "chief" operator suggesting that hours of work be lengthened if the wages are to be increased. There will be few if any in the United States to agree with him or his arguments.

Remember that £1 is equivalent to approximately $4.75 in good U. S. money and figure for yourself what the best theatres in England are paying projectionists. It makes a fellow feel that perhaps our lot isn't so bad after all, even after making all deductions to cover the difference in standards of living.

The "K. O. U." referred to in the letter is the Kinematograph Operators' Union.

"Noticing the criticism made by A. H. W. M. on the rules for operators as propounded by the E. T. W., I would ask you to allow me to support these views. The minimum wage of £4 is far too high for the majority of the small halls in the country, and should be based on prices of admission charged as well as the seating capacity. No chief operator would be able to do justice to the work entrusted to him under the proposed scheme of a 47-hour week. Unless the films received were of first run quality, it would be impossible to give them a proper examination under about two hours, and I feel sure that every operator will be obliged to skimp his work and spoil his reputation in order to conform to the rules of a union. There is no distinction raised between a man employed as an operator and a man employed as an electrician-operator, who has to be responsible for all the lighting installation, generating plant, etc., who can not only keep it in repair, but alter or modify as required.

"Taken on the other hand the K. O. U. is proposing a minimum of 5 guineas which is a wage only to be obtained at super-cinemas in the leading provincial cities and could not possibly be met by the smaller halls. The wages and hours must certainly be altered before the operators who are standing out can be induced to join, for to join now, with a strike policy following, would mean the temporary filling of his job by the manager, who in the majority of cases has been an operator earlier in his career, and the very man whom the operators are combining to remove will be placed in a stronger position than ever. Modify the minimum wage and make it a 50 or 52-hour week instead of 47 and the majority of operators who are standing out will then join."

Wants to Know How to Get Patent

F. E. WILLIAMSON of Winter Haven, Fla., has an idea that he wants to patent and asks us how to go about it. His letter reads:

"I have operated a motion picture machine from the days of the old wooden headed one pin type up to the present modern machines. I have seen many improvements which I was going to invent but the other fellow always beat me to it. NOW I have an invention which I wish to patent and am asking you for information how to proceed to obtain same."

Answer: The procedure which precedes and accompanies the issuing of a patent is so complicated that it would be impossible to explain them to you in the limited space we have here. But we will give you a suggestion or two which may make it easier for you to commence the preliminary actions.

The Government Printing Office at Washington has issued a booklet called "The Rules of Practice in the United States Patent Office" which it will send to you free upon application. In this book you will find all the necessary blanks and forms which are used in applying for and obtaining a patent. The various steps from application to issuance are clearly explained so that anyone may follow them without trouble.

But even with the help of this booklet we do not believe you should attempt to secure a patent without the assistance of a thoroughly competent and reliable patent attorney. These men who have been educated in the intricacies of patent law have all the necessary facilities at hand to enable them to get an application through in the shortest possible time. On the ability, also, of the patent attorney or the individual who draws up the specification rests the value of the patent after it is issued. The cost will be greater of course if you make use of a patent attorney, but the results are apt to be worth a great deal more.

Almost any lawyer in your town will be glad to recommend a patent attorney on whom you can rely. Or you can write to Munn & Co., New York City, who run an excellent patent department. Either method is to be preferred to an attempt to get the patent through without legal assistance.

We hope you will be able this time to beat the other fellow to it. But be sure before you put too much hard earned money into the idea that it will be worth something commercially. Perhaps you have already informed yourself on this point, in which case, we say—go to it, and good luck.

Laying Out a Theatre

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City:

Gentlemen: I am in a dilemma. I want your help and want it right now because the more I think over the proposition pending the more uncertain I become. It is this: We are overhauling a building for pictures with a small stage for vaudeville. The building is 125 ft. by 25 ft. and is two stories. We are tearing out the upper story which will mean a clearance of 24 ft. between floor and ceiling. There is still an additional space of 8 ft. which we can get by raising the ceiling at the front of the house, so you see what we have to work on.

We want to locate our projection room in such a position that it will take up the least space but cannot decide where. That is one thing we want you to locate for us. Am enclosing a cut from the NEWS showing a projection room but cannot decide on the height necessary. We also want to know the height necessary to raise the gallery so that it will not interfere with the picture. We want a gallery 35 ft. from the 10 ft. vestibule or 45 ft. from the extreme front.

The floor of the main auditorium will be gradually raised from a point 75 ft. from the front, the slope being 1 in. to each foot, making a total raise of 5 ft. 5 in. The stage will be 3 ft. high. The screen will be elevated about 2 ft. above that making a picture, say, 8 by 10, with a throw of 105 to 110 ft. We will use two machines.

We would like to get the proper slant and height of the gallery since it seems impossible for us to get one just right. At the present time we have two houses and lose quite a bit of space for lack of the correct slant.

If you would answer these questions we would surely appreciate it very much. We would not worry you but we are not blessed with an architect in these quarters and those who pretend to know are less well posted as to our needs than we are ourselves.

(Signed) I. J. W.

ONE look at I. J. W.'s proposition and it is seen to be a bad one. With a structure to begin with only 24 feet in height, there is going to be mighty little room for a gallery, at least a gallery of any size. A good many exhibitors would omit the gallery idea right at the start and endeavor to make up for the lost seating capacity in some other way.

But I. J. W. wants to get in that gallery so we will do what we can under the circumstances.

The first thing to do is to lay out to scale the outlines of his building, both in plan and elevation. On these drawings indicate those parts which cannot be changed, that is, the fixed quantities such as the stage, vestibule and orchestra ramp or slope of floor.

With the data supplied by I. J. W. such a plan has been laid out as shown in Fig. 1.

The next step is to locate the screen for the time being so that a clear view of it is obtained from all parts of the lower floor. We would suggest at this point in the figures given us. Instead of placing the bottom edge of the screen at a point 2 feet above the stage it would better the whole layout by making it 4 feet. With the screen in this position the view from the back seats on the lower floor is bettered, the angle at which the gallery must be placed is less and above all other reasons is the one that the angle of projection is considerably reduced.

In laying out a theatre especially a motion picture house the "lines of sight" should be drawn in as early as possible even though they must be revised later. We have done this in the diagram taking for example the position of the person occupying the worst seat in the house. Naturally as he comes to the theatre to be entertained by pictures, the man in the back row of the orchestra or gallery will demand that he be able to see all the screen at all times. In addition to this, a space of narrow width around the edges of the screen should be visible to him.

Since the lines of sight of the person occupying the back row in the orchestra will determine the position and angle of the gallery, lines C A and C B drawn from the position of the patron's eyes to which we must work on the orchestra floor.

The next point to consider is the gallery. I. J. W. has given us a figure to work on by stipulating that he wants a 35-foot gallery. Because of the unusually low height of the house it would not be possible to get the gallery too high. With this to work on, we commence the gallery at the roof line of I. J. W's. present house. With a 35-foot gallery the front point will fall somewhere on the arc X. Y.

Here again the height of the house tells us that the gallery cannot be made too steep so a point G is taken slightly above the line of sight A C. From G the gallery line is continued to the eaves G H. Then drawing lines of sight from the position of the person in the back row, we get H A and H B which appear to be satisfactory.

As usual, the projection room has been left to the last but it has been kept in mind throughout the analysis. There were really but two possible locations for it; on the first floor and in the back of the gallery. The first position was out of the question because a gallery of 35 feet was insisted upon and projection would have been impossible. If the building were being entirely remodelled, arrangements should be made to place the projection room on the first floor but unfortunately it cannot be done here without extensive alterations.

There remains then but one location for the projection room and that is in the back of the gallery. But even putting the room there will mean that I. J. W. must raise his roof the entire 8 feet, and in addition sink the floor of his projection room about 3 feet below the top floor of the gallery. With this arangement the port holes will be high enough to clear the heads of persons sitting in the last gallery rows, and, what is more important to the projectionist his room will be high enough to permit of ventilation of a kind.

At this juncture the approximate location of the port holes should be determined so that the limiting rays of the projected beam may be followed. When this is done it is found that the roof must be raised for a distance of 65 feet from the front to permit an unobstructed travel of the light waves. When this is done the plans are complete. The builder has the position of screen, gallery and projection room and should be able to proceed with the construction.

A word should be said in closing concerning the screen. While the angle of projection is not large, yet it is great enough so that it must be considered.

But the remedy is a simple one, consisting merely of bringing out the base of the screen about nine inches so that it will be more nearly perpendicular to the center ray of the beam. With this completed I. J. W. should have a house in which a clear view of the screen is provided for every seat and in which the projection should not be worse than the average. How far above the average it will be depends of course on the man in that 11 foot room at the back of the gallery.

The Samson of Projectionists

THE above portrait is not a picture of Sandow but of the husky world renowned projection machine operator, Joe Enlander, a Vitagraph artist.

This artistic photograph was posed at The Highlands, N. J., and shows the versatile Joe just after taking a dip from the end of the pier.

Joe became proficient in swimming while assisting in the photographing of wild animals in the various lakes and river territories of South Africa.

It seems that when Joe first went out with Cherry Kearton to make pictures of the rare animals that have their habitate in the jungles of Africa, he was unable to swim—and one afternoon while they were attempting to make a picture of a ferocious rhinoceros, that peaceable animal o jected to the noise of the camera and deliberate charged upon the operator and his assistant.

In order to escape from the on-rushing rhino eros, Joe was compelled to leap into the wat which he found much to his surprise too deep wade, so there was nothing for him to do oth than to strike out and again to his surprise learn that he had a knowledge of the science of swi ming.

Since then Joe has bragged on being one of t best swimmers in South Africa and he may right. Anyhow we have Joe's word for it and he admits it himself it must be correct.

Factor in Studio Migration

DARK studios and rumors of dark studios ha been the subjects of constant discussi among film men during the last few wee Whatever the magnitude of the promised migr tion of the studios from California to the Ea one of the impelling forces in such a moveme is the Sun Light Arc Lamp.

This comparatively new invention of J. Just Harmer is now doing its work in all the leadi studios, or will as soon as orders already plac for it can be filled. The story of its creation m be of interest.

Mr. Harmer was working on a composing m chine that would do typography by photograp and was led into experiments on the Sun Lig when he discovered the lamp's color values in search for parallel rays. Mr. Harmer discover that his new lamp, of 100,000 candle-power, g a 100 per cent color definition. That is to say spectroscope measurement of the color rays of sun was found to be identical with that of lamp. The lamp also gives absolute definition depth, creating a stereoscopic effect.

The field for its use is by no means limited motion picture work. The College of Physici and Surgeons, for instance, has been using it work in operating rooms.

Stage Equipment — Theatres Worth While — Auditorium Lobby

Evolution of Architectural and Other Features of Moving Picture Theatres

By Edwin H. Flagg

WHILE the proper arrangement to most satisfactorily plan a dramatic theatre stage and auditorium has been more or less settled, the arranging of the super moving picture theatres—or so-called "presentation houses," is still in the experimental stage.

This is made poignantly apparent when we see big theatres on which most expert advice was originally obtained, being radically rearranged even while they are in course of construction.

Commercially, in 1894, motion pictures were first introduced in the vaudeville theatres, later between the acts of dramatic productions but in both instances as an added attraction, in the nature of a novelty, much the same as liquid air demonstrations.

ELECTRICAL EFFECT FRONT CURTAIN IN USE AT THE KINEMA, LOS ANGELES
Without Light Effects This Curtain Has the Appearance of a Rich Oriental Drapery

The films were practically all of a uniform width and in fifty-foot lengths. All that was required was the placing of the projecting machine in the rear of the auditorium and "throwing the picture" on a white cloth, usually the back of an old painted drop on the stage.

The machine rattled like a threshing machine and the picture flickered and jumped but outside of the addition of devices overcoming these defects, and safety and stabilizing attachments, it is the same machine today, and "runs" the same identical film, sprocket holes, width and all, with the exception of the old Biograph film and machine, which was of a broader gauge.

The film being a composition of gun cotton and camphor, with a "film" of collodion on one side, it was very inflammable. The ray from the arc light intensified through the condensing lens on to the film and thence into the projecting lens was so hot where it touched the film that it would burn the flesh of one's finger if left there a few seconds. It was only kept from setting fire to the film by the fact that any single picture was only exposed to it for about one-fortieth of a second.

But the inevitable happened whenever any part of the operation went astray—and it not only usually consumed the entire film, but on exploding would set fire to other things nearby, and cause a panic, if nothing more.

This led to the invention and adoption of contrivances to automatically protect all that part of the film not directly exposed in case the film for any reason stopped long enough to be ignited.

Then municipal fire and insurance boards compelled the building of asbestos, metal or fire resisting booth to house the "machine." Instead of the natural color of white sheeting the protection "screen" was painted with, first, whiting, alabastine or similar preparations, and at a later period with a final coating of zinc white.

Five and ten years ago marks the period of screen experimenting. Hundreds of "Inventors" of "new discoveries" of what each claimed to be the ultra perfect screen were put on the market. These were divided in two broad classes, those of a flat dead white surface and the others of a reflective surface.

The flat white classes were all based on either whiting or zinc, or both, with either a glue or gypsum binding, but were tinted into innumerable tones by adding other dry pigments, such as cobalt or chrome yellow in small quantities, giving either golden or bluish white effects.

The base of nearly all the reflecting screens was aluminum powder although many other bronzes were used.

Real mirrors were also made in one piece of plate glass, ground rough on the exposed surface and usually about eleven by fifteen feet in size, selling for six and seven hundred dollars each.

The most popular was the aluminum base screen, but it has given way to the old fashioned—but improved—dead white, which is now the accepted screen in the most successful theatres. Imported French zinc white is the base.

The defects of this reflective screen were, first, this intense brilliancy which if there were any extreme right or left to the auditorium, meant an additional halation or direct light reflection in the eyes of the spectator.

Furthermore, in spite of some opinions to the contrary, there never was a reflective sheet made that did not show in greater or less degree, noticeable cloud-like forms in any white part of a picture. These are technically called "visions" or "ghosts."

A properly made dead white screen easily eliminates this defect, giving a pure, solid white unobstructed surface. This allows for more depth and naturally through a more truthful reproduction on the photography, gives comparative tone prospective—the lines of vision in the picture giving the proper foreshortening to objects of dimensions.

While this point was in some cases acknowledged by the operator, he would still insist upon a sharp clear picture—from his vantage point in the booth—and he did not realize or care that the average spectator in the center of the theatre got a headache from looking at it.

As an operator was usually the deciding factor he won his point until the consensus of opinion overruled him.

Another obsession was that the picture must be sharply cut out and entirely surrounded by dead black—either painted surfaces or hangings.

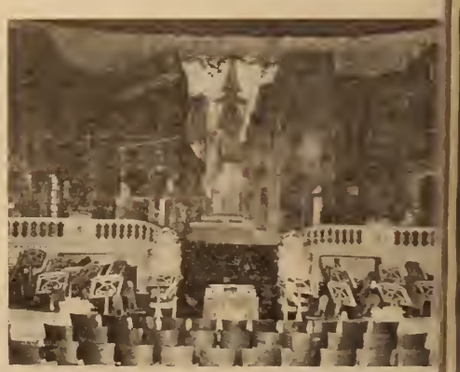
It can be noted in this connection that Grauman's million dollar theatre stage in Los Angeles contains light gray travertine stone effect columns five feet in diameter and forty-two feet high and other details in the same color near the picture screen on the stage without detracting from the picture.

Recently light gray pilasters, part of a domed palace setting, has succeeded the former black surroundings of the "picture" on the remodelled stage at the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco.

The stage in the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles, erected last year after diligently searching for the best of everything, has just been rearranged on entirely different lines from the original plans, although the owners of the Kinema Circuit of Theatres are among the oldest and most successful in the business. Here heavy lavender tapestry effect stage scenery masks the picture sheet.

The surroundings of the screen in the new California Theatre in Los Angeles, are to be painted and real draperies and pylons all in a uniform grey tone.

Going back to the evolution of the architectural features, after the public had been appeased with the novelty of the pictures—they ceased to draw sufficiently to be profitable, and they were omitted from the program of the only places where they had been shown, or only continued as a fill-in.



Their educational and incomparable entertaining possibilities had not been dreamed of, and they were apparently on the shelf with marionettes, the stereoscope and magic lanterns.

NEW ART TAPESTRY EFFECT
Drop Curtain in Loring Theatre, Riverside

The next stage was the "store show" period originated by itinerant exhibitors with an outfit consisting of a portable machine and a few fifty foot reels—each complete in itself. These reels would consist of a diversity of subjects, the earliest of which were "The Picture of a Kiss"—showing close-ups of May Irwin and Pete Daily rendering the osculation,—"The Waves Dashing on the Cliffs of Dover, England," "An Acrobatic Dance," etc.

These pioneers, who led a precarious existence would rent a vacant store room, equip it with folding chairs usually rented from the local undertaker, hang their sheet in the back, darken the windows and doors and set up, literally a "box office" in the doorway, masking the entrance with some kind of curtains and proceed to grind.

STREET SCENE IN TANGIERS FOR NAZIMOVA'S "EYE FOR AN EYE" AT THE CALIFORNIA, LOS ANGELES.

Other pioneers came in from the ranks of the "slot machine" and penny arcadesmen, whose regular vocation was being seriously hampered an ome cases abruptly terminated by the activities of he prosecuting attorneys of the cities in which ney operated.

Then the "two" and multiple reelers came in, ealing with romances, but preferably impossible omedy situations and chases, trick photography nd custard pies.

The inventor of the custard pie has as much to o with the success of moving picture as did East-nan of Rochester. For the film of the custard ver the surprised and hurt features of a comedy illain did as much to bring the spectator back to ee it again, and this time the entire family, as any ther one thing in the film industry.

While there was a great deal of money made n some of these remodelled stores—some of the xhibitors cleaning up fortunes; taken as a whole was like the average mining camp, there was nore put in them than was taken out.

An Oriental setting used for one week in the California Theatre, Los Angeles

But the winners would subsequently secure additional capital and get an architect to put them p a theatre consisting of only an auditorium with, f any, an excuse for a stage, usually consisting of proscenium arch and back wall with barely nough space between for a man to pass through.

New Lantern Slide Taking Strong Hold on Big Market

THE Fine Art Slide, manufactured by the International Lantern Slide Corporation for the use of motion picture producers and exhibitors, as well as an advertising medium for other branches of industry, seems to have already established itself, according to reports from the offices of the manufacturer, as the coming motion picture theatre slide.

It was designed, experimented with for years, and finally perfected by Robert John, an inventor of many photographic innovations who saw the manifold disadvantages in the old-fashioned heavy glass slide invented years ago with the first magic lanterns.

This new Fine Arts Slide differs so radically from its predecessor that it can hardly be classed as a magic lantern slide. The first and most obvious disadvantage of the old style—the two glasses—have been dispensed with, eliminating the possibility of breakage.

This feature of common lantern slides has long hampered the producer and exhibitor. Instead Mr. John has builded the body of his slide from gelatine, and the picture, instead of being photographed, printed, developed and dried in the old manner is now completed rapidly by means of Mr. John's special photo-gelatine process, enabling him to obtain the same beautiful half-tone effects found in the finest screen prints. The copy for the slide is therefore printed on the gelatinous sheet, which is pliant and light, and will take flat colors or combinations as may be desired.

Motion picture producers, beginning with Fox Film Corporation, who have adopted the Fine Art Slide for all future big special productions, have been quick to realize the enormous advantages of this slide over the old style and many have already discarded the heavy glass one for this unique new departure.

At the laboratory of the International Lantern Slide Corporation at 229 West 28th street, Mr. John, the inventor and perfector of the screen's latest novelty, is at present engaged in making experiments on some new and interesting color combinations for the slide which he has just introduced on the market.

"It is very gratifying," said the inventor when approached on the subject of his slide, "I have been working on this Art Slide for a long time and the reception which it has been given by the producers and exchange managers repays in full for the work I have put into it.

"Years ago it occurred to me that there was need of such a slide. The old style glass article had many drawbacks, and, after a score of experiments with several different materials I finally figured out the process which has resulted in the slide you see here.

"Not only is the projected picture better on the screen," he explained, "but the numerous troubles in handling the old slide are all eliminated in this one. It is unbreakable—it costs less to distribute, the initial cost is less—it can be sent by first-class mail with a letter.

"Fox Film Corporation, however, has seen the merits in my Art Slide and all these employes you see here are working full speed on orders for Fox to cover its newest productions such as "Checkers," "Wolves of the Night," "Evangeline," "La Belle Russe," "Rough Riding Romance," and many others. Orders from other prominent producers are also under way and we are receiving many inquiries from some of the big exhibitors throughout the country since the Fox company made its recent announcement of the adoption of our slide."

Mr. John is highly enthusiastic over the success of his Fine Art Slide and predicts that it will revolutionize the slide projection branch of the motion picture industry in view of the many superior qualities of this unique slide including plain black-and-whites as well as the infinite color combinations obtainable with his special process.

Another Giant in Ranks of Motion Picture Musicians

THE motion picture has again proven its vital importance in the ranks of predominating industries. This mighty industry has developed in several years from the stage of infancy to the power of a modern giant. It has become a national institution; it is today the greatest and most powerful medium of transmitting secrets of art, music, education, etc., to the eyes of the wondering world. This essential industry can also be proud of having the greatest talents in the universe work for it. The best authors, composers, musicians and artists are on its payroll.

Another valuable addition to the ranks of those who are a credit to the motion picture industry is Mr. Ernesto Natiello, a musician of reputable standing. Mr. Natiello was formerly called "Napoleon of Bandmasters." He has conducted the Natiello band for years, and created a sensation wherever he played. He recently conducted the orchestra at the Circle theatre, of Indianapolis, Indiana, an organization which can be considered a very successful one. The Indianapolis Sunday Star of August 3d published the following about Mr. Natiello:

"Indianapolis and the Circle theatre are to be congratulated upon having Signor Ernesto Natiello as the director of the orchestra at the Circle. No matter how attractive the theatre, how comfortable the seats, how pleasing the photoplay; no matter what effort has been spent on the other features of the program, if the accompanying music is unsatisfactory half the pleasure of the entertainment is taken away. Many people who are not movie fans have been drawn to the picture theatres because of the music, and patrons of the Circle are always sure of an agreeable hour or two, even if the cinema does not happen to star their favorite player. That this is true is largely due to the fact that besides being a thorough musician, Natiello is also a man of practical judgment. He does not attempt to force nothing but ragtime on an audience which includes people of cultivated musical taste. Neither does he overburden the program with heavy selections, but he does combine popular airs with classical music in a delightfully original and satisfying manner.

"Signor Natiello is something of an idealist, and he believes that the discriminating use of good music in picture theatres is bound to educate the public. It is evident from the reception accorded Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' last week that selection was appreciated and other overtures equally difficult have been enthusiastically received. Those which have met with greatest favor are 'Mignon,' 'Norma,' 'Il Guarany,' 'The Dumb Girl of Portici,' 'LeRoi la Dit' and 'Stradella.' The overture to 'William Tell' has also been used very successfully.

"Natiello is guided usually in his selection of the concert number by his own taste. Something with a beautiful theme working up to a strong climax is generally his choice. The melodious theme with its variations pleases, and the smashing climax fills the emotional soul of the director with a glow that communicates itself to his musicians and lends them added force.

"In 'playing the picture,' the director reviews the film carefully in advance, making his own selection and always including for comedy scenes light popular tunes. Some syncopated airs are always included so that no matter whether one's taste is for grand opera, light melody, or ragtime, one may be sure of finding something in the program to please."

The above undoubtedly proves that Mr. Natiello knows his business and although he has met with success at the Circle theatre, he has nevertheless decided to leave this institution. This again shows that there are no limits with Mr. Natiello. We have received information that Mr. Natiello is at present perfecting arrangements to conduct a very large orchestra in one of the biggest theatres in the middle West.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS congratulates Mr. Natiello on his splendid achievements toward the betterment of motion picture exhibitions.

"The Third Kiss" Inspires a Song

IN order to publicize "The Third Kiss," a song inspired by the Paramount-Artcraft picture of the same name, one of the early Famous Players-Lasky releases on the new season, the Joseph W. Stern Company, publishers of the music, has issued a fifteen-inch snipe advertising both the song and the picture in connection with a "Third Kiss Sundae." The snipe is intended for druggists and soda fountain operators to paste over mirrors or in windows as an advertisement for a new sort of sundae.

At one end of the snipe are instructions for making "The Third Kiss Sundae," while the body of the strip contains a well worded advertisement in which the title of the picture is prominent. The instructions may be cut off before the snipe is put into use without destroying its balance.

Song Inspired by Paramount-Artcraft Production, Published by Waterson, Berlin & Snyder

ISSUED from the music publishing house of Waterson, Berlin & Snyder is the song, "The Valley of the Giants," inspired by the Paramount-Artcraft picture of the same name in which Wallace Reid is starred and which will be released under the Selective Booking plan the 31st of August.

The words were written by Sam N. Lewis and Joe Young and the music by Bert Grant, three of the cleverest members of the Waterson, Berlin & Snyder staff, and the composition is declared to be most meritorious in all respects. Especially so is the harmonization of the chorus, and it is predicted that it will become one of the big song hits of the day.

The utmost in the matter of a direct tie-up with a motion picture is here offered, for not only does the sheet music carry a still from the photoplay, "The Valley of the Giants," as the front cover illustration, with the printed statement that the picture was the inspiration for the song, but the entire back cover is an advertisement of the picture, carrying a direct appeal to theatre patrons who may purchase the song.

Exhibitors are advised by Famous Players-Lasky to get in touch with the main office of the publishers in New York or with one of their branch offices for information about accessories such as slides, throw-aways, etc.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"That Naughty Waltz," by Sol. P. Levy. A Beautiful waltz with a captivating melody. One of its many charms is the simplicity of the melody. Anyone could whistle it after hearing it a few times. Published for full orchestra, song and instrumental. (Belwin, Inc.)

2—"Kentucky Dream," by S. R. Henry, D. Onivas, F. H. Warren, composers of the famous "Indianola." This number is a beautiful waltz ballad. (J. W. Stern.)

4—"Budding Spring," by E. Platzman. A dramatic romance of tonal beauty. Published for orchestra, and piano solo. (Belwin, Inc.)

5—"Karzan," By Will E. Dulmage. A fox trot with a real oriental melody. (Sam Fox.)

7—"Ching a Long," by Joe Gold. An oriental fox trot. "Ching-a-Ling" is a "syncopated Chinese Serenade." (Chas. K. Harris.")

8—"You Didn't Want Me When You Had Me" (So Why Do You Want Me Now), a novelty ballad with a story full of heart interest. (J. W. Stern & Co.)

DOROTHY DALTON in "Other Men's Wives" closed a successful three days' engagement at the Orpheum August 16. The Orpheum program for August 17 consisted of Billie Rhodes in "Hoop-La."

DOROTHY GISH in "Peppy Polly" won new friends at the Orpheum Monday. Tuesday and Wednesday, August 18, 19 and 20.

JACK PICKFORD in "Bill Apperson's Boy" made a big hit with Orpheum patrons August 21, 22 and 23, the picture going over exceptionally well. The Orpheum program for August 24 was Bessie Barriscale in "Hearts Asleep."

MAY ALLISON in the Metro comedy "The Uplifters" was the attraction at the Idea on August 18 and 19.

"LIFE'S GREATEST PROBLEM," J. S. Stuart Blackton's master production, made a good impression with Idea audiences on August 20 and 21.

WILLIAM FARNUM in "The Jungle Trail" delighted Idea patrons on Aug. 22 and 23.

THE SCENIC THEATRE at Waupan opened on Tuesday, August 19, after a two weeks' rest, presenting Corinne Griffith in "The Unknown Quantity." This was followed with George Walsh in "Never Say Quit."

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in "The Reason Why" was the offering at the Davidson, Waupun, on August 15. This was followed on August 16 with Tom Moore in "Go West, Young Man," and a Mack Sennett comedy, "Never Too Old." On August 17 Lina Cavaliera in "A Woman of Impulse" was the offering at the Davidson.

HARRY WEISS of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit, Chicago Office, is back from his little joy ride vacation as chipper as a lark and all set for a big fall business. Here's betting a five, a ten, or as much as two-bits you'll get the business, Harry.

Shelbyville Picture Theatres Open on Sunday for First Time

WITHOUT opposition from the authorities motion picture theatres of Shelbyville, Ind., opened for the first time in the history of the city on Sunday of last week.

Complaints were registered by ministers and church people, but no affidavits were filed against the owners of the two houses or any of their employes. The ministers declared that they believe it was the duty of the city officials and county prosecutor to see that the law is enforced. One minister said that he did not intend to be made the "scapegoat" in the affair, and the city and county officials adopted the same attitude.

In resolutions adopted by the First Methodist church it is stated:

"Theatres cannot, in our judgment, count on the support and patronage of the law-abiding citizens of Shelbyville and Shelby county heretofore given them during the week so long as such theatres are engaged in the open violation of the law on Sunday and the desecration of the Sabbath."

Meanwhile the theatres operate on Sunday.

J. H. Wallis, Dubuque Editor, Says Chaplin is Genius and Artist

J. H. WALLIS, the editor of the Dubuque Daily News, expressed the opinion of the majority of people in Dubuque in an editorial on Friday, August 10. As Mr. Wallis is considered one of the biggest editors in this part of the country, his editorial had more to do in increasing Charlie's popularity than columns of reading notices. He said, in part: "Charlie is a genius, an artist. He has chosen a peculiar, an unusual, field for the display of his genius and his art. He deals in rubbish and filth—in dust heaps, in tin cans, and pushcarts—in mud and vermin, in soiled sheets and bedraggled clothing—in squalid dwellings and in menial occupations. With these materials—rejected by most artists—Charlie produces his masterpieces, his triumphs of fun, his cataclysms of laughter. He is an artist in filth, a master of pleasing vulgarity."

Spokane News and Views

SPOKANE theatres showed the following pictures last week: Clemmer, Zasu Pitts in "Better Times"; Liberty, "Oh, Boy!" and Dorothy Dalton in "The Girl from Red Butte"; Casino, George Walsh in "Putting One Over"; Class A, Madaleine Traverse in "When Fate Decides"; Rex, Douglass Fairbanks in "A Modern Musketeer"; Lyric, Dorothy Bernard in "Infidelity" and Claire Anderson in "The Gray Parasol"; Majestic, Charles Ray in "String Beans" and Jack Pickford in "His Majesty Bunker Bean."

In Indianapolis and Indiana

"HOME" and "Forbidden," two productions featuring Mildred Harris Chaplin, continue to be booked extensively throughout this territory. They have been booked for an early showing in Indianapolis, in Louisville, Evansville, Terre Haute and most of the larger cities of Indiana.

RALPH W. ABBETT, manager of the Universal Film Exchange of Indianapolis, recently returned from a trip to Louisville, Ky.

THE CIRCLE observed its third anniversary last week with an Oriental pageant depicting the story of the theatre. Costumes and scenic effects were especially designed for the occasion. Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum" was picked by Manager S. Barrett McCormick as his screen offering for the occasion.

Grand Rapids Theatre Notes

GEORGE W. SPAETH of Kalamazoo, formerly manager of the Majestic theatre here, has leased the Temple theatre, which has been idle for some time. The policy of the house has not been decided upon, but probably will include pictures, according to Spaeth.

THE ORPHEUM has resumed after a summer vacation. Musical comedy and five-reel and two-reel films are on the program. At present the theatre is running "Perils of Thunder Mountain" as a serial.

THE LYRIC THEATRE, which recently was taken over by the Consolidated Theatres, Inc., has been opened as a 15-cent picture house. Previous to its new ownership the Lyric was a nickel admission playhouse. "Daddy Long Legs" was the initial offering.

SHOWING of the Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," has been begun at the Superba.

"THE GIRL ALASKA" drew good houses at the Idlehour.

"EYES OF THE SOUL," with Elsie Ferguson and Wyndham Standing, at the Strand proved one of the most popular pictures seen in Grand Rapids during the present year, judging from box office receipts.

WORK of remodelling and redecorating still is being conducted at the Apollo theatre, recently purchased by the Consolidated Theatres, Inc. The theatre is expected to reopen within a short time, but there has been no announcement as to its future policy.

D. H. BESTOR, manager of the Court theatre, Kankakee, Illinois, has been elected alderman of the First Ward of the city.

THE LYRIC had no cause for complaint for the week of August 10-16 with Clara Kimball Young in "Cheating Cheaters," Emmy Wehlen in "The Belle of the Season" and Alice Brady in "The World to Live In."

KINOGRAMS have made a big hit at the Majestic, where they are shown twice a week.

A PEEK IN at the Pekin theatre revealed the fact that the theatre was doing a big business. The Palace, too, is doing very well.

CHARLES RAY had four good days at the Vaudette in "Bill Henry." Elliott Dexter and Lila Lee were seen the last half of the same week in "A Daughter of the Wolf."

FRED E. CRESWELL, Chicago manager for Famous Players-Lasky, was in the city the week of August 10 getting contracts on the new bookings for 1919-1920. Mr. Creswell brought down "The Miracle Man," and ran it off at the Gaiety, and all who saw it were unanimous in stating that it certainly is a miraculous picture.

THE GAIETY had a good week with Catherine Calvert in "The Career of Katherine Bush" and Pauline Frederick in "The Peace of Roaring River."

GUS KERASOTES of the Royal has started "Elmo, the Mighty," the serial with Elmo Lincoln. The second chapter was shown on Sunday, August 17. The program for the rest of the week was: Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas"; William Farnum in "The Darkest Trail"; June Elvidge in "The Quickening Flame"; Thursday, Bessie Love in "A Yankee Princess"; Gladys Brockwell in "The Call of the Soul"; and Norma Talmadge in "By Right of Purchase."

SOME OF THE FEATURES at the Savoy State Fair week were Chapter 9 of "Thunder Mountain," Pete Morrison in "A Western Wooing," Mary Miles Minter in "A Bachelor's Wife," and Emmy Wehlen in "False Evidence."

Gathered in Green Bay

"PUTTING IT OVER," a Paramount film, starring Bryant Washburn and Shirley Mason, was screened in the Colonial theatre August 22-23. The picture presented many amusing situations of a "village cut-up."

BESSIE BARRISCALE was seen in "Tangled Threads," a Select offering, August 21-22-23-24 in the Grand theatre.

"FIGHTING DESTINY," a Vitagraph picture, was produced in the Royal theatre August 22-23. Harry T. Morey played in the lead.

AFTER two weeks of drama the Orpheum theatre returned to motion pictures and vaudeville during the week of August 17. The first picture shown was "Riddle Gawne," in which William S. Hart appeared.

WARREN KERRIGAN made his appearance August 17 in the Colonial theatre. He played in the Pathe picture "3X Gordon."

SESSUE HAYAKAWA was seen in the first of his new series of pictures by his own organization on Aug. 19-20 in the Colonial theatre. The film was "His Debt."

"AUCTION OF SOULS" was produced in the Grand theatre for three days, commencing August 18, and it drew record crowds to the house.

LILA LEE appeared in the Paramount picture "Rustling a Bride," August 18-19, in the Colonial theatre.

GEORGE WALSH was seen in a Fox film, "Pluck and Luck," August 18-19, in the Royal theatre.

In Lansing Picture Houses

A FEATURE of the annual fair given by the 6,000 employes of the Reo Motor Car company will be free nightly attractions on the screen in the clubhouse. The fair is scheduled for late in September. There will be a different Paramount and Artcraft feature nightly.

THE UNIVERSAL'S "Big Twelve" has been booked by Manager Jarvis of the Orpheum and Garden theatres. His first one will be "A Little Brother of the Rich."

LANSING theatregoers had their first opportunity to see William Faversham on the screen at the Colonial theatre Aug. 24, 25 and 26 in "The Silver King."

A FEATURE which compared favorably with the rest of the bill was the Fox Sunshine comedy, "Her First Kiss," which was shown at the opening bill of vaudeville at the Bijou theatre Aug. 17. It is to be the policy of the house this winter to lead vaudeville and musical "tab" programs with either a comedy or educational screen feature.

"THE GREAT GAMBLE" is the new serial from the Pathe studios which has been booked for the Garden theatre. The first episode will be shown around Sept. 1. Charles Hutchinson is starred. There are fifteen episodes and one will be shown weekly on Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

DUSTIN FARNUM in "Light of the Western Star" is to be the attraction at the Orpheum theatre Aug. 31.

MANAGER JARVIS of the Orpheum made a big advance play of "The Fire Flingers." It was the favored offering at that theatre Aug. 24.

AFTER being exclusively a road showhouse for some 20 years, the Gladmer theatre opened Friday, Aug. 22, to pictures. C. E. Cady, manager of the house, has a 10-year lease on the city's largest playhouse and will play all open time with pictures. "True Heart Susie," a Paramount feature, was the inaugural screen offering. Initial bookings for the house are as follows: Aug. 25, 26 and 27, Marguerite Clark in "Girls"; Aug. 28, 29 and 30, Douglas Fairbanks in "Knickerbocker Buckaroo"; Aug. 31, Sept. 1 and 2, Wallace Reid in "The Love Burglar"; Sept. 3, 4 and 5, William S. Hart in "Square Deal Sanderson."

With Dubuque Exhibitors

THEDA BARA was featured at the Princess theatre on August 13 and 14 in "The Siren's Song." The film itself drew more people and pleased more than any Theda Bara picture shown at the Princess this year.

THE REX BEACH story, "The Brand," was featured at the Princess theatre on August 15 and 16. "Spring Fever" with Harold Lloyd, was also shown.

ALMA RUBENS was presented at the Dreamland theatre on August 13 and 14, in "A Man's Country." The picture was largely attended on both days.

THE WEDNESDAY, August 13, feature at the Liberty theatre was a western play, "Border Raiders," with George Larkin and Betty Compson. "Going, Going. Gone," with Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels was also shown.

THE STAR THEATRE presented the Tringle production, "Child of M'Sieu," with Baby Marie Osborne, on August 13. This charming little picture was very well attended.

"A MAN IN THE OPEN" with Dustin Farnum, came to the Family theatre on August 13. Manager Yount declared this picture to be satisfactory in every way.

"FUSS AND FEATHERS" with Enid Bennett, was presented at the Family theatre on Saturday. An Eddie Polo feature, "The Wild Rider," was also shown.

"THE GUN PACKER," with Pete Morrison, was presented at the Star theatre on August 14, to crowded houses. Morrison pictures are known at the Star about every three weeks and are popular.

A NUMBER of excellent Vitagraph, Fox, Goldwyn and Select pictures are scheduled at the Princess theatre for showing during the latter part of August and September. Among them are "Two Women" with Anita Stewart; "A Man and His Money" with Tom Moore; "The Cry of the Weak." with Fannie Ward; "The Belle of New York," featuring Marion Davies, and "My Little Sister" with Evelyn Nesbit.

"THE UNVEILING HAND," starring Kitty Gordon, was shown at the Dreamland theatre August 15 and 16. This picture was fairly well attended.

ROY STEWART was presented at the Star theatre on August 15, in "The Boss of the Lazy Y" to a record crowd.

"DADDY LONG LEGS" came to the Grand Opera House on August 17, for a week's stay. The picture opened to extra big business and during the latter part of the week drew excellent houses.

ON SUNDAY, August 17, Manager Yount of the Family theatre presented "The Squaw Man" with Elliott Dexter and Ann Little, to large audences.

PEGGY HYLAND was featured at the Princess theatre on August 17, in "Cheating Herself," one of her recent Fox plays.

"THE HOUSE OF MIRTH" was shown at the Liberty theatre on August 16. Henry Kolker and Joseph Kilgour were the stars.

"IN HIS BROTHER'S PLACE," starring Hale Hamilton, was shown at the Dreamland theatre August 17 and 18. This picture drew good crowds.

VESSIE BARRISCALE rendered a good account of herself in "The White Lie," which was presented at the Dreamland theatre August 19.

"HENRY WALTHALL PLAY, "And a Still Small Voice" was shown at the Liberty theatre August 17 and played to good houses at every show.

FRANCHE BATES and Hobart Bosworth were starred at the Princess theatre on August 18 and 19. A Lyons-Moran comedy completed the bill.

ALBERT M. ANDERSON came back to the Star theatre on August 19 in "The Son of a Gun." As usual, the Star did a rushing business.

They Say in Chicago That—

F. M. FRANCIS, general manager of the Charleston Theatre Company, is erecting a new house, seating capacity of which will be 900.

WILL LOGAN has closed the Lyric theatre at Toledo, Illinois.

I. L. LESERMAN is taking another little vacation, motoring through the highways and byways in quest of fresh air—not the hot air that he has to listen to every day when at his desk.

EARL PARKER has opened under the style and name of Parker's Movie, Greenup, Illinois.

BUSINESS IS SO GOOD at Robinson, Illinois, that J. G. Hewitt had to lease the Opera House to take care of his crowds at the Strand theatre. Managerial ability has a great deal to do with this.

ALL THE HOUSES in Olney, Illinois, were closed for several nights recently due to a storm, which put the Power House out of commission.

ROBERT CLUSTER, old time showman from southern Illinois, is now the manager of two theatres at Benton, Illinois.

THE COLONIAL Amusement Company at Eldorado, Illinois, and the Turner Theatre Company of the same city have amalgamated under the name of the Farrar-Turner Amusement Company. The idea is to cut down the high priced attractions the people of these two cities have been getting and to do away with competition. One St. Louis Exchange who had been receiving $25.00 a day for their productions were immediately offered $7.50 a day by the new concern, which looks very bad for the movie fans of Harrisburg and Eldorado.

LINICK & JACOBY have not only been doing a terrific business with "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" at their Zeigfeld theatre, Michigan Boulevard, Chicago, but report that the bookings in the territory controlled by them for this picture are phenomenal, which shows that the exhibitors of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Missouri, Kansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi know a good thing when they see it. They are operating this picture with the various houses on a percentage basis only.

FRANK SMITH, general sales manager of the Capital Film Company, has just made another one of his celebrated quick eastern trips. What's the matter Frank, did you overlook someone on your recent clean-up?

R. E. ELLIOTT, although he is located in a town of 400 people, has just completed a modern 500-seat theatre at Donovan, Illinois.

C. B. BURKHARDT will close his theatre at Homer Park, Homer, Illinois, on Labor Day, but continue running his down-town theatre after that.

MIKE GORRIB, Orpheum theatre, Westville, has taken over the Union theatre, Georgetown, Illinois, and rechristened it the Orpheum and announces business is good.

J. S. QUIRK, Strand theatre, Tuscola, Illinois, was a Chicago visitor, giving the exchanges the once over.

F. B. MATHEWS, owner of a theatre in Oakland, Illinois, has taken over the house at Kansas-Newman, Illinois.

LOUIS MARONEY, Johnston City, Illinois, is erecting a 1,500-seat theatre in Johnston City, Illinois.

CHARLIE RYAN, managing director of Charles C. Schaefer's Garfield theatre, has worked overtime to make their tenth anniversary, the week of September 1, a great success, and every indication points to it going over the top with a bang.

ASCHER BROTHERS, Rockford, Illinois theatre, the Midway, celebrated its first anniversary August 4, and report that their business has been large since the doors opened. The Aschers have endeared themselves to the natives of Rockford and will undoubtedly continue to do big business.

CHICAGO EXHIBITORS have refused to become excited over the possibility of the actors' strike in any way affecting the photoplay houses.

AT A MEETING held in Chicago Friday afternoon, August 22nd, between representatives of the operators' union and representatives of the A. A. A., it was decided that the operators would remain at their posts and not walk out in sympathy with the actors' strike.

A. L. HAYNIE of the Lubliner & Trinz forces has just been placed in charge of their Ellantee theatre, one of their string of northside palaces.

C. H. SEIBERT, manager of the Teden's Opera House, Lemont, Illinois, announced the arrival of Walter Harrison Seibert. Weight, 8½ pounds.

R. A. KIRBY, manager of the Star Theatre Company, Monroe City, Missouri, writes the Motion Picture News' Chicago Office that they will open a new theatre in that city September 1st, and he wants all his friends to know that he is not only still in Monroe City conducting the largest and most popular place of amusement there, but that they need the M. P. News, and couldn't run their business without it.—That's the stuff any man who tells the truth, no matter who it helps or hurts will keep right on growing too.

LOUIS LANDAU, Washington theatre, Belleville has purchased the Opera House at Collinsville and will open for the season on Labor Day.

H. E. HOAG, Opera House, Momence, Illinois, reports the business so good that he will run six nights a week instead of three as heretofore.

Stilwell of Spokane Sees Unionism in Licensing of Operators

THE proposed ordinance to require moving picture machine operators to secure licenses after passing examinations was branded by C. E. Stilwell of the Class A and Casino theatres as a union proposition, when it came up for hearing before the Spokane City Council in a recent legislative session.

A license for moving picture machine operators had been urged by R. W. De Lion, who stated that he had been an operator for 13 years, and the hearing followed immediately, the passage of the ordinance permitting use of portable moving picture projectors in schools, churches, lodge rooms and other public halls.

"Those portable machines have come to stay," was De Lion's assertion. "But it is for those that you need experienced operators, a man who could keep his head in case something went wrong. I really believe if something were to go wrong with that machine I could take it from this room down the elevator and out into the street with no harm done. But a boy, a novice, might not be able to do that. The licensing of operators is not a union proposition. It is a matter of safety for school children, if this machine is to be put into every school building in the city."

"This licensing of operators is purely a union move," Mr. Stilwell said. "I have five operators now and am getting along all right and am satisfied. But if operators were licensed, and I am compelled to procure an operator holding a license, my operators could walk out and tie up every house I have."

The council referred the matter to the corporation counsel and the department of public safety for a report.

Frolic Theatre, San Francisco, Opens to Record Crowd

THE REOPENING of the Alhambra theatre in this city and the selection of a new name for the popular playhouse was the event of the past week. The Alhambra has been entirely reconstructed in its interior and it had the appearance of a new playhouse when the opening occurred on Saturday evening, August 16. These facts which had been well advertised, together with the play, "A Little Brother of the Rich," and the fact that a prize of Fifty Dollars was to be awarded for the selection of a new name, brought out a crowd such as seldom throngs the foyer of the local houses. Before the doors were opened a long line was formed before the ticket window and the opening of the doors augmented the crowd rather than decreasing it. Throughout the two evening performances a crowd of people stood outside and tried to get a glimpse of the interior, but many hundreds were disappointed. Leo Weinberg acted as master of ceremonies on the selection of a new name for the theatre.

Short News of San Diego

INCIDENT to the showing of "Hearts of Men" at the Superba theatre, the principal in the picture, George Beban, has been appearing on the stage each evening in his sketch, "The Sign of the Rose." In speaking at his room at the U. S. Grant hotel on the trend of motion pictures, he stated that he had been advised by some people to provide "sex appeal" stuff in his productions of he wished to be successful in film plays, but as he is his own boss now he does not intend to produce anything in which the controlling element is not unselfish pure love. Mr. Beban spoke at the weekly luncheon of the Ad Club.

THE EVENING SUN'S motion picture page is now a daily feature, and in its columns appear reviews of current and coming attractions and general gossip of the film world, with display advertisements making up the remainder of the page.

G. A. BUSH, president of the Broadway Amusement company, reports excellent patronage at the Silver Strand theatre, the Coronado house on the company's list. Coronado Tent City is having a big summer population, and this helps the attendance at the Silver Strand.

THE PLAZA'S offering for the week, Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow," which reached here seven weeks ahead of the release date first fixed by the producers, showed to evry satisfactory crowds, the management reports. Another of the Nazimova pictures, "The Brat," is booked for early showing at the Plaza.

San Francisco Site for Neilan Co.

WELLINGTON WALES, business manager for the Marshall Neilan Productions Co., arrived in San Francisco this week to look over the ground for sites for the proposed half million dollar studio that Neilan intends to build in San Francisco. Wales inspected the property at Page and Stanyan streets, owned by the Hotaling family and also the old Surf Beach pavilion. It is understood that this company intends to come to a decision on this matter promptly and that it is only a matter of selecting the site best suited to its purposes.

Spokane Facing Prosperous Year

IF the fall and winter show business in Spokane shows the same ratio of increase that the spring and summer months have shown, Spokane theatre managers are facing the most prosperous year in their respective histories. Increased admissions, plus war tax, apparently, have not had the slightest effect in curtailing patronage.

Portland Operators, Musicians and Electricians May Strike Sept. 2

A POSSIBLE strike against motion picture managers by operators, musicians and electricians may occur in Portland after September 1. On August 15 an ultimatum was delivered the managers by the Theatrical Federation of Portland in which it was stated that following September 1 each of 15 motion picture houses must install orchestras varying in size from 10 to three pieces and at a certain cost; that operators must be raised from 69 cents to $1 an hour with time and a half for overtime, Sundays and holidays, and that each house must engage a certain number of union men to distribute window cards and place lobby posters. On August 18, the managers of the 15 houses affected, delivered an ultimatum. It said that without reasonableness and fair play there could be no agreement nor contract and that therefore Portland motion picture managements refused to consider the proposition placed before them by the Theatrical Federation of Portland. The managers do not believe that their houses will be dark after September 1, but they are prepared to fight to a finish rather than give into a demand which they deem arbitrary and unjust. Paul Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, is acting as spokesman for the motion picture interests which have banded together to fight the union request.

Butte Company Signs Contract with Fox for All-Star Features

WHAT is thought to be the largest individual film contract ever signed by a purely Butte theatrical company was reported Saturday when Merle Davis, manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, signed with the Fox Film Company for an all-star run of films. It is understood that the sum involved was in excess of $30,000.

This contract gives the Ansonia Amusement Company exclusive local rights to all productions featuring William Farnum, Tom Mix, Theda Bara, George Walsh, William Russell, Gladys Brockwell, Pearl White, Albert Ray, brother of Charles Ray, Madlaine Traverse, Peggy Hyland, the Mutt and Jeff cartoons, and the Sunshine Comedies. The contract also calls for several big specials such as "Checkers," "Evangeline," "Should a Husband Forgive," and many others.

The pictures for the most part will be shown in the Ansonia and Orpheum theatres in Butte.

New Pathe Manager for Salt Lake

A. S. BAILEY has just been appointed manager of the Pathe exchange offices. He was recently manager of the Omaha branch of the General Film company and was manager of the Triangle exchange in Salt Lake several years ago.

San Francisco News

"THE WORLD AFLAME," the new Frank Keenan production, was given its premier presentation in the Colonial Ball Room of the Hotel St. Francis on August 18. A number of people, representing all classes of people, witnessed the pre-view of the picture, and the consensus of opinion seemed to be that only good would come of its presentation.

A MAMMOTH Wurlitzer Hope-Jones organ, which is to be installed in the Portola theatre, has arrived from the East. During his recent visit East Eugene H. Roth bought the organ so that the patrons of the theatre might have better service and that the silence which has prevailed during various parts of the performances might be broken.

LEO WEINBERG, formerly manager of the Strand theatre in this city, has just been appointed representative of Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

CARL LAEMMLE, after spending three days in San Francisco, has left for Lake Tahoe, accompanied by his son and daughter, Rosabelle, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Stern, vice-president of the L-KO and Century Comedy Co. They will spend about three weeks at the Lake, and after another visit to Universal City will return to the East.

W. T. NORTON of the sales force of the Exhibitors' Mutual in the Los Angeles territory is visiting the San Francisco office.

E. M. LOY, former salesman of the Exhibitors' Mutual in San Francisco territory, has resigned his position and will open a theatre to be known as the Divisidero, being located on that street in this city.

THE CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE has just bought a new Oldsmobile for its salesman, H. F. Moore. The latter will start on his first trip in a short time, going first to Stockton.

B. O. YOUNGMAN, manager of the Alta Slide and Film Co., left for New York on business on August 15.

"HIS MAJESTY THE AMERICAN," the first of the Big Four releases, will be shown at the California theatre the week beginning Sept. 14.

H. KOFELDT, formerly of the Greater Features Film Co. in Seattle, is now a member of the Pathe office in San Francisco.

THE GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION has appointed a publicity man in this city in connection with the general plan of the Corporation to secure better publicity for its pictures. Walter Bodin, for some time dramatic editor of the Bulletin in San Francisco, has received the appointment.

RALPH PROCTOR, assistant general manager of the Big Four, and J. W. Woody, general sales manager of the Realart, were visitors to San Francisco during the week.

THE UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE sent two of its salesmen out in machines on their last trips through the State, and from the reports they bring in this method of traveling brings just about 25 per cent more results than the old method in the same length of time.

Film Men with Bozeman Elks

MOVING picture men were well represented at the state convention of Elks which was held recently at Bozeman, Montana. They also remained over for the twelve-round boxing match which was staged in the big stadium built especially for the stampede. Among the picture men present were: Ed Myrick, manager of the Rialto of Butte; George Bourke of the Universal Film Exchange; G. H. Howard, manager of the Arcade at Big Timber; E. P. White, manager of the Strand at Livingston; Eugene O'Keefe, manager of the Regent of Billings; Ben Shearer of the Western Theatrical Supply Company of Billings; Charles Koerner, with the Universal, whose headquarters are in Butte, and many others.

San Diego Manager Has Novel Ideas

H. E. MALABY, manager of the Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Cal., until recently an ensign in the navy, is putting forth some new ideas in his publicity work. His latest is the publication of a two-column daily on the regular motion picture page of The San Diego Sun, which he calls "The Pickwick Daily." In it he plans to give gossipy news of the feature pictures shown at his house, as well as touching on other news in the motion picture field as occasion comes up. His salutatorial message indicates that pep and paprika will enter into the makeup of his daily offerings from the editorial desk.

Salt Lake and Vicinity

THE AMERICAN THEATRE extended the full privileges of the house to the visiting governors who were attending the recent governors' conference in Salt Lake. Many of the distinguished visitors attended "Mary Regan," which featured Miss Anita Stewart. The picture played a four-day engagement at the American.

THE PARAMOUNT-EMPRESS THEATRE will charge the regular night admission prices on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, commencing Sept. 1. This is the first time this rule has been in effect. The Pantages theatre advanced the price of all tickets five cents last week.

THE PARAMOUNT-EMPRESS is soon to enlarge its orchestra by five pieces. This will give it a fifteen-piece orchestra, including the organist. The programs will be changed twice a week instead of three times, commencing Sept. 1.

THE INTERMOUNTAIN Film Board of Trade held its annual election last week. Robert Brackett was elected president, J. Kennedy vice-president, Murray McCarthy secretary and counselor, and T. C. Malcolm treasurer.

JAMES CLEMMER of the Clemmer theatre of Seattle, Wash.; B. W. Pickett of the Majestic theatre in Boise, Idaho, and J. Carruthers of Pocatello were in Salt Lake last week in the interests of the Northwest Exhibitors Association.

THE FAMOUS PLAYERS EXCHANGE reports that "The Dark Star" is proving a big drawing card and it is conducting a whirlwind advertising campaign for the picture. The story is running serially in many papers.

In Butte and Vicinity

"UNCLE DICK" SUTTON, the pioneer showman of Butte, who is known throughout the West as a member of the old school of players and promoters, has returned from a two months' visit to the East. He still holds a commanding interest in the Empress theatre.

ROBERT RYAN of Salt Lake, who is making a tour through the state, was a Butte visitor this week. He is booking the "Midnight Man," featuring James J. Corbett, and said that he has been doing a good business.

FRED HERMAN, manager of the Columbia theatre at East Helena, was a Butte visitor this week, coming over to book some features for his house.

DESPITE the unsettled business conditions, the drought which has played havoc with the entire ranching section of the state and the prevailing high prices, George Bourke, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, reports good bookings and says he has no "kick" coming on what the exchange is doing. "We are doing 25 per cent better business today than we were a year ago at this time, and the outlook continues to appear brighter."

WOLFE POINT, Montana, is to have a new moving picture theatre, which will be one of the best in the state for its size. It is being erected at a cost of $35,000, and will be under the management of C. J. Severson. Wolfe Point has a population of 550 and already has one moving picture house with a seating capacity of 200.

What They Say in Seattle

MANAGER RAY KELSALL of the H. A. Johnson Company has announced that during the week of August 2-19, his company sold 20 Power machines.

THE UNIVERSAL COMPANY'S "Paid in Advance," which recently played at the Coliseum, drew a wonderful house. The advs. writing by J. Willis Sayre, Jensen and Von Herberg's advertising man, together with the picture, drew the crowds.

THE SEATTLE Universal office has received good reports from all four of its salesmen, who are now on the road. They are: Emil Rogasner, Leo Potter, Walter Levenhagen and Traff La Salle.

HARRY SIGMOND, general counsel and secretary for The Northwest Film Board of Trade, has left Seattle for a three weeks' vacation in the mountains. The vacation was given him cheerfully by the members because he has worked so faithfully and carefully for it in the past.

MOTION PICTURE theatre men of Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho met in Spokane recently with officers of the Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit, which is seeking to organize and has been organizing motion picture theatre owners of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana for co-operation in their business. James Q. Clemmer, owner of The Clemmer, Seattle, and president of the association, presided.

THE SERIAL being made by Ben Wilson, "The Trail of the Octopus," which is being released through the Film Clearing House, has been booked for first run showing at the Symphony theatre in Los Angeles, beginning September 7. Roberts also reports the booking of "The Screen Letter Box," which will have its first release in Los Angeles at the Victory theatre on September 14.

FIRST RUNS of the initial Fairbanks subject being marketed by the United Artists Corporation have been contracted for between W. S. Rand, manager of the local exchange, and the following exhibitors: F. P. Cook, Empress theatre, Redlands; E. M. Smith, Belvedere theatre, Pomona; J. V. Spaugh, Euclid theatre, Ontario, and A. M. Spaugh, Majestic theatre, Corona.

W. H. HEPBURN, Vitagraph branch manager, reports the receipt of the first two episodes of "Smashing Barriers," the William Duncan serial which will be released September 8. D. H. MacLeod has been engaged as Vitagraph road man, and is reporting encouraging activity from the Arizona territory.

J. M. BOLAND, Arizona salesman for the Fox Exchange, left Los Angeles the week of August 18 for a three weeks' trip through his territory.

THE OFFICE FORCE at the Fox Exchange combined on August 20 to present J. F. Bentley, the booker, with a diamond studded Elk pin in observance of his birthday.

AS THE result of the recent transaction in Sale Lake City through which William H. Swanson purchased Harry Nolan's interest in the Sawnson-Nolan enterprises, among which was the First National Exhibitors' franchise for that territory, A. B. Knox, formerly First National salesman in Salt Lake, has resigned from that position to join the Select forces in Seattle in a similar capacity under the general management of Hugh Rennie.

IN ORDER to meet the demand of the exhibitors for a feature which would fit more easily with the rest of an evening's program, Sol L. Lesser of the All Star Feature Distributors organization has arranged to have his special subject "The Birth of a Race" cut from ten reels to seven.

THE FIRST Southern California exhibitor to close for a showing of the entire Metro program of thirty-six releases during the coming season, according to Manager A. B. Lamb, is C. W. Young of the Globe theatre at San Pedro.

BECAUSE of the unusually large attendance which accompanied the first showing anywhere of the Dorothy Phillips subject, "The Right to Happiness," at the California theatre, according to Dave Bershon, manager of the Los Angeles Universal Exchange, the engagement of the special production has been extended for a two weeks' run at that house.

G. A. METZGER, formerly district manager of Universal Exchanges, is in Los Angeles on a trip from Seattle to negotiate business the nature of which as yet cannot be divulged.

WHAT HAS been announced as probably the only one in which she ever will be seen is the special production starring Ellen Terry, "Her Greatest Performance," which was received the week of August 18 by Manager Marley of the Los Angeles Triangle Exchange. It will be released locally September 1, and many inquiries are being received regarding it.

GUY C. GUNDERSON, for five or six years well known in Southern California motion picture industry, has been engaged as booker for the Triangle Exchange.

With West Coast Exhibitors

IN ANTICIPATION of a heavy season during the coming months many out-of-town exhibitors were seen along Los Angeles film row the week of August 18.. Among those in the city to arrange for coming productions were F. P. Cooke, Empress theatre, Redlands; E. M. Smith, Belvedere theatre, Pomona; J. W. Spaugh, Euclid theatre, Ontario; A. M. Spaugh, Majestic theatre, Corona; George Mauk of the Columbia and Phoenix theatres, Phoenix, Ariz.; Ed Kaiser, El Monterey theatre, San Luis Obispo; proprietor Eddrington, Gaiety theatre, Santa Maria; W. W. Sitson, Plaza theatre, San Diego; James Sams, Rosemary theatre, Ocean Park; C. W. Young, Globe theatre, San Pedro, and F. A. Mallaby, Pickwick theatre, San Diego.

W. E. YOUNG & SON, formerly of the Rose theatre, Calgary, Canada, have bought the Globe theatre at San Pedro, a house seating about 750 from Jacob Dorner, and have arranged for immediate possession.

In Portland Film Circles

ONE of the photoplays to draw the best during hot weather in Portland this summer was "Redhead," starring Alice Brady, which played at the Majestic theatre during the week of August 3.

A. C. RALEIGH, manager of the Columbia theatre, Portland, succeeded in drawing unusually large crowds to witness "Rose o' the River," featuring Lila Lee, which showed at his theatre during the week of August 17 by the unique u of the phrase "Hop to It." In his newspap ads he used water scenes and in each ad sketched a little frog saying in cartoon sty "Hop to It."

J. A. KOERPEL, Seattle resident manager f Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, and A. Aronson, special home office representative f Goldwyn, were in Portland August 14, 15 a 16 arranging for the distribution of the Emine Authors' releases. While in the city they a ranged for bill board space to advertise the n Eminent Authors' organization.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by t Peoples' Amusement Company that betwe $25,000 and $30,000 will be spent in renovati the Peoples' theatre of Portland. Work w commence about September 1.

San Francisco News

A NEW COMPANY, known as Calimade P tures, Inc. has been incorporated in this city $25,000, shares $100 each. The subscribers the stock are R. W. Taylor, E. Inge and F. Boland.

LESTER FOUNTAIN, former manager of Casino theatre in San Francisco and late ma ger of Grauman's $1,000,000 theatre in L Angeles, will once more cast his lot with fortunes of the Ackerman & Harris circuit. is announced that he has taken a position one of the Hippodrome circuits.

G. C. PARSON, local manager of the Goldw Distributing Corporation, states that five or releases will be ready for preview about first of August. He recently covered the S ramento valley, where he found business con tions in very good shape.

E. C. MIX, assistant manager of the Univer branch, spent the week-end at "Pop" McCra where he motored with his family, install them there for a vacation of several weeks.

C. W. GODDARD of the Goddard Thea Sacramento, Cal., is back on the job after outing at Dillon's Beach.

W. S. WEBSTER of the Strand theatres Woodland and Dunsmuir, is planning on a home for the Dunsmuir house. He expects be ready to start construction work within very near future.

WM. NORTON, formerly a member of theatrical industry, is building a new busir block containing a motion picture theatre Montague, Cal.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Short Subjects, Comedies and Other Features Reviewed on This Page

"He Did and He Didn't"

("Smiling Bill" Parsons Two-Reel Comedy, Distributed by Goldwyn)

"HE Did and He Didn't" shows "Smiling Bill" Parsons trying to commit suicide because his best girl turned him down. He takes a leaf from the strenuous life of "Boob McNut" evidently, and trains a loaded shotgun upon himself, with the trigger tied to the door knob. But when the landlord opens the door it happens that the would-be suicide is stooping over and misses the charge discharged by the weapon.

Then the landlord threatens to have him arrested if he tries to commit suicide before he pays his rent. Bill wanders forth and is disappointed in his many attempts to cross the River Styx. Finally he spies a charge of dynamite about to be exploded and sits contentedly upon it. There is a thrill here as the workman is about to press the button from the safe distance of three hundred feet. But the whistle blows and as he is a union man his dinner pail is in his lap before the whistle stops blowing.

A passing policeman arrests Bill for attempted suicide. While in jail he hires a Bolshevist and his gang to kill him and they follow him all over town when he is released from jail by a handsome young woman settlement worker who is struck by Bill's manly beauty.

The climax comes "Three-In-One" when he is informed by the Bolshevist that he will have to pay an increased price to be murdered or be forced to live, then the girl accepts him, and an attorney arrives and informs Bill that he is heir to a million dollars.

All of this sounds promising, and it looks good on the screen, but it is only passably amusing and calls for no spontaneous laughs.—Tom Hamlin.

"The Frozen North"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Released August 31—Fox Exchanges)

BUD FISHER'S caricatures portray the roles of two partners running a Honky-Tonk dance hall and gambling joint North of Fifty-Three.

Jeff is the piano player and his one-fingered manipulation of the ivories is calculated to spread the green cloak of envy through the cabaret piano experts of Broadway.

Enters the bad man of the North with the piercing eyes. A shudder of terror passes through all the patrons and as his glance falls upon each respective individual the faces become enveloped in ice. This is mock-melodrama with a vengeance.

Romance is now added to thrills. A beautiful Manhattan vampire innocently drops into the joint, presumably for her afternoon tea. The cartoonist's pencil works here with wild abandon as she does the shimmie. And the bad man claims her for his own. Knockout drops, a card game and Jeff victorious as he cows the bad man with a horse pistol and makes the final clinch fade-out with the vampire wrapped around him and the promise of an exquisite shimmying and jazzing future. A sure-fire filler.—Tom Hamlin.

Doris Kenyon starred in "The Bandbox," a W. W. Hodkinson feature, released through Pathe

"West Is East"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

IT is a merry chase that Mutt and Jeff offer in "West Is East." Bud Fisher has made them the beneficiaries of a will, but they have an idea he is to punish them by putting an East Indian on their trail. The freaks have no idea that they are to come into a fortune. They only see in the bloodthirsty Hindu, who is chasing them, a desperate looking specimen of humanity—a man who would not hesitate to draw his long curved sword and cut their heads off. So they run for their lives.

They think they have eluded him and chuckle over it, when lo and behold, he always bobs up to torment them. His grizzled countenance frightens the daylights out of them. But he pulls a coup d'etat and catches up. And what a harmless fellow he is! He puts aside the sword for the paper and they are amazed to discover themselves immensely rich.

This cartoon isn't Fisher at his best, but it suffices in measuring out a bushel of laughs. Mutt and Jeff have worked out of more ingenious situations than are presented here. We like them best when they are at swords points themselves. However, it is a good filler. It couldn't be anything else and be a Mutt and Jeff.—Laurence Reid.

Two Ford Educationals

("Anglers" and "Home Made" Single Reelers, Distributed by Goldwyn)

IN "Anglers" we have an outdoor subject a la scenic from the babbling brook to the fisheries. This is pretty, and instructive as well, and will especially appeal to the fishermen and children and fill in an entertaining fifteen minutes very acceptably on any program.

The tinted work on the film and the novel subtitles help key up the interest. The fishermen are seen casting their flies in a stream for the wary trout. The men are attired in long rubber boots and wade in to the hip. Women enthusiasts are also shown enjoying the sport.

Then the fisheries are shown and the attendants demonstrate just how they tame the wild trout by casting their bread upon the waters. They are able to gather some of the smaller fish in their hands by scooping them cleverly out of the water.

"Home Made" shows the modern way of ordering a house. The first thing is to propose and be accepted by the first girl handy who happens to appeal to you. Then you visit an office and the attendant shows you photographs of the houses they are prepared to build for you. You take your pick, or rather your prospective wife does the choosing and you acquiesce.

Then you see the forests and the logs and the sawmill get busy. So you must hustle and find a lot for the house to occupy. Then in a few days the house gradually assumes shape and the hero and heroine have to make a mad race to the minister so that they can be wed before the house is finished.

This is instructive and entertaining and entirely suitable for any photoplay program.—Tom Hamlin.

"Kathleen Mavourneen"

(Five Reel Photodrama with Theda Bara—Fox Film Corporation)

HERE is a film classic that the self-appointed uplifters should welcome and it remains to be seen just what volume of patronage will reward the intrepid producer.

For in all agitations for uplift of the screen the calamity howlers decry the general run of pictures, and now William Fox comes along and gives them a most excellently produced film version taken from the famous old Irish song.

Therefore this should be the big exploitation angle for exhibitors. Not to use promiscuously through widely read newspaper announcements, as this might cause some of the regular fans to stay away, but through the schools and literary circles and of course through all Irish societies.

The reviewer sat through five reels of "Evangeline" and after an intermission the five reels of "Kathleen Mavourneen" were shown to a capacity house. That it could command the close attention at such a late hour, and under these circumstances, may be considered a good augury. For it was surely an inspired audience that left the theatre close to midnight.

Theda Bara has the title role. And although the characterization is entirely different from her former roles, she made a captivating Kathleen Mavourneen.

The photoplay faithfully absorbs the Irish atmosphere and it is a light drama with the interest maintained to the finale in which the "dream" incident gives it the happy ending. The Irish folk dances, the happy and simple habits of the peasants, with many comedy side lights, make an ideal entertainment.—Tom Hamlin.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last fifteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 18, 1919.

"OUT OF LUCK"
(PARAMOUNT)

Highly Amusing Farce-Comedy

A FAST moving, hugely entertaining and highly amusing farce-comedy built around the social activities of the younger set in high class metropolitan circles. The heroine is superstitious and believes in all the signs, from dream books and cards to rabbit foot. May be considered nonsensical in many spots by hardened pessimists, but is a well produced, unadulterated farce-comedy built entirely for pure fun purposes.

The star and cast measure up high calibre as clever light comedians and comediennes and the direction could not have been improved upon. A slight story and a small plot tangible enough for farce-comedy is developed easily by the continuity writer. The sets are appropriate and subtitles bright and witty.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for the respective patronages are: Cosmopolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and hugely pleasing; Labor, good puller and very pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 24.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Frances Wadsworth.....Dorothy Gish
Malcolm Dale.....Ralph Graves
Randall Park.....Raymond Canon
Billie Rourke.....Vera McGinnis
Hackaway Smith.....George Fawcett
Lily Smith.....Emily Chichester
Maurice Rennard.....Rodolph Valentino
Sebud Miller.....Norman McNeil
Eddie the Pup.....Porter Strong
The Aunt.....Kate V. Toncray
Clarence Wellington.....Vivian Montrose
Story by Lois Zellner.
Directed by Elmer Clifton.
Photography by John Leezer.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Gish as the superstitious heroine come to the ——— theatre beginning ———— in her latest Paramount picture, "Out of Luck."

She believes that the cards determine everything and her secret hook on signs and dreams decides her in everything she does. But because she found out that Venus was in the ascendant she persuades her girl friend to elope after her father had forbidden the use to the sweetheart.

The cards tell the heroine that "a blonde man will enter her life" and lo and behold, the best man at her friend's wedding was a blonde. But he proposes marriage on Friday the thirteenth and our little superstitious heroine almost faints.

This is pure and unadulterated farce comedy and with the superstitious star role in the hands of that vivacious commedienne Dorothy Gish, it come heralded as a funmaker calculated to chase all dull care away. Trouble come between the lovers when she finds that her blonde sweetheart would meet a blonde woman. The cards told her this and she ia furious. Then the same cards told her that a dark man would enter her life. Nia evened things up but still it spelled trouble all around.

Complications and misunderstandings are settled continuously hy the reading of the cards and finally when all is apparently serene a black cat crosses her path.

After this little detail is amicably settled the catchea a glimpse of the moon over her left shoulder when it should have been over her right shoulder and this time it seemed that the heroine and her sweetheart would never be re-united again.

Right at this moment a couple of burglars entered the house where the heroine and her sweetheart happened to be visiting snd naturally blackjacked them so that when they came too they became one.

SUGGESTIONS

Concentrate on the star if you have this picture booked. Mention that she was "the little disturher" in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" and that this Paramount star had the title role in "Battling Jane," "Boots," "Peppy Polly," and "Nugget Nell." Also mention that she is the young superstitious girl in "Out of Luck" and use the catch lines and program reader material on this page in every conceivable place.

The fact that it is a lively farce comedy based on the superstitions of the heroine should have a good drag at the box office handled from this angle through placards, throw-aways, etc., and you can even get out big quarter-sheets and snipe them all over the town with material from the catch lines.

It is said that every third woman is somewhat superstitious about some things.

In "Out of Luck" Dorothy Gish has the broadest comedy role she has yet essayed

PROGRAM READER

Are you superstitious?

Do you carry a rabbit foot for defensive purposes, or for rouge?

Can the cards tell whether a dark man will enter a blonde girl's life or a dark girl enter a blonde man's pocket?

And how about the red haired girls?

When Venus is in the ascendant is it proper to marry?

Are there any black cats in your neighborhood?

The heroine of "Out of Luck" is the kind of superstitious girl that believes all these things. It is a Paramount picture and it is farce comedy pure and unadulterated.

Dorothy Gish is the girl. And this photoplay comes to this theatre next week to make you weep—with laughter.

Of course she has a sweetheart and it is just these many superstitious beliefs that keep them apart during five reels.

Finally the wedding day is set for Friday the thirteenth

And a couple of burglars just naturally blackjack the couple into insensibility and when they wake up they are as sensible as any two young sweethearts can be.

CATCH LINES

"Friday the thirteenth is an unlucky day," said the pessimist.—"Out of Luck."

"It's bad luck when a black cat crosses your path" said the superstitious one.—"Out of Luck."

"A dark man will enter your life young lady," said the fortune teller.—"Nobody Home."

"Don't look at the moon over your left shoulder," said the soothsayer.—"Out of Luck."

"Marry when Venus is in the ascendant," reads the almanac.—"Out of Luck."

"Don't pass under this ladder. It's bad luck," said the sign.—"Out of Luck."

"THE BRAT"
(NAZIMOVA-METRO)

Comedy-Drama Will Register Tremendously

A COMEDY-DRAMA with Nazimova showing her wide versatility by portraying the rough soubrette. Her clever characterization makes of the down-and-out chorus girl a captivating and appealing little person. This role is radically different from the intensely dramatic and the spectacular production parts in which this star has formerly appeared and will assuredly register tremendously with the masses as well as the classes.

The locale is New York City throughout the seven reels. It is a modern human interest story and has the necessary suspense, although the actual plot itself is slight. The action is fast and the sub-titles are witty lines lifted from the stage play. Direction, interiors and exteriors, continuity and photography, are all above par. The desire of the director to provide the happy ending has weakened the final scene.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities, according to the respective patronages, are: Cosmopolitan, tremendous puller and exceptionally pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and wholly pleasing; Labor, powerful puller and entirely pleasing.—Length, 7 reels.—Released Sept. 1.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

The Brat.....Mme. Nazimova
Mac Millan Forrester.....Charles Bryant
Mrs. Forrester.....Amy Veness
The Bishop.....Frank Currier
Stephen Forrester.....Darrell Foss
Angela.....Bonnie Hill
Adapted from Maude Fulton's play.
Scenario by June Mathis.
Directed by Herbert Blache.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Nazimova is coming in a new characterization to the ——— theatre beginning ———.

Maude Fulton's great stage success, "The Brat," has been produced by Metro for the screen under the direction of Herbert Blache. And Nazimova has an entirely different role and absolutely distinct from her past successes in "Revelation," "Out of the Fog," "The Red Lantern," etc.

In "The Brat" the dainty artist appears as a little down-and-out chorus girl in New York City. She did not care for jewelry or the life of ease gained by divers ways and means.

An author, in search of material for the principal character in his forthcoming novel, rescues her and carries her to his palatial home after she has been fired from the chorus of a Broadway show.

This upsets his mother and his sweetheart. And it also quite upsets the staid old Bishop, the young man's uncle. But at that the old Bishop grows reminiscently tender in retrospect after the little soubrette sort of pecked him on the cheek.

The author's brother is a wild young man sowing his oats. Naturally the entrance of this young girl from the under walks of life created something of a sensation in such an elite home.

But she shows that she has a real heart under a rough exterior. And her quaint mannerisms and lovable disposition straighten out many a kink in the many difficulties that ensue in this particular family.

She saves the young brother from committing a crime against his family and finally wins her way to the great love by melting the icy exteriors found in the haughty environments of the upper class.

This is said to be the first American characterization Nazimova has ever done and critics pronounce it one of the most appealing roles she has ever portrayed. "The Brat" is far different from her heavy dramatic and the spectacular productions.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture you will readily recognize that your one great big best bet is the star. Nazimova has the pull with the masses as well as the classes generally everywhere. Mention her previous screen offerings; "Revelation," "Toys of Fate," "Eye for Eye," "Out of the Fog," and "The Red Lantern." But emphasize that instead of a spectacular, costume, or tensely dramatic role that she appears this time in a typical American role. Don't fail to do this. You will thus gather in all her admirers who may otherwise stay away from the costume or spectacular picture.

The material in catch lines and program reader on this page should be utilized heavily in all newspapers as strong as your advertising allowance permits. The picture will keep them coming if you spread yourself and get them in the opening day. Special lobby stunts and even street stunts from many angles can be arranged if you are a follower of that sort of exploitation.

Nazimova, in what Metro believes her greatest screen effort, "The Brat"

PROGRAM READER

The bloomers she rehearsed in were threadworn and dusty. The stage manager was one of these fastidious fellows.

So he fired the smallest pony of his army of chorus girls.

While the other chorus girls were constantly talking about the new jewelry they expected to acquire, all that the forlorn little brat needed was a ham sandwich.

She was hungry and without a job. And along came a man. And she fought his advances so hard that a policeman was attracted by the gathering crowd and arrested her for soliciting.

An author in search of material rescued her. And he brought her to his palatial home and introduced her to his haughty mother and to hia uncle, a staid old bishop.

All this spells trouble as anyone can readily see.

In the character of the rought little chorua girl, Nazimova scores the greatest hit of her entire career according to all the critics.

"The Brat" will appear at this theatre next week.

CATCH LINES

One man mentioned jewelry and she fought him. Another man mentioned ham sandwich and "The Brat" cried; "Lead me to it."

She was just a forlorn little chorus girl of simple tastes. But ahe was rough in a way. Her eccentric but appealing mannerisms actually shocked the fastidious.

When the little rough soubrette cheerfully pecked the staid old Bishop on his left cheek he was almost tempted to turn the other cheek.

A rough little tough little quaint little clean little drifter among the flotsam and jetsam of New York's great highways and byways.

"THREE BLACK EYES"
(TRIANGLE)

An Amusing Farce-Comedy

THE story of this is lost before it is found, but it will be considered amusing where Taylor Holmes is popular and enjoyable by those who like farce-comedy. At no time can the production be taken seriously and during the middle of the offering the action lags noticeably, principally because of the necessity of introducing some new characters. However, for the first three reels the picture is a succession of amusing sequences concerning four young men who are out on a pre-July 1st celebration. The remaining footage has to do with the plot, a rather convenient one, naturally to be expected in a story of this sort.

Using the "Oh, be joyful," as a medium for fun making is not new, but if the efforts of the players remain in the right vein, which in this they do, it is always effective. It is a clean comedy with many earned laughs.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A pre-July 1 celebration got Taylor Holmes and three companions into a lot of trouble, decorated each with a colored optic, and won a bride for the versatile comedian, in "Three Black Eyes," a new farce comedy which comes to the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

In support of the star are such well known players as William Bailey, Gordon Standing and Louise Orth.

The story of "Three Black Eyes" begins in a restaurant where the four "skylarkers" create a series of scenes, their actions being induced by a superabundance of liquid refreshments. To escape the police, all board the hero's yacht. The next day a party of diners, one being a girl with whom Holmes is visibly impressed, charter the yacht for an afternoon cruise, the opportunity being made possible through a joke two of the inebriates play on the owner.

When out of reach of the arm of the law, three of the yachting party turn out to be burglars who have induced the others to leave their home that others of the yeggs may rob the safe of its jewels.

All the party, including Holmes, as the robbers suppose, are locked up on the yacht and the burglars prepare to leave the craft for the house in the yacht's launch. It develops, however, that one of the members of the joy party of the previous night has not yet awakened from his slumbers. He releases Holmes and his friends and the robbers are captured.

Holmes is forgiven by the beauty of his yachting party and they take their honeymoon on the yacht.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture, concentrate your advertising on the star, calling attention again to his many light comedy pictures of the past, notably "Ruggles of Red Gap." Promise your patrons a light comedy with many laughs and a good romantic interest. Tell the women that you will have some nice gowns to show them and will take them to dinner in a big restaurant.

You can promise the men a full length view of a "just right" jag that lasted long enough to win a bride for the hero.

Mention the supporting cast, stating they are good types and give special mention to "Bill Bailey," who is well known, and to Louise Orth, who is a beauty.

You may with perfect propriety tell your patrons that this is a story of a "pre-July 1st" jag and dwell on this point to some extent as the "joy" party is not offensive and there has been a lot of "kidding" about the Nation's going dry.

If you want to pull a stunt which would get you some publicity if it doesn't land your employees in jail you might attire three young chaps in dress suits and parade them down te streets with a pretended "jag."

Taylor Holmes and Louise Orth, featured in the Triangle offering, "Three Black Eyes"

Place on their back "Three Black Eyes" and with grease paint give each colored optic. They will get attention and we do not think the stunt will react providing they do not overdo the drunk act.

PROGRAM READER

The "Larry" in "Three Black Eyes" signed the pledge to take effect July 1. Before going on the "water wagon" he and three companions went out for one grand time.

What happened resulting in three beautifully colored optics, a frustrated robbery and ending in a romance is told in this latest comedy starring Taylor Holmes.

The quartet of temporary inebriates wrecked a restaurant, escaped the clutches of the police by boarding the hero's yacht where they captured a gang of crooks with "Larry" winning a charming bride and being forgiven by the "cops." It is an effervescent story, filled with merriment, which will entertain and amuse, a pleasant relief from tense offerings, and unpleasant sex stories.

Taylor Holmes has a congenial role, in which he adds to his laurels as the premier comedian of the screen. Supporting the star is William Bailey, Louise Orth and a large cast of selected types. The picture is in five reels and is released as a Triangle special presentation.

"THE SPLENDID SIN"
(FOX)

Not a Very Entertaining Picture

A SEX drama in high life with English locale. The theme is the husband's desire for children and the wife claiming the illegitimate baby of her husband's sister as her own when the husband returns from his exploring trip. Husband's delight is spoiled when the true facts come out. The real mother dies before her lover, the real father, returns to marry her. Not a very entertaining picture.

Direction and cast are passible. Star is not appealing. No suspense is provided in the familiar story and the subtitles are so inserted that they anticipate the next scene. A thrill is attempted by picturizing a Bolshevist riot in Moscow.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities, according to the respective patronages, are: Cosmopolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, fair puller and not generally pleasing; Family, less than average puller and not pleasing; Labor, good puller and pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Sept. 14.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Splendid Sin" is the latest Fox production starring Madlaine Traverse, and it appears at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

It is heralded as a story that tears at the heartstrings and the star is pictured as the wife of an English explorer. The husband is very fond of children, but his home is not blest by any little ones.

A tremendous storm realistically portrayed, forces the husband's sister and a young man friend to seek refuge all night in a ruined mansion in England, where the scenes are laid.

When this young man is later sent by the government to Moscow he is prevented by Bolshevist rioting in returning for his marriage to the husband's sister. She bears a child and her brother's wife guarantees to accept the child as her own in the absence of her own husband, who is on an exploring trip.

Naturally the husband is delighted on his return to find that he is the father of a child. "The Splendid Sin" is the lie that the wife told him to save his sister's honor and also to make her husband happy as a father.

The sister passes away and the real father escapes the Bolshevists and arrives too late. The mother of a boy who would succeed Sir Charles Chatham to the title, should he be born childless, tells him that the baby is not his child and he suspicions that the real father has taken advantage of his wife and never thinks for a moment that his sister was the mother.

This is heralded as an intensely dramatic offering in high life and the happy ending is brought about in a unique manner.

It is calculated to demonstrate that under no circumstances does it ever justify a lie between husband and wife, no matter how necessary a lie may seem to the happiness of the other.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked you should announce that William Fox presents the great emotional star, Madlaine Traverse, in "The Splendid Sin," a dramatic sensation in the higher walks of life. This will attract the seekers after the sensational and should bring the crowd. Of course there is nothing really sensational, but the title and story is built around a sex incident that each individual may magnify or minimize according to his or her personal inclinations.

Therefore by advertising this along the sensational angle there will not be any real disappointments in the productions, although some coming with lurid expectations may consider it somewhat tame. The catch lines and program reader material on this page may be used freely in newspapers and also on quarter-sheets, heralds, throw-aways, etc., etc.

A study of popular Madlaine Traverse, Fox star, whose current feature is "The Splendid Sin"

PROGRAM READER

She lied to her husband.
And he finally found it out.

She had told him that he was the father of the child. And he loved children so dearly that he was in the seventh heaven.

He had been away for a year exploring in far away lands. And his sister, his beloved sister, had made the great mistake.

And his wife took the child and claimed it as her own. She said that she was the natural mother and her husband believed her, and he firmly believed that he was the natural father.

This was the lie; "The Splendid Sin" committed by Lady Marion Chatham. And she did it for two noble purposes; first, to save her husband from grief over his own sister's sin and second to make him happy as father of a child which he so much desired.

But the denouement came and the lie created many heartaches. All this is told in the latest William Fox picture coming to this theatre next week. It is entitled "The Splendid Sin" and Madlaine Traverse is the star.

CATCH LINES

The light that lies in his wife's eyes, and lies and lies and lies.

And the poor fool thought that he was the father of such a sweet buxom baby.

Blame the storm if you will But the girl found solid comfort in the young man's arms.

She deceived her husband with the one desire of making him happy.

The wife lied when she told her husband that he was the father of the baby. And it wasn't her baby, either.

Is any sort of a lie justifiable? Here's one that was "A Splendid Sin."

Majority Will Enjoy This Picture

A DRAMA opening with the costumes of Egypt and finishing with the society gowns in England. A good "sight" photoplay and well cast. Heroine brought up by an Arab chieftain who captured her when she was a baby. When grown she is put on the auction block and bought by a chivalrous young English nobleman who marries her.

Plottings, gossip and jealousy sway the story, and the heroine holds both the attention and sympathy until the final closeup. The love element is romantically injected and the essential fast action is placed at the necessary intervals. A satisfactory photoplay for the majority to enjoy.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale is coming to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in her latest dramatic screen production, "Her Purchase Price."

This is described as an intensely dramatic presentation and gives the star remarkable scope for her well known emotional talents augmented by her much heralded beauty.

In the role of Sheka she is a charming Egyptian person being brought up by an Arab chieftain, who captured her when she was a mere baby. This was during a raid upon an English caravan in which all but the young baby were destroyed.

The great care that the Arab gives her is not for any love or affection he bears her. His one desire is to conceal from her the fact that she is really an English girl. She is being prepared for the auction block and the shrewd old Arab wanted to receive a substantial price for his prize.

And a young titled Britisher buys her because he has fallen in love with her. It was when he brought her to his English estate that her troubles really began. Their ways were not her ways and her mannerisms were not their mannerisms.

A former sweetheart of her titled husband plotted against her continually and finally she was able to make a great sacrifice to save her husband who was embarrassed by great financial difficulties. He needed ten thousand pounds to save himself and she loved him so that she determined that she would sell herself again according to the Egyptian custom.

And she left her husband and offered herself to the Duke of Wryden. And the Duke gave her a check for ten thousand pounds. And then her husband arrived.

The great climax is all unfolded in this big dramatic screenization and the final denouement in advance would kill all the great suspense said to be so firmly gripping in the production.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you have a great many angles for exploitation and presentation. Bessie Barriscale has a following and she has not appeared in so many films that she has outworn her welcome. And the theme has so many exploitation angles that you can use the catch lines and material from the program reader and press notice-story on this page to good effect.

Dress your ushers in long Egyptian bloomers with veils and turbans or any attractive costume suggestive of the Turkish women. A small platform can be set in your lobby portraying an auction block. A placard announcing that an auction sale of some of the prettiest girls in town would take place beginning ——— would catch the eye. Especially if you displayed a large collection of photographs of pretty girls, not necessarily from this particular photoplay. A red flag could be hung over the block. The words: "This is not a Bolshevist flag, but merely calls attention to our auction which will be held if the authorities will permit."

On another placard you could have the words: "Bessie Barriscale in 'Her Purchase Price' is the star in which this scene appears inside on our screen."

Bessie Barriscale attired in what is probably the favored garb of the Mystic East. A scene from her latest for Robertson-Cole, "Her Purchase Price"

PROGRAM READER

As an Egyptian girl she wore long flowing bloomers and a veil. It shocked her when she attended a London society function and found her full back must be as bare as the day she was born.

She ruminated that it was great to be civilized—especially if you have a pretty back—otherwise, if one did not have the back to back it up—ugh!

Her titled Englisb husband bought her on the auction block in an Egyptian town. She was so white, you know. Not like most of the brown women sold that day from the same block.

And he married her. Yes, he loved her. And she loved him. When East meets West.

And those tight shoes of civilization. And the monstrous high heels. Didn't they twist one's ankles? And then the vise-like affair about one's waist. Well, it certainly cost a woman a lot of real comfort to become civilized.

Her husband lost a lot of money in an unfortunate speculation. And she wanted to raise the ten thousand pounds necessary to bring him out of his financial difficulties. So she offered herself for sale again according to the Egyptian custom. For she was glad to make this sacrifice for the sake of the one she loved.

If you will attend this theatre next week you will have an opportunity of seeing this charming romantic drama on the screen.

Bessie Barriscale is the star, and the title is "Her Purchase Price."

CATCH LINES

A pretty girl brought from Egypt felt shocked at the English civilization that meant gowns cut high at the bottom and low at the top.

Tight sboes, high heels, bare back, waist in a straitjacket; these were some of the discomforts that the girl from Egypt had to acquire when she became "civilized" as other women in England.

Her Egyptian bringing-up taught ber that it is better to be sold to the right man than to be unsalable and literally laid on the shelf.

"BURGLAR BY PROXY"
(FIRST NATIONAL)

Farce-Comedy; Will Please Majority

A FARCE-COMEDY with all the players youthful and the locale in New York among the elite. Cast is well balanced and Jack Dillon in his characterization easily captures the chuckles that the star loses. There are inconsistencies all the way through, but this is farce-comedy and produced solely to entertain.

And it fulfills its mission and registers as a high class farce-comedy offering that will please the majority of fans who like the light comedy pictures. There is a villain and a chase for papers which the hero recovers, and the love element is there strong enough to please the younger set and amuse the older folks.

Pulling possibilitis and pleasing probabilities for the respective patronages are: Cosmopolitan, average puller and generally pleasing; Elite, good puller and very pleasing; Family, average puller and entirely pleasing; Labor, average puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 24.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Jack Robin .....Jack Pickford
Dorothy Mason.....Gloria Hope
Spider .....Jack Dillon
Harlan Graves.....Robert Walker
John Mason.....Mr. Guise
..Written and directed by Jack Dillon.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Burglar By Proxy," starring Jack Pickford, is the First National Attraction coming to the ——— theatre beginning ———.

This is described as the laughing limit of artistic, refined and high class farce comedy. It starts with a toothache, and the hero is on the way to the dentist when the voice of a sweet young thing, lifted in song, stops him.

He promptly forgets the toothache and stops his car outside her house. The only way to get acquainted quickly was to promote an auto accident and find himself the victim. Then she would have to nurse him.

And he did and she did.

But a villain enters and steals some papers. He blamed the hero. The hero runs into a real burglar when he enters a house to recover the stolen papers which would prove his innocence.

The real burglar's monicker is "Spider" and he hangs on to the hero like a leech thinking he is a second Jimmie Valentine. It was long the Spider's desire to pal with a real high class burglar.

A series of rapidly moving comedy situations are the results. Spider attends a house party where the hero is in his element among the elite. It is declared that many screams are born during the ensuing incidents.

And of course the young lady singer and nurse is able to get her father's consent to her marriage with the hero after he finally secures the stolen papers and fastens the crime upon the villain who had first appropriated them.

The next thing was to rid bimself of the Spider. A double dose of the "soup" in a safe they were blowing up caused the Spider to become disgusted with his adopted pal and thus he fades away and leaves lover and sweetheart in the regulation clinch.

Jack Pickford is supported by an excellent cast and the role of Spider is taken by the writer and director, Jack Dillon.

PROGRAM READER

He wasn't a regular burglar.

But he managed to escape from thirteen policemen.

His troubles first started with a toothache, which soon developed into a heartache when he found that a girl he loved was engaged to another man.

Then he determined to prove that his rival was a villain. The opportunity was given when the rival stole some papers.

And even the girl believed the villain when he declared that the hero was the real thief.

Sounds like melodrama, doesn't it? But it is not. It is farce comedy.

Jack Pickford comes to this theatre next week in his latest First National attraction, entitled "Burglar By Proxy."

The real humor and the hearty laughs come when the hero attempts to rob the safe of the villain to recover the stolen papers.

And he runs across a real burglar, The Spider.

The Spider hangs on to the hero like a leech because he wants to pal up with a real Jimmie Valentine high society burglar like whom he supposes our hero is.

Fun and misunderstandings and clean humor mark this offering all the way through until the final embrace of the lovers.

Jack Pickford is star of "Burglar by Proxy," a First National

SUGGESTIONS

The fact that this is a First National attraction and that Jack Pickford is the star should be prominent in all your advertising when you have booked this picture. Emphasize that Jack Pickford is not in a "Jimmie Valentine" or "Raffles" characterization, but that this is pure farce comedy with a chase after the papers, etc. It is pure farce and to advertise it as a comedy drama would be a mistake. Then you have prepared your audience on what to expect and they will not be disappointed.

Therefore, the catch lines and material from the program reader on this page should be spread promiscuously around as far as your normal advertising appropriation will cover. It is too far fetched to attempt a tie-in with the police department or municipal judge effectively. The catch lines should bring them in, if they like farce comedy, and most everybody does like it for a change.

CATCH LINES

A real live burglar attached himself to Jack and he couldn't shake him.

Jack started with a toothache, which soon developed into a heartache calculated to make your side ache with laughter.

Is a toothache funny? Yes, if the other fellow has it.

The road to the dentist was his road to romance.

He wasn't a regular union burglar, but he carried a walking delegate with him.

The high cost of living even enters into safe blowing, so Jack gave the safe a double dose of the "soup."

The real burglar "took things easy" and the "Burglar By Proxy" had a hard time to return them.

"THE RED VIPER"
(TYRAD PICTURES)

Anti-Bolsheviki Propaganda Picture

THIS shoots at a large target and looks like a money-maker for some. But it has, however, a market value and just at this time will be accepted by many people because it is anti-Bolsheviki propaganda. This picture waves the flag at every opportunity and its titles preach an A-1 brand of Americanism. Ruth Stonehouse is the only member of the cast whose name will be of any great value, but the acting honors go to Gareth Hughes, who gives a most sincere and likeable portrayal of a youth reared in an environment popularily supposed to breed discontent, but who was born with an old-fashioned brand of patriotism and who possesses brains enough to see that the anarchistic ideas of his neighbors are impractical and unfair. Miss Stonehouse is very badly cast in the role of a twelve year old girl.

It is wild melodrama and a subject that is unquestionably timely. There are audiences aplenty that will eat up its flag-waving Americanism.

THE CAST

David Belkov.....Gareth Hughes
Mary Hogan.....Ruth Stonehouse
Dick Grant.....Jack Gilbert
Yolanda Kosloff.....Irma Harrison
Charles "Smith".....R. H. Fitzsimmons
Mrs. Hogan.....Alberta Lee
Pat Hogan.....Alfred Hollingsworth

Story and scenario by Winifred Dunn.
Directed by Jacques Tyrol.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Red Viper," a timely photoplay concerning the present industrial unrest manifested in strikes and anarchistic demonstrations, will be shown at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

The story told is that of a young man born on New York's Eastside, described as "New York's crucible," and the part he played as a true American in frustrating the plans of political inspired Bolsheviki leaders who attempted to assinate a Supreme Court Judge as a punishment for meting out justice to one of their number and to involve the residents of certain sections of the city in a Anarchist parade for their own ends. This role is played by Gareth Hughes, a rising juvenile, who has a magnetism and personality which should place him among the leading actors of the screen within a short period. Prominently in his support is Ruth Stonehouse, a star in her own right, and R. H. Fitzsimmons.

The spirit of insurrection has risen in the breast of David Belkov, inspired principally by his sweetheart, an honest but misguided little firebrand, and he is almost persuaded to join the band of Bolshevikis which Hogan street has organized.

However, the inspiration of the life and speeches of Roosevelt and the example of a twelve-year old little Irish girl, who gives her life for her Americanism, turns David back to love of country and impels him to try and undo the work of destruction that has been planned and also save his sweetheart from the toils of the law. How he accomplishes this, to emerge with great men his friends and the promise of an early marriage to his sweetheart, at last brought to her senses and fully aware of the underlying motive of the leaders of the Bolsheviki movement in Hogan street, makes an interesting picture.

PROGRAM READER

David Belkov, of foreign born parents, lived on New York's great East side, yet he was an American through and through once he understood the principles on which our government is founded. The hot scourge of Bolshevism had touched him but through the example of a little twelve-year-old Irish girl and from reading the words of his hero, Theodore Roosevelt, David escaped to win prosperity and the friendship of men of influence.

It is a big message that "The Red Viper" brings to America, one which will teach the restless souls of our great land, that reform and advancement can never come from mob rule and that back of all Bolshevism, Anarchism and like sects, is the selfish and usually pecuniary motive of leaders who hope to use the common people for their own ends.

Gareth Hughes portrays David Belkov and gives the character a personality which ranks him with the leading juveniles of the screen. Ruth Stonehouse, a star in her own right, plays the little Irish girl, Mary Hogan who gives her life defending America and fighting the scourge which was spreading over the street where she lived.

A tense moment from the Tyrad feature, "The Red Viper"

SUGGESTIONS

We would use Miss Stonehouse's name in exploiting this feature because this star has many friends who will remember her for her many good pictures a few years back and be glad to welcome her on your screen. The billing will no doubt give the starring lines to Garrett Hughes, who fully deserves them, but you cannot afford to overlook the advantage of the pulling power of Miss Stonehouse's name.

We would also try and convince people that Mr. Hughes is an actor of unusual ability and personality. In this picture he gives a most convincing portrayal of the leading character and you can exploit him to the limit without being open to criticism.

We would also play up the title without giving away too much of the plot. This sounds like a most sensational subject, and as such will attract attention. People will come to see it out of curiosity if nothing else.

Nearly all of the scenes are laid in New York's East Side, and as such have a decided interest. Tell your patrons that they can go slumming at small expense and with no danger of having their valuables stolen.

We would suggest the use of "stills" and plenty of big paper on which the title of the production is prominently displayed.

CATCH LINES

"The Joan of Arc" of New York's East Side, Ruth Stonehouse in a vital story of today, "The Red Viper."

The sting of "The Red Viper" threatened, but a little Irish girl and a lad of foreign parentage proved to Hogan's Alley the meaning of true Americanism. See the sensational photoplay "The Red Viper."

"HEARTSEASE"
(GOLDWYN)

Correct Screening of Stage Drama

A FILMIZATION of the late Charles E. Klein's stage drama which loses nothing in the screening. The locale is England in high life and the indignant composer loses the manuscript of his new opera, and this resolves itself into a chase after the papers. The romance is between the composer and the daughter of a British nobleman. And another man of title is the villain who is inally unmasked.

There is nothing intensely melodramatic nor is there any fast action except for the fight between the hero and the villain which forms the anti-climax. The direction and continuity are about average. The women particularly will like this one as the star has a sympathetic role.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for the respective patronages are: Cosmopolitan, big puller and generally pleasing: Elite, strong puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and generally pleasing: Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Aug. 1.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

By Charles Klein.
Scenario by Edfrid A. Bingham.
Directed by Harry Beaumont.
Photographed by Samuel Landers.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Moore comes to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in his latest Goldwyn picture, "Heartsease."

This is from the late Charles Klein's successful stage drama and is said to be one of the best screen attractions that this young and popular star has yet appeared in.

Mr. Moore has the role of the indigent young composer who has written an opera which promises him wealth. The rival of the composer is a British nobleman who manages to secure the manuscript of the opera and produces it as his own.

But the young composer recognizes the strain of "Heartsease" in the love song and accuses the other of stealing his opera. And it was his sweetheart, the charming daughter of Lord Neville, who helps the young composer to recover his just rights.

It seems that the titled Britisher who robbed the young man was a suitor for the hand of the younger Miss Neville. And he turned the old Lord Neville against the young composer by telling him that his wife, Lady Neville, was in love with the composer.

Then the young man was attacked and rendered unconscious for weeks while the villain placed the stolen opera in rehearsal and final presentation.

Tom Moore has an emotional role in this picture and it is said to command the heart appeal all through. The love element enters strongly and wonderful direction and photography are said to enhance this production.

In the cast supporting Mr. Moore are Helene Chadwick, Rosemary Theby, Mary Warren, Larry Steers, Alec B. Francis, Sydney Ainsworth, Herbert Pryor and Wm. Burress.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course when you book this production the star, Tom Moore, should be made the most prominent in all your advertising, as he is said to have a strong following. The next bet is the author's name, the late Charles Klein, who was responsible for a great many of our best stage successes. And then the title, "Heartsease," may generally be well remembered and should be dwelt upon. Then of course the fact that it is a Goldwyn production should be mentioned, as this means something also with a great many people.

Mention the last five pictures that Tom Moore has starred in: "Just for Tonight," "Thirty a Week," "Go West, Young Man," "A Man and His Money," and "One of the Finest." An invitation announcement sent to a high class mailing list should go out on this picture as it is a society drama and the star, author and title will have a pulling power with the more elite. And don't forget the music lovers and music clubs of your town. This drama is based on music. There are said to be six "Heartsease" compositions in music and Jerome Remick Music Publishing Company is reported as ready to co-operate with a music store tie-in.

PROGRAM READER

Have you ever listened intently to a strain of music and tried to remember just what it was and where you heard it before?

This was the situation that confronted a young composer as he stood in the foyer of a London opera house where a new opera was receiving its premiere.

And then his sweetheart came to join him. And they listened together. And suddenly they knew.

It was the strain of music written by the young composer himself and dedicated to his sweetheart.

But who was the pirate that would dare steal his opera while he was recovering from a brutal attack and wounds inflicted upon him by thugs.

Surely a titled Britisher could not have stooped so low. And yet this nobleman was producing the opera as his own.

Surely there must be some justice in the world for a composer, even though he was poorly clothed and in dire need of money.

It is this situation which the great dramatist, Charles Klein, injected in that great stage success, "Heartsease." And Goldwyn has screened "Heartsease" and it is coming to this theatre next week with Tom Moore in the star role.

CATCH LINES

A wandering elusive sweet refrain that haunted him until it charmed into activity his awakening vision. This was "Heartsease."

His mother and sister, then his sweetheart, all three occupied the centre of his great loving heart. But his actual heart was "Heartsease."

The efforts of his talents of a lifetime had gone when his great opera was stolen in the original manuscript. But there still remained the strain of "Heartsease."

Black despair had settled upon him. What was there to live for after all. And then the sunshine came through an orchestral strain of "Heartsease."

"FORBIDDEN"

(JEWEL-UNIVERSAL)

Drama That May Please Some Audiences

A DRAMA of the country girl craving city life and a city man desiring the peace of the country. After they marry, the domestic quarrels worry along for a few reels, until he finally schemes and contrives to destroy all her longings for city life by framing a trip through some sordid Chinatown scenes.

The action is slow, and between the director, continuity writer and cutting editor this ordinary story becomes choppy. The husband commands no sympathy because of his rigid stubbornness in not providing his wife with a regular time, although he must be a multimillionaire. Instead of introducing her to some decent people he installs her in large, commodious mansions by her lonesome. This does not ring true.

Photography and laboratory work are exceptionally good and Miss Harris is effective and winning and also wears some very beautiful gowns.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities will be in the same proportion for all classes of audiences. It will pull strongly for the big opening everywhere, but will not generally satisfy as a picture.—Length, 6 reels.—Released September 8.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

"Maddie" Irwin.....Mrs. Charlie Chaplin (Mildred Harris)
Fred Wortbington.....Henry Woodward
Ben Withers.....Fred Goodwin
Story by E. V. Durling.
Scenario by Lois Weber.
Directed by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mrs. Charlie Chaplin (Mildred Harris) comes to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in her latest Jewel production produced by Universal. It is entitled "Forbidden" and pictures the longing of the country girl for city life and just how her husband cured her of the desire.

New York's famous Chinatown and cabarets are displayed through the action of this drama, and it is reported that the young star wears some very beautiful gowns very charmingly. The human story is said to afford Miss Harris a very wide scope in displaying her abilities as a screen actress.

"Maddie" Irwin was a pretty little country girl, and her one desire was to live in the great city and become a part of its pulsing activities.

Fred Worthington, a most successful New York business man, was surfeited with the big city's strenuousness and had been engaged to a very striking beauty of great social prominence. When he caused a report to be issued that he was bankrupt, he learned the true calibre of his city friends and left for a long-deferred visit to his mother in the country.

It was here that Fred met "Maddie," and after a short courtship they were wed. But the young wife craved for the city, and finally her husband determined to show her the city in such a manner that she would become disgusted with it for good and all.

But before this result was finally reached she had undergone a remarkably thrilling adventure in New York's Chinatown and cabarets. And her husband was shot during her short but swift slumming expedition.

And finally the peace and quiet of the country in her loving husband's arms was to Maddie the sweetest story ever told.

PROGRAM READER

When the little country maid longed for the city the big city fellow craved the country.

It seems that nobody is satisfied in this world.

While the city fellow was visiting the country he met the little country maid and shortly they were wed.

And he cast the city far behind him with no regrets. For he loved the great open air and had been surfeited with the strenuous activities of the metropolis.

But the young girl wife would not be denied. She must see the big city, and the longer he denied her the more she wanted to go.

He told her the old legend of the Pandora Box. About the young girl who had everything imaginable, but was cautioned never to open the Pandora Box. And when she was denied the privilege of doing this one thing she wanted it all the more. When she finally could resist the temptation no longer she opened the box and released all the evil now prevalent in the world.

Mildred Harris is featured in the Jewel-Universal production, "Forbidden"

He likened his wife to this girl of the old legion. But of no avail.

And she finally went to the city.

Her thrilling adventures in the city and his search for her are all told on the screen of this theatre next week.

Mrs. Charlie Chaplin (Mildred Harris) is the girl, and the picture is a Jewel production released by Universal.

The title is "Forbidden."

SUGGESTIONS

Your best bet in exploiting this production after you have booked it is to concentrate on the name of the star—Mrs. Charlie Chaplin (Mildred Harris). And then use all the material from the catch lines, program reader and press notice story on this page. Mention that she was the star in "Home," "The Price of a Good Time," "The Doctor and the Woman," "For Husbands Only," "Borrowed Clothes," and "When a Girl Loves." Also that this is a Jewel Special of the Universal Company and is directed by the leading woman director, Lois Weber.

CATCH LINES

Country green loves city grey, and strenuous city loves peaceful country.

Denied the one thing that her heart craved, her heart grieved in the midst of splendor.

This pretty little country miss had love and affluence, but she was disappointed in the one big desire of her life—to live in a big city.

Is a person never satisfied until they learn from hard knocks that all that glitters may be shoddy tinsel?

He wanted peace in his family. The peace of the quiet country. And his little country wife wanted city life. So he had neither quiet nor peace until:—

"THE MIRACLE MAN"

(PARMOUNT-ARTCRAFT SPECIAL)

Decidedly Distinctive and Tremendous Production

A TREMENDOUS theme realistically portrayed by a most excellent cast and directed by a masterly hand. Although the fast action of the production slows up notably toward the close, the keen suspense is gripping until the finale.

There is cleverness, wit, pathos, sentiment and satire which is bound to sway any audience anywhere. This can be truthfully heralded as a big special attraction in an honor class all its own. Decidedly distinctive. Photography and laboratory work exceptionally artistic. Continuity clear as a bell and a stirring love element that appeals.

This is a modern, throbbing human interest photoplay of city and country, peopled by saints and crooks, with no killings to mar, where trickery and deceit is finally conquered and a great moral is planted. Quite daring in spots but entirely wholesome.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for the respective patronages will be practically the same everywhere. The appeal will undoubtedly be universal and a good opening anywhere will generally be accompanied by longer runs than is accorded any of the best special productions.—Length, 7 reels.—Released September 7.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Heralded by critics as the most tremendous screen production of the year, the Paramount-Artcraft Special "The Miracle Man," comes to the ——— theatre beginning ———

Frank L. Packard's great story was adapted by George Cohan and as a stage play it was a Broadway success. George Loane Tucker directed the screen production and Famous Players-Lasky offer it as one of the most notable screen successes of recent years.

Thomas Meighan, Betty Compson, Joseph J. Dowling, Lou Chaney, J. M. Dumont, W. Lawson Butt, F. A. Turner, Lucille Hatton and Elinor Fair are the principals in the cast.

Three men and a beautiful woman compose a group of crooks who are operating in New York's Chinatown. The chief of the gang reads a short news item in the daily paper which states that several apparently miraculous cures are being performed by an old hermit in a small village up-state.

When they learn that the old patriarch is blind and deaf they conceive the idea of capitalizing the credulity of those who seek by faith to be cured by this miracle man. They establish themselves in his household and by imposition and good fortune augmented by skillful publicity methods they manage to rapidly acquire a fortune. But in the meantime the leaven of the old miracle man is having effect on the hearts and souls of the crooks.

A strong love element develops between the leader of the crooks and the beautiful woman member. One of the gang, known as "The Dope," discards his drugs and wins a little country maid, and the other member of the gang acquires a grey-haired country mother.

The suspense is declared to be very keen and gripping and "The Miracle Man" is pronounced the big screen success of the season.

PROGRAM READER

A miracle is coming to this theatre next week—it is the "perfect" photoplay.

We cannot describe it. It is too miraculous to describe.

The high price of adjectives does not deter us from attempting a description.

But how futile are mere words. The quantity and quality of adjectives are nil and we searched through all the dictionaries. . .Come ye, all scoffers and also those of simple faith, and SEE—

"The Miracle Man."

Directed by George Loane Tucker. Adapted by George Cohan in his successful stage play from Frank L. Packard's gripping story.

And Famous Players-Lasky Corporation brand it their most notable Paramount-Artcraft Special.

The modern and intensely gripping story of city and country life.

A moment from "The Miracle Man," a Paramount-Artcraft special

A sterling cast headed by Thomas Meaghan and Betty Compson.

Wholesome and thrilling, with a strong natural love element and keen suspense.

The limit of art and with wit, cleverness, satire and comedy, it is a great throbbing human interest production with a wholesome theme.

A real miracle in screen production- is—"The Miracle Man."

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you have so many natural angles of special exploitation which will immediately occur to you that it is almost a waste of space to insert any suggestions. You have many strong names in the cast, chiefly Thomas Meighan and Betty Compson. You have the author so well known to all readers, Frank L. Packard. Then there is George Cohan who adapted the stage play from the story. Also George Loane Tucker the director who also has a pulling power. And Famous Players-Lasky offering this as a Paramount-Artcraft Special will undoubtedly carry great weight in many quarters as this is a brand that is well advertised as high class.

If you want to bring a new clientele into your theatre you may be able to acquire the list of members from every church in town and send them an announcement reading about as follows: "Come Ye, all that are weary and heavy laden and seek 'The Miracle Man.' He can be found at the ——— theatre and Manager ——— respectfully urges you to register a resolve that you will not pass by on the other side. This is a high-class Paramount-Artcraft Special Production directed by George Loane Tucker."

CATCH LINES

The great rogue called a halt. He found that although he was acquiring a fortune he was losing his great love. And then the miracle happened.

A little child led them up the straight and narrow path to the great miracle.

Three views picturing the action in the first production of the Robert W. Chambers series of stories now being produced by B. A. Rolfe for A. M. Fischer Features, Inc.

Personnel of Cathrine Curtis Organization

The officers of the recently formed Cathrine Curtis Corporation of Los Angeles, include Cathrine Curtis, president; George M. Taylor, vice-president and Dorman T. Comet, secretary and treasurer.

The Board of Directors is comprised of Cathrine Curtis, Albert L. Hudson, Reese Llewellyn, William Dewey Loucks, E. R. Pirtle, Malcolm McLellan, Robert N. Simpson, Arthur P. Spalding, George M. Taylor, and George J. Whelen.

The New York office is established at 120 Broadway.

Players Band to Cut Cost of Living

The personnel of the west coast Bulls-Eye Comedies studio has banded together to cut the high cost of living. Co-operative buying, eliminating the middleman's profit by hauling the foodstuffs from the producers in the agricultural districts adjacent to Los Angeles with trucks donated by the Bulls Eye concern, and distributing the victuals each day on the Bulls-Eye "Lot" are included in the system to keep down prices.

Paramount-Drew Comic

"A Society Scheme," the Paramount-Drew release for August, presents an innovation in vacation-time comedy as its locale is an inland summer resort Lake George, New York, and not the seashore, which is the usual scene of such screen romance. Mrs. Sidney Drew directed the comedy in person as well as playing the leading role of "Polly." The V. B. K. Film Corporation produced this latest Drew subject, which was adapted from a story by H. C. Bunner.

"Big Four" Moves Its Chicago Office

On September first, Cresson E. Smith, Sales Manager of United Artists Corporation's Chicago Distributing Depot, will move from his old to the fourth floor at 17 North Wabash Avenue, near Madison Street.

Kay Laurel Back in Pictures

Star of "The Brand" and Ziegfeld Follies Favorite Is to Be Featured

KAY LAUREL, Ziegfeld Follies beauty and more recently seen in the featured role of Rex Beach's "The Brand," is to be featured in a series of special features by a newly organized producing company. Sheer and Company, with J. M. Sheer who was a prominent member of the producing forces of the old Solax Company, heading the executive forces. Production was started this week at the Reliance Studio, Yonkers under the personal direction and supervision of Jack O'Brien who until recently was director general of the Virginia Pearson Picture Corporation. Mr. Sheer announces that one of America's best known and most popular playwrights is the author of Miss Laurel's first story. Romance and adventure in the Texas-Oklahoma oil country with the famous Texas Ranger playing an important part, are the predominating elements of the drama. Following the taking of the interior scenes at the Reliance Studios, Miss Laurel and company will go to Texas, for exteriors in the vicinity of Fort Worth where the action of the story is laid.

Following Miss Laurel's success in the principal role of Rex Beach's "The Brand" and the unusual popularity gained by her as one of the beauties of the Midnight Revue of the Ziegfeld Follies, the promoters of the new company feel that there has been an insistant demand by the public for more features with Miss Laurel starred. Mr. Sheer is making the announcement of the formation of the new company said that he has every reason to believe that with such a combination of star and director, he will be able to give the public pictures of quality.

Lee Kiddies to Start South

Rogers Disregards Expense to Insure Accurate Locations in Second Picture

THE second of the series of Jane and Katherine Lee comedy playlets is in course of production according to a statement from Lou Rogers, president of the Rogers Film Corporation, who are producing the comedies.

Phillip Bartholomae, who wrote the story of the first of the series, is again credited with the scenario of the forthcoming Lee Kids vehicle, which is described as a story of the South and which is said to afford a wealth of comedy situations of the young comediennes and to be enhanced with a setting and environment of "old-fashioned darkeys."

The cast which Director Tefft Johnson in consultation with Mr. Rogers selected for the support of the Lee Kids includes Leslie Austin, Mme. Marceau, George Halpin and others. William Johnson is assisted by Cliff Saum, while Eddie Wynard is responsible for the photography.

"While the Lee comedies specialize as two-reel subjects," states Mr. Rogers, "we are spending time and material upon them equally as though the stories were to be told in five-reel offerings. In the present production, for example, while many of the exteriors are to be taken on Long Island, following the requirement of the plot and story, another part of the story calls for southern atmosphere and setting. To secure this in full measure we will take the youngsters and their company down South immediately after the shooting of the Long Island scenes, returning after that for the completion of the filming at our Yonkers studios."

In response to numerous inquiries received as to particulars of release and distribution Mr. Rogers states that he will in a few days be able to announce the completion of negotiations now in progress with a prominent distributing company.

Director Alan Crosland Signed by Selznick

Myron Selznick announces that he has signed Alan Crosland on a long-term contract to direct for the Zelznick Pictures Corporation. Mr. Crosland, though comparatively young in years, has already carved an enviable record for himself in the motion picture business. He has a long list of photoplay successes to his credit, chief among which is the big special production, "The Unbeliever."

Mr. Crosland will direct Elaine Hammerstein in her first Selznick production, "The Country Cousin," adapted from the well-known stage play. He is already at work on the production, which will be the first to be made in the new Selznick Fort Lee studios.

New Drive on Picture Exposing Profiteers

With the first page of every newspaper in the country teeming with news about Government seizure of food stuffs, and the prosecution of hoarders, Pathe is making a renewed drive on its feature, "The Profiteers," starring Fannie Ward, which deals extensively with this vital topic.

"The Profiteers" exposes the methods employed by the vultures who spare no one in the greed for gold, putting the prices of food so high as to make it well-nigh impossible for poor persons to live.

Buys Rights to Play

Myron Selznick announces that he has purchased the motion picture rights to the well-known Belasco success, "Just a Wife," which was written by Eugene Walters, whose play, "The Challenge," is now running at the Selwyn theatre.

Lasky Representative

Mr. Claud Saunders, Exploitation Manager of Famous Players, has appointed as his representative in the Pittsburgh district a well-known film man of that center, William N. Robson, a native of the erstwhile smoky city.

Varied Hall Enterprises Together

Prominent Financiers Directors; Name "Hallmark"

A NEW $2,500,000 company, the result of the merger of the Frank Hall enterprises, embracing Film Clearing House, Independent Sales Corporation, Film Finance Corporation, Rothapfel Picture Corporation, Hobart Henley Productions, Inc., and Charles Miller Productions, Inc., known as the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, has been formed with the following prominent financial men heading the executive forces as directors: Col. Jacob Ruppert, Col. Howard S. Borden, Frederick E. Grant, Ashbel P. Fitch and Frank G. Hall.

The companies included in the consolidation, effected recently by Frank G. Hall, were all recognized operators in the producing and distributing field and with the merger which brings them under the one head—the Hallmark Pictures Corporation—the efficiency with which the operations of the new company will be carried out is pointed to as a step in advancement that stands for a progressiveness, operating to the decided benefit of the exhibitor who will receive better and more efficient service, better pictures and first-hand assistance from an exploitation department created especially to place the Hallmark productions before the public. Mr. Hall's interests now come under the one head, and production, distribution and exploitation will work hand-and-hand with the result, as expected, that the various units will increase in both their efficiency and their quality of production and that the Hallmark trademark can be pointed to as standing for and representing pictures of quality and service plus efficiency.

September 1st will mark the first release of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, according to the announcement from Mr. Hall, and each week thereafter the exhibitor and public will be given a Hallmark production. Heading the list is Hallmark's serial release, "The Trail of the Octopus," released in fifteen episodes with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber starred. Prints of the first episodes of the Wilson serial are now in the hands of Hallmark exchange men throughout the country.

In the special feature line, Mr. Hall announces that there will be twelve a year. Two big productions by the Hobart Henley and Charles M. Miller companies are now in readiness. Mr. Henley has recently completed a six reel special and Director Miller has three productions ready. Both Henley and Miller are now busy in the studio on other productions.

Mr. Hall promises an interesting statement in September in regard to further details concerning the new company. The work of producing and distribution by the old regime under the Hall enterprises will experience no delay because of the reorganization. The exchange system will go on uninterrupted. The noticeable difference in the operations as carried out by Hallmark will be in the efficient manner in which marketing will be made and in the quality of the productions released.

Twelve specials and twenty-six Hallmark pictures a year are included in the plans made by Mr. Hall and according to his announcement other plans are in the making which when perfected will place Hallmark Pictures in the forefront of motion picture production, distribution and efficient service.

Song-Picture Prints Are Distributed

Prints of the special picture to be run in connection with the singing of the song, "When a Feller Needs a Friend," based on the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, are being distributed to all the branch offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it was announced this week, and will be available for showings by all exhibitors who book the Paramount-Briggs Comedies.

The picture, which is a pictorial delineation of the scenes suggested by the words of the song, is free for exhibitors, it is emphasized by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and may be obtained by applying to the Famous Players-Lasky branch offices. With the picture, which is designed for exhibition the week preceding the showing of any Paramount-Briggs Comedy, the exhibitor also may obtain, free of charge, the services of one of the staff of professional singers employed by Joseph W. Stern & Co., publishers of "When a Feller Needs a Friend."

Krows Made Assistant Vitagraph Editor

Albert E. Smith and George Randolph Chester, President and Production Editor respectively, of Vitagraph, have made Arthur Krows of the continuity staff, assistant scenario editor, succeeding Lucien Hubbard, who has been assigned special work on a series of forthcoming super features of that organization.

World Distributes Waldorf Films

"Kismet" to Be First Produced Under the Arrangement

CONTRACTS were entered into on Monday between World Pictures and the Waldorf Film Corporation whereby the former will have the distribution rights to a series of picture productions to be made by the Waldorf Company.

The initial production of this series of features will be a picturization of Edward Knaublach's success "Kismet" which is well remembered in the United States for the fame it brought Otis Skinner, who starred in this oriental drama under the management of Chas. Frohman in association with Klaw and Erlanger and Harrison Grey Fiske.

David G. Fischer, who will direct the making of the play into a picture has for a long time been trying to secure what others had failed to obtain. His persistence was rewarded even though a record-breaking price is said to have been met. Now that he has the play in his possession, he is already making preparations to begin the work of putting it in screen form.

Edith Hallor in World pictures

It will require the services of a hundred actors, not counting the mobs that will have to be trained through rehearsals covering several weeks to give the proper background for the picture. Mr. Fischer is in a position to do this unusual work as his backers have set no money limit on the cost of production. Each and every one of the actors in the cast is being picked with due care to the attainment of the idealization of types which the picture calls for.

Eight cameramen have been engaged and the very best modern equipment in studio facilities is now being purchased. The entire fall will be devoted to the building of a city in Florida that will correspond in all details to that portion of the city of Bagdad in Arabia that is concerned in Mr. Knoblauch's wonderful tale that owes its inspiration to the immortal "Arabian Nights." It is estimated that one hundred thousand dollars will be the sum of expense in building this city, ground for which will be provided by one of the stockholders who recently purchased an estate in Florida that has 28 miles of coast line and extends back into the interior 40 miles. On this tract of land the city will be built.

Two men were dispatched to Europe especially to buy draperies, costumes and properties for the proper establishment of scenic atmosphere, They also journeyed to Bagdad to make drawings and take pictures of the scenes described in the play so that they can be accurately reproduced in Florida.

Purchasing agents are already scouring Florida buying building material and an employment agency has been instituted on the ground to secure workmen and day laborers.

Preparing Advertising Material as Burston Views It

Producer of Mystery of "13" Takes Exception to an Article; Praises News Editorial

"BLESSINGS on the man who invented or coined the phrase—'Own your public,'" writes writes Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc. "I have been swelling up for eight months because I was responsible for the perfect serial title The Mystery of "13"—just like that with double quotes around the "13", but I take my hat off to the Motion Picture News and the three words at the head of your ringing editorial, 'Own Your Public,' I have directed some successful pictures, and I have produced some, and I have sold some, and I have argued to my producer as a director, and to my patrons as a producer and broker, exactly along these lines for years, but I never had the happy thought of boiling the whole policy down to three ringing words as you have done.

"I am wondering," Mr. Burston continues, "if you will permit me to comment upon some remarks that have been made during the discussion of the advertising material supplied to the exhibitors by producers generally, with the understanding that I am writing with the intention of throwing a little more light on the subject if that is possible. I refer to the lambasting that appeared recently regarding the inaptness, not to say the ineptness of such material. The writer of that article suggested that special material be prepared for each locality. I submit that this is impossible, and without presenting a brief for the producers I do think that a little more thought on the part of the exhibitor at times would make valuable and available much of the matter he now regards as worthless.

"My record shows that I am for the exhibitor first, last and all the time, so that I am not afraid that any exhibitor can take exception to my remarks. But I believe that in the elaborately prepared advertising cuts and campaign books there is many a shrewd exhibitor who, if he doesn't find it ready made in every particular for his use, does see possibilities and does find suggestions that are easily adaptable to his local conditions. I have always been careful in the preparation of my own 'ready-prepared material' to frame my newspaper advertisements and my paper in such a way as to put the picture over, which seems to me to be what we are all intent upon doing, isn't it?

"And if in a campaign book I have devoted a page or two to stunts I have seen to it that those suggested were such as the smallest exhibitor in the smallest theatre in the smallest town could readily secure the materials for.

"I wish your correspondent whose name I have not ready to hand, would give us a few more practical details in one particular. I wish he would tell those of us who are producing and spending good money to exploit our wares through the exhibitor to the public (for the exhibitor's sake), just where in the past we have fallen down. I wish he would tell us what is our greatest offence, except in the case of silly publicity stories, in the perpetration of which I and my staff plead not guilty, but which I know to be a common failing. I wish he would tell me why, if an electro has a strong black and white scene from the play, with the name of the picture strongly featured,—an exhibitor cannot have any objectionable reading matter sawed off the plate and why he cannot substitute what he believes more suitable for his 'local conditions.' I am seriously in earnest about this.

"Since the News has become so helpful to exhibitors in the matter of advertising, I can see where it will eventually be looked upon by producers as a safe guide in this all important particular as it now is in many other matters of the deepest interest to them. I have always held that advertising meant nothing more and nothing less than 'making known,' and I build my productions so that I am not ashamed to make them known. When an exhibitor has full knowledge of a pictures drawing powers, or its attractions or exploitation elements, and when these are pointed out to him, and he is told how to play them up to the greatest advantage, it is drawing it pretty fine to say that the producer should go farther, and prepare a special manner of saying the same thing for thousands of 'local conditions' throughout the land.

"What does the News think?"

Universal Buys Four New Stories

Four new stories, two of which are by two of America's foremost authors, have been purchased by the Universal company in order to carry out that company's announced policy of producing better pictures from the works of well-known authors.

The four stories, the purchase of which has not been previously announced, are: "The Amiable Charlatan," by E. Phillips Oppenheim; "Oats and the Woman," by Fannie Hurst; "Germaine," by Henry C. Rowland; and "Undraped," by H. Van Loan.

Pathe Serials Progressing

Ruth Roland and the Gasnier Company Are Reported on by Scenario Writer

GILSON WILLETS, manager of the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and author of all of Ruth Roland's Pathe serials, returned to New York from Los Angeles where he has been since July 3rd, preparing the scenario for Miss Roland's forthcoming serial "The Adventures of Ruth," and supervising the scenario for the Louis J. Gasnier serial, "The Third Eye," in which Warner Oland and Eileen Percy are co-starred for the Pathe program.

Work on both serials is progressing rapidly and from present indications, "The Adventures of Ruth" and "The Third Eye" will be completed considerably before the dates for which they are scheduled. Miss Roland's own company, "Ruth Roland Serials, Inc.", began work on July 7th, and already the first four episodes have been finished. The Gasnier company began work on August 4th and has completed the first episode and part of the second.

"Pathe's serial production on the West Coast is progressing in the most gratifying manner," said Mr. Willets. "Everyone is enthusiastic over the work, and I can safely promise that the two serials now being made for us there will ably uphold the splendid record of the House of Serials.

"Miss Roland's first serial with her own producing company gives her an opportunity to appear in four capacities,—author, producer, supervising director and star. The story of 'The Adventures of Ruth,' is original with her. The company is her own and she is the executive head, attending to every detail of the business."

"Similar progress can be reported on Mr. Gasnier's serial, 'The Third Eye,' which is being directed by James Horne. I noticed in the newspapers soon after the marriage of Miss Percy to Mr. Busch statements to the effect that she has given up pictures and is about to start on a trip around the world with her husband. This report is absolutely without foundation."

A. M. Fabian, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of New Jersey, distributors of "Virtuous Men" for Jersey, has arranged an important booking for the S-L production. The E. K. Lincoln starring vehicle will open for a two weeks' engagement at the beautiful Strand theatre in Newark, New Jersey, commencing Sunday, August 24th.

Proctor Returns from Exchange Tour

Ralph O. Proctor, Assistant General Manager of United Artists Corporation, reached New York Tuesday morning, August 26th, after a tour of all of the "Big Four" exchanges.

Mr. Proctor made the complete swing around the circuit and incidentally was the first one of the Home Office staff to see the Fairbanks' film, "His Majesty, the American" which is the Company's first release. This private showing was held for Mr. Proctor at the Fairbanks Studios at Hollywood.

Mr. Proctor brought the best of tidings back with him, both as regards the big picture and the Company's business. He stated that the era of longer runs is decidedly here. He said that in his opinion, as a result of conferences with many of the leading exhibitors the country over, the long runs booked on "His Majesty, the American" were but a forerunner of what might be expected if exhibitors were assured of the work of the genuine stars of the industry in quality productions, rented on a basis that guarantees to exhibitors their absolute freedom of action.

Song Campaign on New Fairbanks Film

Getting his inspiration from "Big Four's" first release, the Douglas Fairbanks' picture, "His Majesty, the American." Albert Von Tilzer has written a new song bearing the same title as the film. The song is being published by the Broadway Music Corporation, New York City, and that company is beginning a country-wide campaign to popularize the song in conjunction with the big first runs of the picture.

"THE MIRACLE MAN"

New York is Talking About It

"The Miracle Man" is a picture sensation. All day long a line of people is seen at the box-office of the George M. Cohan Theatre, where it has been presented at two-dollar top prices for a long run.

At every performance the theatre is crowded with spectators who find that the depths of their emotional natures are strangely awakened, that tears strangely flood their eyes, and that they depart elated and inspired.

A miracle has been performed! New Yorkers, hard, cynical, critical, supercilious, find that they have looked upon a motion picture and become like little children.

"The Miracle Man" is a miracle picture.

A Few Critical Opinions

"If the screen could continue to offer to the public photoplays of the purport and tremendous appeal of 'The Miracle Man,' it would be less dreary on Broadway these days. The picture is truly remarkable and has been made with a fixed, unswerving remembrance of its mighty central thought, which lifts it from the ways of the average picture production into the realm of rare big achievements."—New York American.

IT IS TURNING CROWDS AWAY!

At the Broadway Theatre, New York, where Houdini's "The Grim Game" has been booked for a run, crowds are being turned away at every performance.

Those who are lucky enough to get in pronounce the picture the biggest thriller ever staged. The spectators are held spell-bound from the opening. They gasp! They grip their seats! And when the big climax—the aeroplane collision—comes, they break loose in a wild roar of applause!

Seldom have the New York critics been so unanimous in their enthusiastic approval of a picture. The New York Evening Mail says:

"The exploits of the handcuff king are far more thrilling on the screen than they are in real life."

Think of that! And Houdini has for years been the biggest drawing card in vaudeville!

"The Grim Game" will thrill America as it has never been thrilled before.

"The picture is filled with thrills, and has more action in it than any picture we have seen in a long time."
—Morning Telegraph.

"The feats with which Houdini has entertained audiences for years were more baffling than ever. Aeroplanes and motor-cars brought into service to give the audience the best possible thrill in stock."—New York Times.

"Entirely different from anything we have ever seen. A smashing success in every sense of the word."
—New York Tribune.

"Houdini's scaling of the hospital wall, his descent via a short-distance rope, his leap under a big motor truck going at good speed, and the startlingly vivid aeroplane fight that climaxes the picture, with the machines finally crashing to earth—these are incidents that thrill."—New York American.

HERE'S HOW IT HAPPENED

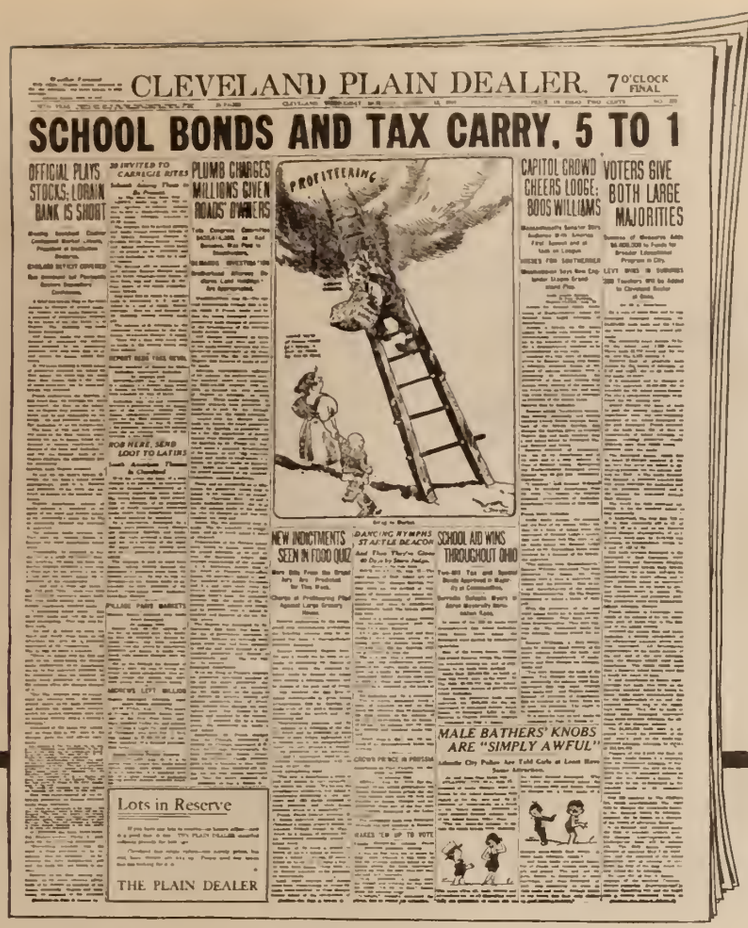
On June first, 1919, the Associated Press carried from Los Angeles a story of the thrilling aeroplane accident that took place during the filming of "The Grim Game." The story of the two planes which crashed together in mid-air and plunged to earth buzzed on the wires to every newspaper in America.

You will see that collision in "The Grim Game." It was an accident, but the camera man had the presence of mind to keep it turning.

The drawings on this page show how it happened.

Houdini on the rope attempts to descend to the lower plane. The camera man was in the third machine.

The lower machine turned its propeller upward — the propellers gnashed together —



The lower plane crashed into the upper one — cutting off a wing —

The two planes, locked and helpless, crashed to earth!

It's all in the picture — and lots more! The greatest thrill in the greatest thrill picture ever made!

VITAGRAPH SECURES STORIES BY WORLD'S GREATEST AUTHORS

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announces this week the acquisition of rights to the products of twelve great authors. The names he mentions glow with long established fame. They represent the aristocracy of brains.

Mr. Smith's announcement spells the enthronement of a new power in films. It is the final evidence that writers now share the importance of stars.

In addition to the imposing list of famous plays announced for release during the season of 1919-20, VITAGRAPH has purchased the literary products of these twelve writers:

REX BEACH
ROBERT W. CHAMBERS
RUPERT HUGHES
MARY ROBERTS RINEHART
IRVIN S. COBB
BOOTH TARKINGTON
RICHARD HARDING DAVIS
O. HENRY
GEORGE ADE
GOUVERNEUR MORRIS
AMELIE RIVES
GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

Every American Knows These Writers

They are writers who have reached the elusive goal known as Fame. Their names are a guarantee for real ideas, real craftsmanship, real story.

VITAGRAPH has been holding back silently while its competitors' claims were creeping forward, and has been reaching for a whole battalion of the greatest names procurable before mentioning its effort.

Now, the statement of what VITAGRAPH has mobilized in the form of writing folk is made with the same assurance that a manufacturing plant proclaims its installation of a compound engine.

The authors whose stories have been purchased by VITAGRAPH form a veritable liberty motor of genius.

The pages of the best modern fiction have been exhaustively searched by George Randolph Chester, himself a famous author, as well as production editor of VITAGRAPH, that the BEST STORIES might be secured for VITAGRAPH.

The associations and craft standing of Mr. Chester as an author have for years been in the highest altitude of the writing profession. His presence gave VITAGRAPH an inside track in the quest for big stories.

VITAGRAPH has for years had the greatest players and directors the market could afford, and has employed the best stories that could be procured in open competition. The only channel for further stride lay in the direction of top-rung writing genius.

Here is a galaxy of brilliant names such as has never been offered to the exhibitor. Names from the Hall of Fame, each with a distinct and separate niche:

REX BEACH, whose works paint the visual narrative of the wild places.

ROBERT W. CHAMBERS, famed for his sparkling society dramas.

RUPERT HUGHES, whose every word of his tales of city life, of social strife, fairly leaps from the page.

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART, always master of mystery, whose stories on the screen will have an especial appeal for women.

IRVIN S. COBB, called "the world's greatest reporter."

BOOTH TARKINGTON—the world's greatest stylist.

And then—

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS—whose slashing adventure stories have endowed his memory with perpetual life.

O. HENRY, with his masterpieces of heart-stuff—slices of human life.

GEORGE ADE, master of humor, and his quaint, delightful slang.

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS, writer of the unusual love story.

AMELIE RIVES, who knows and writes the throbbing dramas of diplomatic life—BIG... STUFF!

And last but not least,

GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER, with his tales of that lovable vagabond, J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD, himself.

GENERAL OFFICES

1600 BROADWAY

NEW YORK Aug. 15, 1919.

Mr. Albert E. Smith, President,
Vitagraph Inc.,
Brooklyn, N.Y.

My dear Mr. Smith:-

Following is the list of popular writers for the Vitagraph's twelve, one-a-month, big-author feature specials in the season of 1919-20; viz:-

Rex Beach	Richard Harding Davis
Robert W. Chambers	O. Henry
Rupert Hughes	George Ade
Mary Roberts Rinehart	Gouverneur Morris
Irvin S. Cobb	Amelie Rives
Booth Tarkington	George Randolph Chester

At your insistence, I have included my own name and shall try to make the special "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" picture worthy of the superb stories provided by the other eleven authors.

I have no hesitation in saying that no motion picture producing company has announced or can announce a list of popular modern authors so illustrious as these eleven other names, and the stories, without exception, are in my estimation the best which have been offered to Vitagraph. These, in conjunction with our "Famous Plays" series, make a galaxy such as has never been offered to the exhibitor.

Starting with Rex Beach's powerful story, "THE VENGEANCE OF DURAND," which releases in November there's not a weak spot in the "line-up."

This letter marks the end of several months of strenuous effort, and I must confess that as I read over the imposing array of talent which we have gathered for this "grand slam" I am much more than content-- and I feel certain that, anxious as you are to give the public better pictures than they could obtain from any other source, you too will be more than satisfied with the selection.

Yours cordially,

George Randolph Chester

Realart's Policy for 1919-1920 —and Forever After

NOT only stars who have won nation-wide fame through merit, and whose box-office value is everywhere recognized—

Not only books and plays that are the rarest gems of literature and that have proved their popular appeal—

Not only direction that develops dramatic quality, knows the possibilities and limitations of pictures, and understands public taste—

Not only photography that surrounds stirring action with an atmosphere of charm and beauty—

But unswerving, unchanging determination that the Realart trade mark shall always mean

In Production—The Sign of Superiority.
In Distribution—The Sign of Service.
To the Public—The Sign of Satisfaction.
To Exhibitors—The Sign of Success.

Such is Realart policy—a uniform, fixed, standardized policy—a policy for this season and all the seasons thereafter—a policy you can adopt with assurance of profit.

Let Realart do your worrying!

Nearly Everyone Knows

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES"

THAT IS WHY REALART BOUGHT
THIS BOOK AND THREE OTHERS OF THE SAME FAMOUS SERIES.

HAVE you ever thought you would like to choose the stories for photoplays? And don't you believe it pays to pay a premium for public approval — for books the people have endorsed?

That is Realart's idea. That is why L. M. MONTGOMERY'S four "Anne" books were bought and given to FRANCES MARION to be woven into one photoplay.

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES" has friends in almost every home in the land — friends who will rejoice to know that at last they may really meet her.

MARY MILES MINTER

the girl with 40,000 advisers, is visualizing "Anne," under the direction of WILLIAM DESMOND TAYLOR. Could there be a rarer combination of star and story, author and director? Can you conceive of anything but profits from such a happy alliance?

Realart already has heard the answer — from the stacks of contracts on the manager's desk. Doubtless yours is there, or on the way—'most everybody's is!

ALLAN DWAN—

MASTER CRAFTSMAN OF THE DIRECTOR'S ART—CREATOR OF MIGHTY PAGEANTS THAT GLOW WITH THE FIRE OF ACTION.

FOR years ALLAN DWAN has made pictures to meet producers' ideas of what would pay. And he has measured up to the demands both of employers and public.

Now he has organized his own company and is producing for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Isaac Wolper, President, eight pictures built on quality alone.

He begins by picturing one of the most stirring adventure stories ever bound in a book, a book that came flowing from the presses by the hundred thousands,

"SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE"

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS Dramatized by AUGUSTUS THOMAS

Into this production that ALLAN DWAN proudly calls his own, has gone the repressed energy of many years. It is a colorful story, masterfully told—a play rich in the atmosphere of spirited romance—a product of genius at its best.

"Soldiers of Fortune" is one of Realart's answers to your demand for bigger and better productions. Are you ready to profit?

The Debutante Star of Screen and Stage

CONSTANCE BINNEY

HER TRIUMPH IN THE BROADWAY SUCCESS, "39 EAST,"
NOW TO BE DUPLICATED ON THE SCREEN

AT LAST!—a new star who has youth, beauty and charm, and who, best of all, has proved her merit—who has won the whole-hearted indorsement of critical, blasé Broadway!

CONSTANCE BINNEY has for her first stardom adventure in pictures a play based on the far-famed novel, "BARNABETTA," by HELEN R. MARTIN—a play of such merit that it won for MRS. FISKE, who starred in it on the stage, a long-awaited return to Broadway.

"ERSTWHILE SUSAN"

Directed by JOHN S. ROBERTSON Scenario by KATHRYNE STUART

is a story of a Pennsylvania Dutch settlement—of a modern Cinderella, a scullery maid, the unwilling slave of a rich widower and his two loutish sons. It tells of powerful contrasts—of false love and true love—of the unfolding of the bright flower of innocent girlhood triumphant even in a somber environment of selfishness, sordidness and Satanic cruelty.

Exhibitors of the whole country are responding to the news of CONSTANCE BINNEY'S coming. Her first Realart picture is a triumph of the sort that draws crowds like the news of a run on a bank. If your contract is signed today, tomorrow's regrets will be some one else's concern.

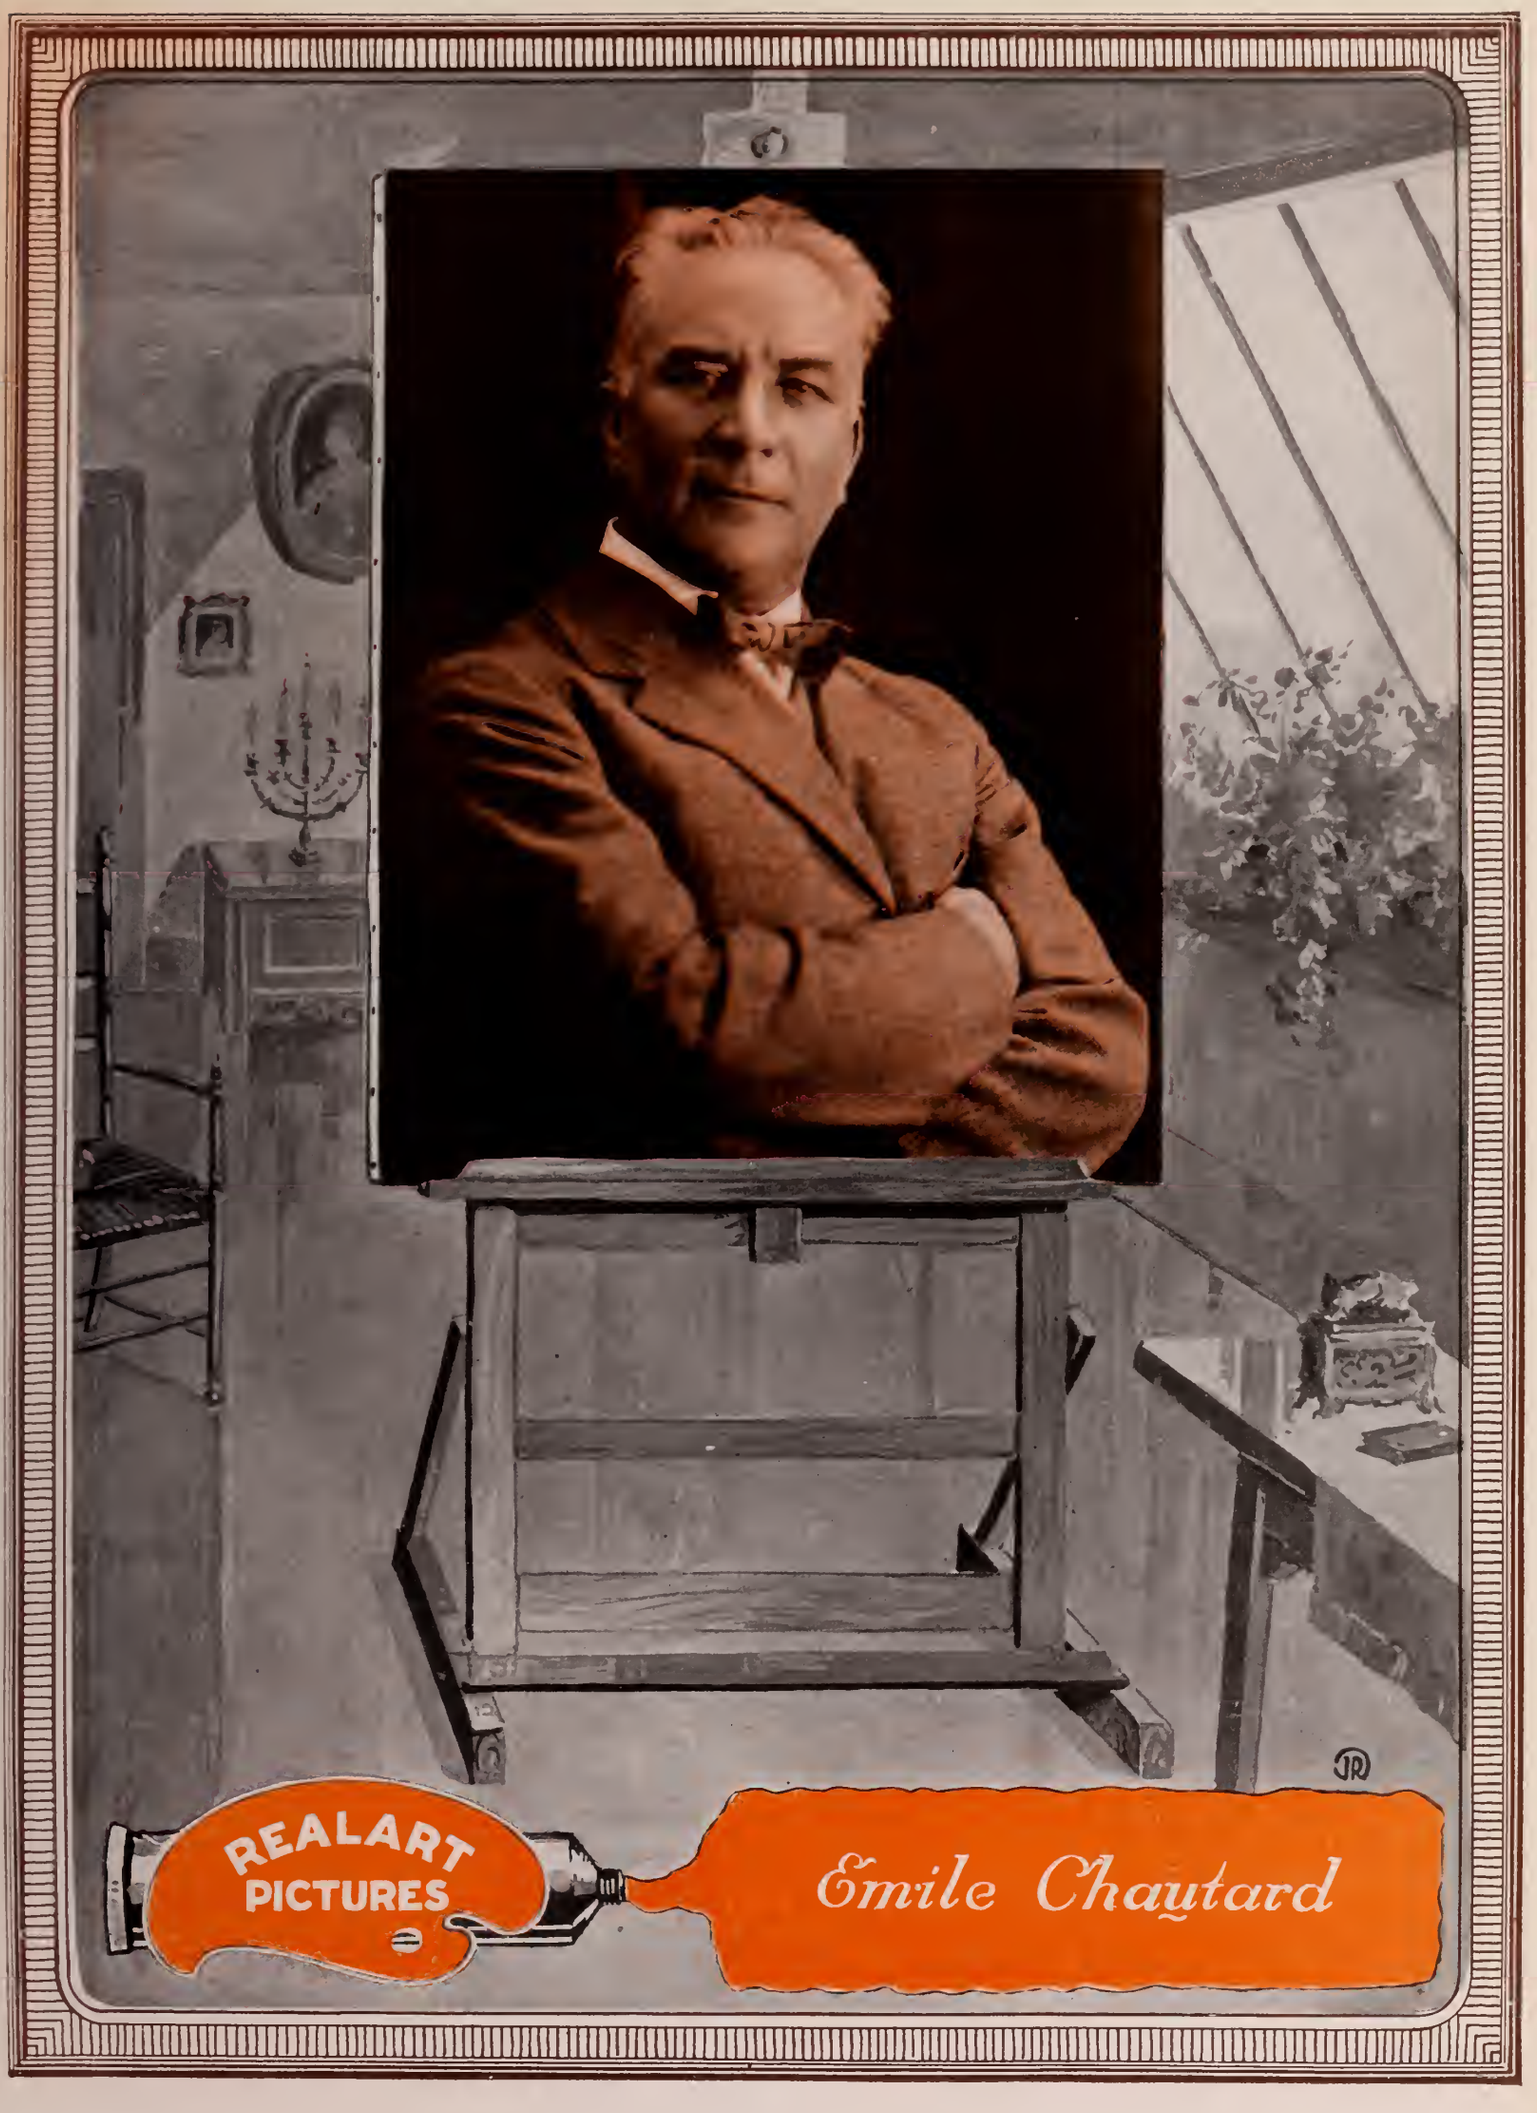
Emile Chautard

Originator of the Photonovel, the Newest Contribution to Bigger and Better Pictures.

EMILE CHAUTARD is the master story teller of motion pictures. And it is because, months ago, he foresaw today's insistent demand for higher production standards that he now is an independent producer, making six photonovels for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Isaac Wolper, President, to be released by Realart.



The CHAUTARD genius for speaking through action —for powerfully gripping presentation of his story— never has had greater or more interesting expression than in his first EMILE CHAUTARD Production— based on Gaston Leroux's pulse quickening novel,

"THE MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW ROOM"

This detective romance, the most baffling and absorbing riddle of present day literature, is a typical CHAUTARD subject — a problem that is made apparently unanswerable through the superior artistry with which it is presented.

If you want the best "better pictures," your route is straight to the door of the nearest Realart exchange.

A STATEMENT from

HE amazing improvement in Universal pictures is the real talk of the trade, not only in this country but all over the world.

Never was there such a demand for the Universal product. Never did we have such a 100-percent list of attractions to offer.

At this moment every Universal exchange is packed full of prints of brand new pictures, unreleased but ready to show. It's "look before you book."

In the single month of September we are throwing on the market a tremendous assortment of the finest pictures ever produced--every picture superb! This is honest-to-god truth!

No concern in the industry has received so many favorable reviews from photoplay critics and from the public as the Universal is now getting.

1919 UNIVERSAL

CARL LAEMMLE

E'VE got whatever you want, whether it is a super production de luxe, or the smallest short reel novelty, or anything in between.

You ought to make it your business to see every foot of these new releases, even if it takes you a week of screening. The prints are ready right now!

It was a herculean task to get all the prints ready and distributed among our exchanges, but we wanted you to "look before you book"--and now you can!

Gentlemen, the Universal is on top! We are making the finest productions on God's green earth, and our whole staff is on edge with excitement to hear your verdict!

We haven't asked you for contracts. We haven't cooked up schemes. We've simply made pictures, pictures, pictures--and they're ready now when you need them the most!

"The Ace of the Saddle"

HE'S human—that's why they appreciate him—he's real—that's why they believe in him—he has a grin—that's why they love him. And they're right with him every minute he's on the screen. Together with Jack Ford, his Director, Human Harry Carey has for some time been making the truest and most artistic Western pictures that the photoplay art has ever known. See "THE ACE OF THE SADDLE" and you'll realize what an actor can do when he's sure of his audience. Play it and you'll be just as sure of your own.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Olive Tell
in Richard Harding Davis' Great Story
"The Trap"

SHE is beautiful—and appealing. And America's most famous novelist-dramatist wrote the story. Which means that the action in this big, moving picture of the Frozen North is painted in with the swift, sure, sweeping strokes of a master-hand. The story of a woman who makes a great mistake in her early life. "THE TRAP" is so logically constructed and so finely acted as to be exactly what audiences of today enjoy—a crowded hour of real life presented in inspiring settings and suited to audiences of any age anywhere.

Mary MacLaren in "Bonnie Bonnie Lassie"

TAKEN from the story of "Auld Jeremiah" by the well-known author, Henry C. Rowland, "Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie" gives the American Beauty of the Screen a perfect vehicle for the steadily mounting appeal of her personality and talent in comedy-drama. Supporting Mary MacLaren is Spottiswoode Aitken in the character of "Auld Jeremiah," and the play of wits between the crusty old millionaire and the stout-hearted Scotch lassie determined to make her way in this country, is as keen a delight to the mind as the beautiful settings are to the eye. See this picture soon.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Kenneth Harlan in "The Trembling Hour"

THE war has brought us "shell shock" And shell shock has brought us the big, throbbing crisis scene in "THE TREMBLING HOUR" —a picture hot with the passionate strivings of youth to grasp revenge for injustice—next, grim with the payment of the debt due for overstepping the law—then hugely tragic with an inexplicable crime suddenly fastened on the returned soldier-hero whose regeneration until now had seemed accomplished. There are not many plays with the terrific intensity of "THE TREMBLING HOUR." But you know their success.

Ora Carew
in "Loot"

MADE from the famous story "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, this picture makes the ordinary "thriller" look like a day in an Old Ladies' Home—and yet is completely without objectionable features. The story of the theft of a two-million dollar necklace entrusted to a young American for delivery in London, "LOOT" has one of the most startling and intense robbery scenes ever conceived and, at the same time, is romantic with a heart-interest that will make your audiences glow with sympathy for the two delightful young people so tremendously involved. Here, gentlemen, is a real melodrama!

SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Frank Mayo J. Barney Sherry
in "A Little Brother of the Rich"

TO WEAR dress clothes and still be distinguishable from the waiters is something worth while to photoplays as well as to gentlemen. You will not mistake "A LITTLE BROTHER OF THE RICH" for anything but a Universal production, so perfect are its appointments from flying start to silken finish. Taken from the famous novel by Joseph Medill Patterson and played by an All-Star cast we believe that this is as fine an example of the well-rounded photodrama as any Producer will offer you this year. We leave the decision to you—at any Universal Exchange.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION

UNIVERSAL

1920

Fritzi Brunette in "The Woman Under Cover"

SOMETIMES the play appeals—sometimes the star—but here we have a picture in which both Star and Story tug at the heart strings, till it seems as if human emotion can stand no more. "THE WOMAN UNDER COVER" is a rushing, throbbing story of newspaper life—from the woman's side of it—the woman who had to choose between her duty to her paper and the big, strong man she loved, and her affection for a wayward brother in the toils of a woman under cover. They don't make them much finer and stronger than this picture. We advise you to see it.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Monroe Salisbury in "Sundown Trail"

THE golden days of old California—they have just been discovered! As usual, Universal has done it—first, with "THE OUTCASTS OF POKER FLAT," and now with Monroe Salisbury in "THE SUNDOWN TRAIL," a picture which is a sheer delight to the eye for its picturesque Sierra settings, its quaint, old-fashioned, yet attractive, dress, its rich flavor of those romantic, gold-glamored days that are gone. Played by Monroe Salisbury in that superbly emotional fashion of which he is the master, "THE SUNDOWN TRAIL" will be found a thrilling, quick-moving drama of the very best kind, no matter where or who your audience.

Harry Carey in "The Rider of the Law"

HERE'S a real galloper! The story of a U. S. Ranger, reformed from a wild life, whom Fate forces to arrest his former evil associates, only to find that their leader is his brother and that brother the lover of the very woman for whom he, himself, is undergoing hardship and every form of danger. But he runs true to form—as "THE RIDER OF THE LAW," and as Harry Carey. Even when troubles are thicker than huckleberries in July, you'll chuckle over the human-ness of the man and exult with him when the day of victory over self and enemies finally comes. Book this and book it sure.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Robert Anderson in "Common Property"

THERE is no money-maker like Timeliness. And Timeliness points straight at Russia where, in the scenes of "COMMON PROPERTY," we have the sensational picture of a Russian's American wife and daughter claimed by the Bolsheviks under their infamous decree nationalizing all women. No. It is not too strong. "COMMON PROPERTY" has been handled in a wondrously artistic fashion. Its strength lies, as you will see, in the marvellous sympathy with which its naturally tremendous situations have been made to reach every human heart. Give this picture your own personal viewing and you'll agree.

Tsuri Aoki
(Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa)
in
"The Breath of the Gods"

CAN the cherry-blossom mate with the lily? Even with a lily of France? Here is a photodrama whose plot will yet see the Grand Opera stage—a picture of a little Japanese maid of noble birth, torn by love for one whom she cannot marry if she would remain true to her native land. A play into which the secret diplomacy of the Far East suddenly enters with tragic tread and reeking hand, making its pathetic heroine still more flower-like and fragile, still more certain of being broken in the mighty game of politics and ruthlessly cast aside. See this picture by all means. It is unique.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Monroe Salisbury
in
"His Divorced Wife"

THE women of your audiences like Monroe Salisbury fully as much as the men and they'll simply dote on "HIS DIVORCED WIFE"—because it's their kind of a story. Living in a simple mountain community, Asa Whipple, the iron-muscled blacksmith, marries the flower of the village, and then, through the plots of his rivals, has to pass through trials, perils, imprisonment and self-sacrifice, bearing them all like a true man and finally regaining his rightful happiness. Simple in plot? Yes—but like most simply constructed things—exceedingly strong.

"THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS"

A UNIVERSAL-JEWEL PRODUCTION DE LUXE

Produced under the direction of Allen Holubar

The finest adjectives are, after all, only words. You must see Dorothy Phillips in her wonder-role of the two sisters--you must see VIVIAN, the girl who had everything and gave nothing--you must see SONIA, who had nothing--yet gave everything. You must see these two--in the same actress--meet and kiss. You will then be seeing the very finest combination of acting and photography that the screen has ever known.

For some, "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS," will be a great spectacle of peoples' rights and wrongs--5000 assisted in its production--a city built and burned, For others, it will be a terrific revelation of the industrial struggle of today—of the volcano that smoulders under the crust. For a great many more, it will be, happily, the greatest love-story ever told. What more do you want in a picture?

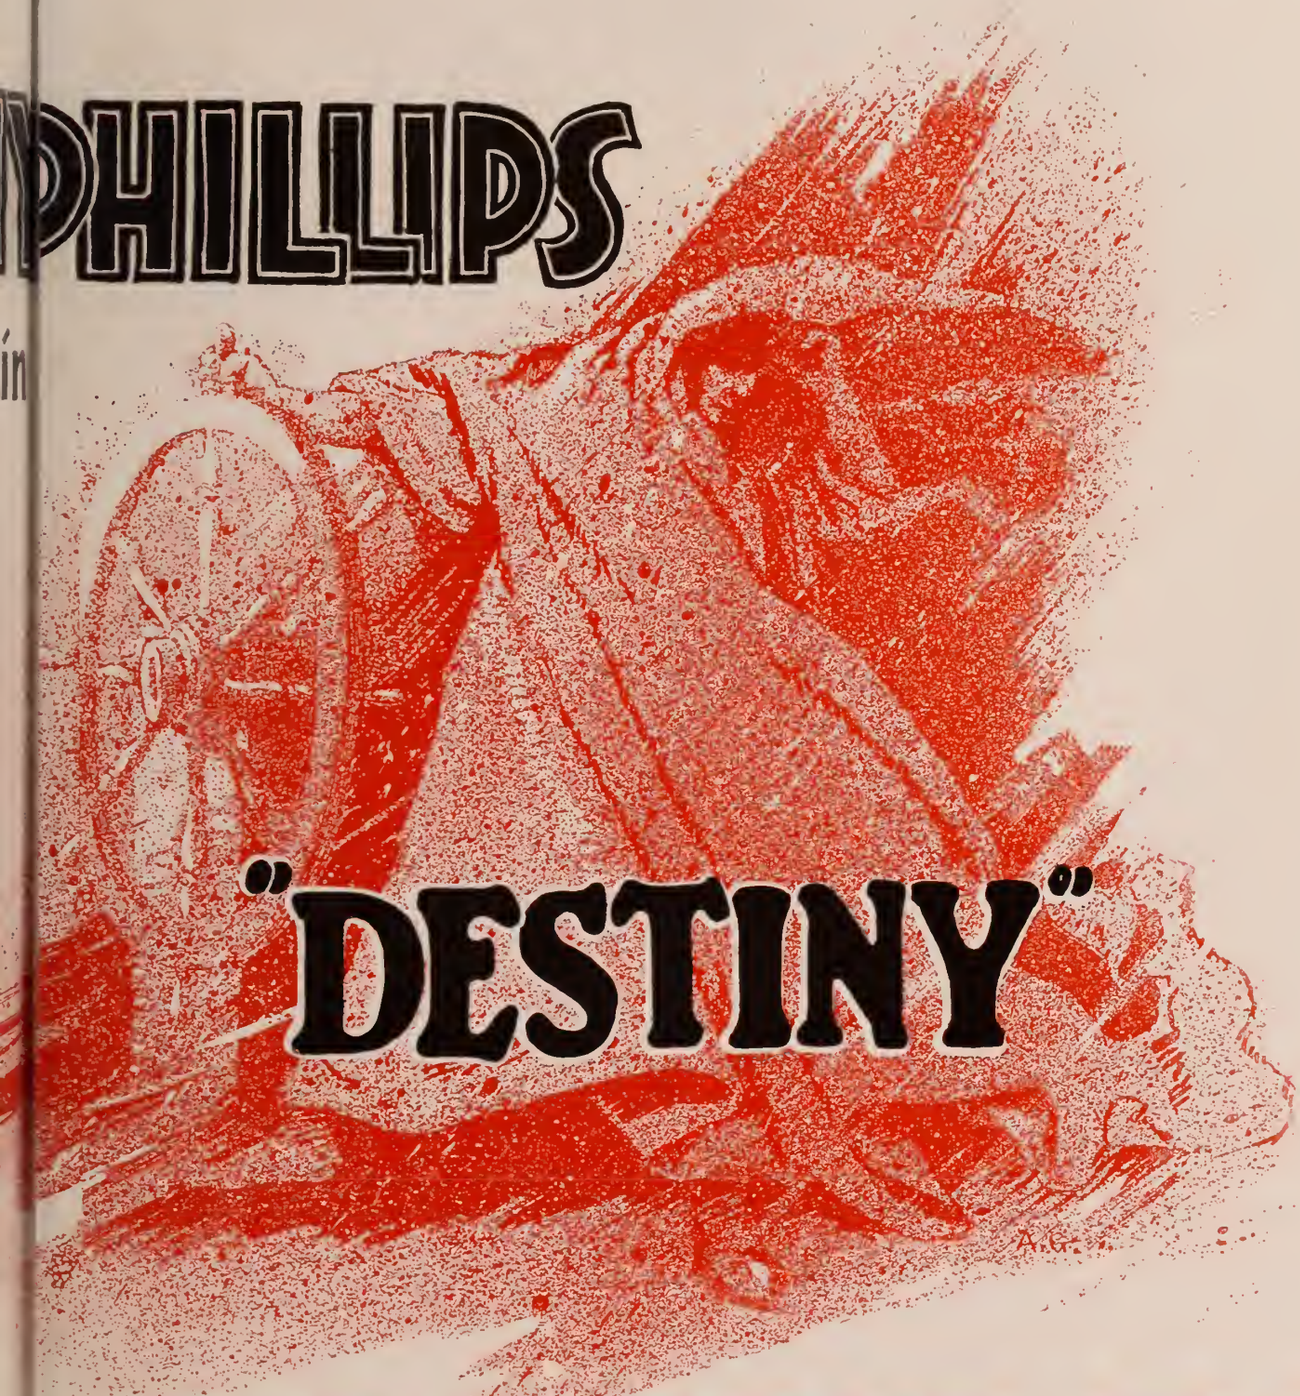
A GREAT drama of the Mystery of Fate. Something that no one can resist when once they've seen your posters—something they'll not soon forget. WID says: "If you ran 'The Heart of Humanity' it is certainly up to you to follow it with 'DESTINY.' The Story is 'there' in many ways and the author, Charles Neville Buck, proves himself an analyst of character."



In corroboration which brings in the dollars and cents, H. G. REDMON of Redmon's Majestic (1200 seats) in E. St. Louis, says:

"HOME"

The Story of Every Girl

The story of every girl cannot be super-dramatic—no one wants it to be. But "HOME" is exactly what every girl would like to have it—a picture of heart-appeal, beauty and good sense. Just the kind of play that women like—just the kind that all men like who like women. Exquisitely dressed, perfectly appointed, absorbingly realistic whether the situation is laid around a deal table or a Circassian escritoire. In other words, it's a Mildred Harris–Lois Weber Production—perfect.

THE whole Trade knows in its heart that there has never been a time when the UNIVERSAL did not excel the whole field on short stuff.

The whole Trade knows, also, that there is a great and growing demand for short stuff on the part of the movie fan. It is no longer used as a filler. It is no longer bought haphazard. Short stuff has become the real feature in many a fine theatre, with the result that the owners are more than mopping up profits.

Who on earth can give you such a really complete and wonderful array and variety of good short stuff as you'll find on this list.

CLUNE'S BROADWAY

Four seasons in London and two equally successful seasons in New York as a stage play should be enough to guarantee the picture version of "The Man Who Stayed At Home," shown at Clune's Broadway this week with King Baggot in the title role, as an attraction of notable interest.

The story is one of sustained interest from the very first scene until the last flicker of the last reel. There are unexpected twists that keep the spectator guessing from the start, while the picture as a whole contains as many thrills as the most highly colored serial, without the impossibilities that usually mark that type of screen entertainment. At every turn of the story, just when the audiences begin to draw conclusions ahead of the action, there comes a new and entirely unexpected development, all of which serves to keep the interest not only tenified, but on the qui vive of further expectancy. In the end a fine and dramatic climax is registered. The plot centers around a young American secret service man, who silently accepts the position of a slacker in his friends' eyes, that he may secure the conviction of a desperate band of criminals, who are seeking to betray the United States into the power of Germany.

King Baggot's numerous admirers are sure to be wildly enthusiastic over his work in the role of Christopher Brent. Claire Whitnel is delicately beautiful and graceful as the heroine and Lillie Leslie and others complete a strong cast.

"MAN WHO STAYED AT HOME" SCORES A HIT

Stirring Secret Service Play Crowds the Fulton, Franklin and Rialto Theatres

The sensational London and New York stage success, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," the work of the noted English dramatists, Lechmere Worrall and J. E. Harold Terry, has been made into a graphic drama of the silver sheet by Screen Classics, Inc., and is a worthy successor to the spoken play.

This photoplay which was the feature at the Fulton, Franklin and Rialto theatres yesterday tells the story of Christopher Brent, a young and daring Secret Service agent who finds it difficult to bear the suspicions of the girl he loves and of his friends, because he will not disclose his secret mission.

Brent is ordered by his chief to proceed to a fashionable seaside resort to round up a band of conspirators who are seeking to gather American state secrets for transmission to an alien power. He goes there and with the aid of a clever woman assistant, discovers a wireless apparatus that has been ingeniously concealed in a revolving fireplace. His quarry soon suspect him and denounce him as a foreign agent.

As he is already under suspicion and unable to speak, his sweetheart further distrusts him, as do also her brother and father.

Brent finally, by a subtle move manages to turn the tables on the plotters and turn them in the net of their own ring.

The Screen Classics Inc., production of "The Man Who Stayed at Home" is supported admirably by an all-star cast featuring King Baggot, Frank Bennett Ricca Allen, Ida Darling, Lloyd Lack. The big production is directed by Herbert Blache and produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

Herald, Dallas, Tex.

HIPPODROME THEATER.

Criticism.

"The Man Who Stayed at Home" is a genuine screen thriller and King Baggot, who plays the leading role, makes it thrilling.

The picture, which began a week's run at the Hippodrome theater Sunday, shows a new phase of the great war—or rather, a part of the great war about which little or nothing was known. It concerns a man whose mission was secret and who braved the scorn of his friends and the contempt of the woman he loved to discharge his duty. As a secret service operative, he encountered dangers equal to those of the boys in the trenches, but there was no glory for him. Even his friends suspected him of having connections with enemy agents, but he could no reveal his secret. How he eventually performed a great service for his country and won back the confidence of his friends and the love of the girl forms a most powerful climax.

"The man Who Stayed at Home" abounds with rapid-fire action and the interest never lags. King Baggot gives a masterful portraval of his powerful role and reveals striking dramatic ability. It has been many months since we have seen this attractive star and his work in this picture revives hope that the movie fans will see more of him in the future.

GOLDWYN PICTURES

September
Nineteen Nineteen

SO long as exhibitors are impressed by inflated exaggerations in producers' advertising, just so long will they have themselves to thank for unfortunate experiences when pictures fail to live up to their advance announcements. There is coming into the industry of picture making a new spirit, which is best exemplified by the Goldwyn idea. Exit Exaggeration! Not every picture is the biggest thing ever produced; not every picture is a hundred percent value; not every picture deserves to be called the "best," the "biggest," the "finest," the "most excellent."

In discussing the Goldwyn pictures now in the Goldwyn exchanges throughout the country, we have merely this to say:

We are proud of the new Goldwyn pictures. They measure up to the Goldwyn standards of good picture making, which are the severest test they ever face. Six productions are ready to be seen. They have been seen by many authoritative exhibitors, and then booked. The list of first-run managers who have already put their O.K. on them runs into the hundreds.

If you can see the current films yourself, do so. How much better to book, when you have been the judge!

In selling to the exhibitor, we like to think of him as a business man. As a business man, he will appreciate the conservative, business-like basis on which we are offering Goldwyn merchandise.

You and the public you serve have always vaguely dreamed of a picture dominating enough to match up with the personality of Farrar. So overwhelming a personage, internationally popular—popularly enthroned—deserves a story and a production of sweeping magnitude, built on broad fundamental human emotions.

In this spectacular, epical play, the first, last and eternal impression must be that your original conception of a picture equal to Farrar at last has been encompassed.

The charm of Will Rogers is in his lack of play-acting—he is genuine.

Announces

NATIONAL ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

It will be the most intensive, aggressive, consistent effort ever made to create a faith in a motion picture name. There will be no effort of publicity and advertising known in modern merchandising which will not be adopted in the tremendous propaganda. The purpose of it all will be to make the public understand Goldwyn ideas, ideals; pictures, stars, authors. More particularly will the campaign gradually mould a public appreciation of the Goldwyn standard of entertainment. Gradually "Goldwyn" alone will bring the audiences.

The campaign will not be a flash. It will not be intermittent. It will not be for a week or a month or a year, but is being laid out along conservative, constructive, common sense lines, to be carried on for the length of the life of the Goldwyn Company. There will be that same perseverance and unrelenting adherence to a fixed policy, which has made for the success of the best commercial enterprises, viz: Packard Automobile; Royal Baking Powder; Fairy Soap; Waterman's Fountain Pen; Victor Talking Machine; U. S. Tire and all the other big advertising leaders.

Not one penny of the advertising will be spent except in its direct application to the theatre allied with the Goldwyn idea. The best brains in the advertising world are at work on the campaign.

Pull to this picture! Under three different names the stage play has been a maker of over-flow audiences.
The race-track atmosphere, inevitable romance of a Tom Moore characterization, the old English home life, all contribute their part toward making an exceptionally compelling and, we believe, a money maker production.
The exploitation possibilities are unusual. Capitalize on the positive betting propensity of the crowds.

"A Splendid Drama. Despite the fact that these are days of lavish production, days when cost is evidently the last consideration in the selection of a photo-play story, this picture is extraordinary in its lavish sets which were obviously arranged with supreme disregard for the elusive 'Almighty Dollar.' "The Other Half" with an all-star cast

Noble is the motive of this story, and nobly is it interpretated by the characters.

Two friends, one a captain, the other a corporal, return from France. Don, the captain, is wealthy; Jim, the corporal, not well-to-do. Each has a sweetheart. In France, Jim had once saved Don's life. For this, Don is grateful. Jim, however, thinks nothing of it: "You would do the same thing for me, Don," he would say, and thus pass it up. The two are the best of friends. Each is proud of the other. They both work in the factory, because Don wants to make his way up, without the help of his father's money

Jim's girl, who works in a laundry, is overcome by the heat and is carried home. Jim and Don are notified and they rush home. Don telephones for his sweetheart, and she comes to nurse the girl. The kindness of her disposition brings cheer to the sick girl who shortly recovers. The two girls become fast friends.

Don's father dies, and Don inherits the entire fortune. His father's last words were, "Son, remember, there can be no sentiment in business." This motto now guides Don's actions, and the once "good fellow" becomes selfish and heartless.

Jim is made foreman. He immediately reports the unsafe condition of the factory's walls. Don turns him down. The walls cave in, and Jim is caught in the wreckage. He is blinded.

It is difficult to describe in this short space how Don is once again transformed to a lovable young man, and how Jim regains his eyesight to the joy of the spectator; but this much can be said about the whole picture, it is the personification of all that is good in human nature, all that is lofty. The wealthy girl's conduct towards the sick girl will touch every heart-string. Her look at the faded flower will melt any heart. Jim's unwillingness to think evil of Don even in his affliction, excusing his failure to visit him by saying, "Don must be too busy, otherwise he would come to see me, I know he would", will bring tears to your eyes, whether you want to or not. Such is the influence the picture exerts upon the finer emotions all the way through.

You, the exhibitor, have not yet fully realized the importance of your position in the community. Some people think it is equal to that of an educator; others, even superior. The writer is inclined to side with the latter, because your influence, for good or evil, as you may choose to exert it, is more powerful than that of any other factor known. Pictures such as "The Other Half" will increase the respect of your patrons for you and the profession. It is the kind that ennobles the soul, refines the feelings.--Robertson-Cole Co.--Through Exhibitors Mutual. -5 reels.

CHICAGO Aug. 21, 1919

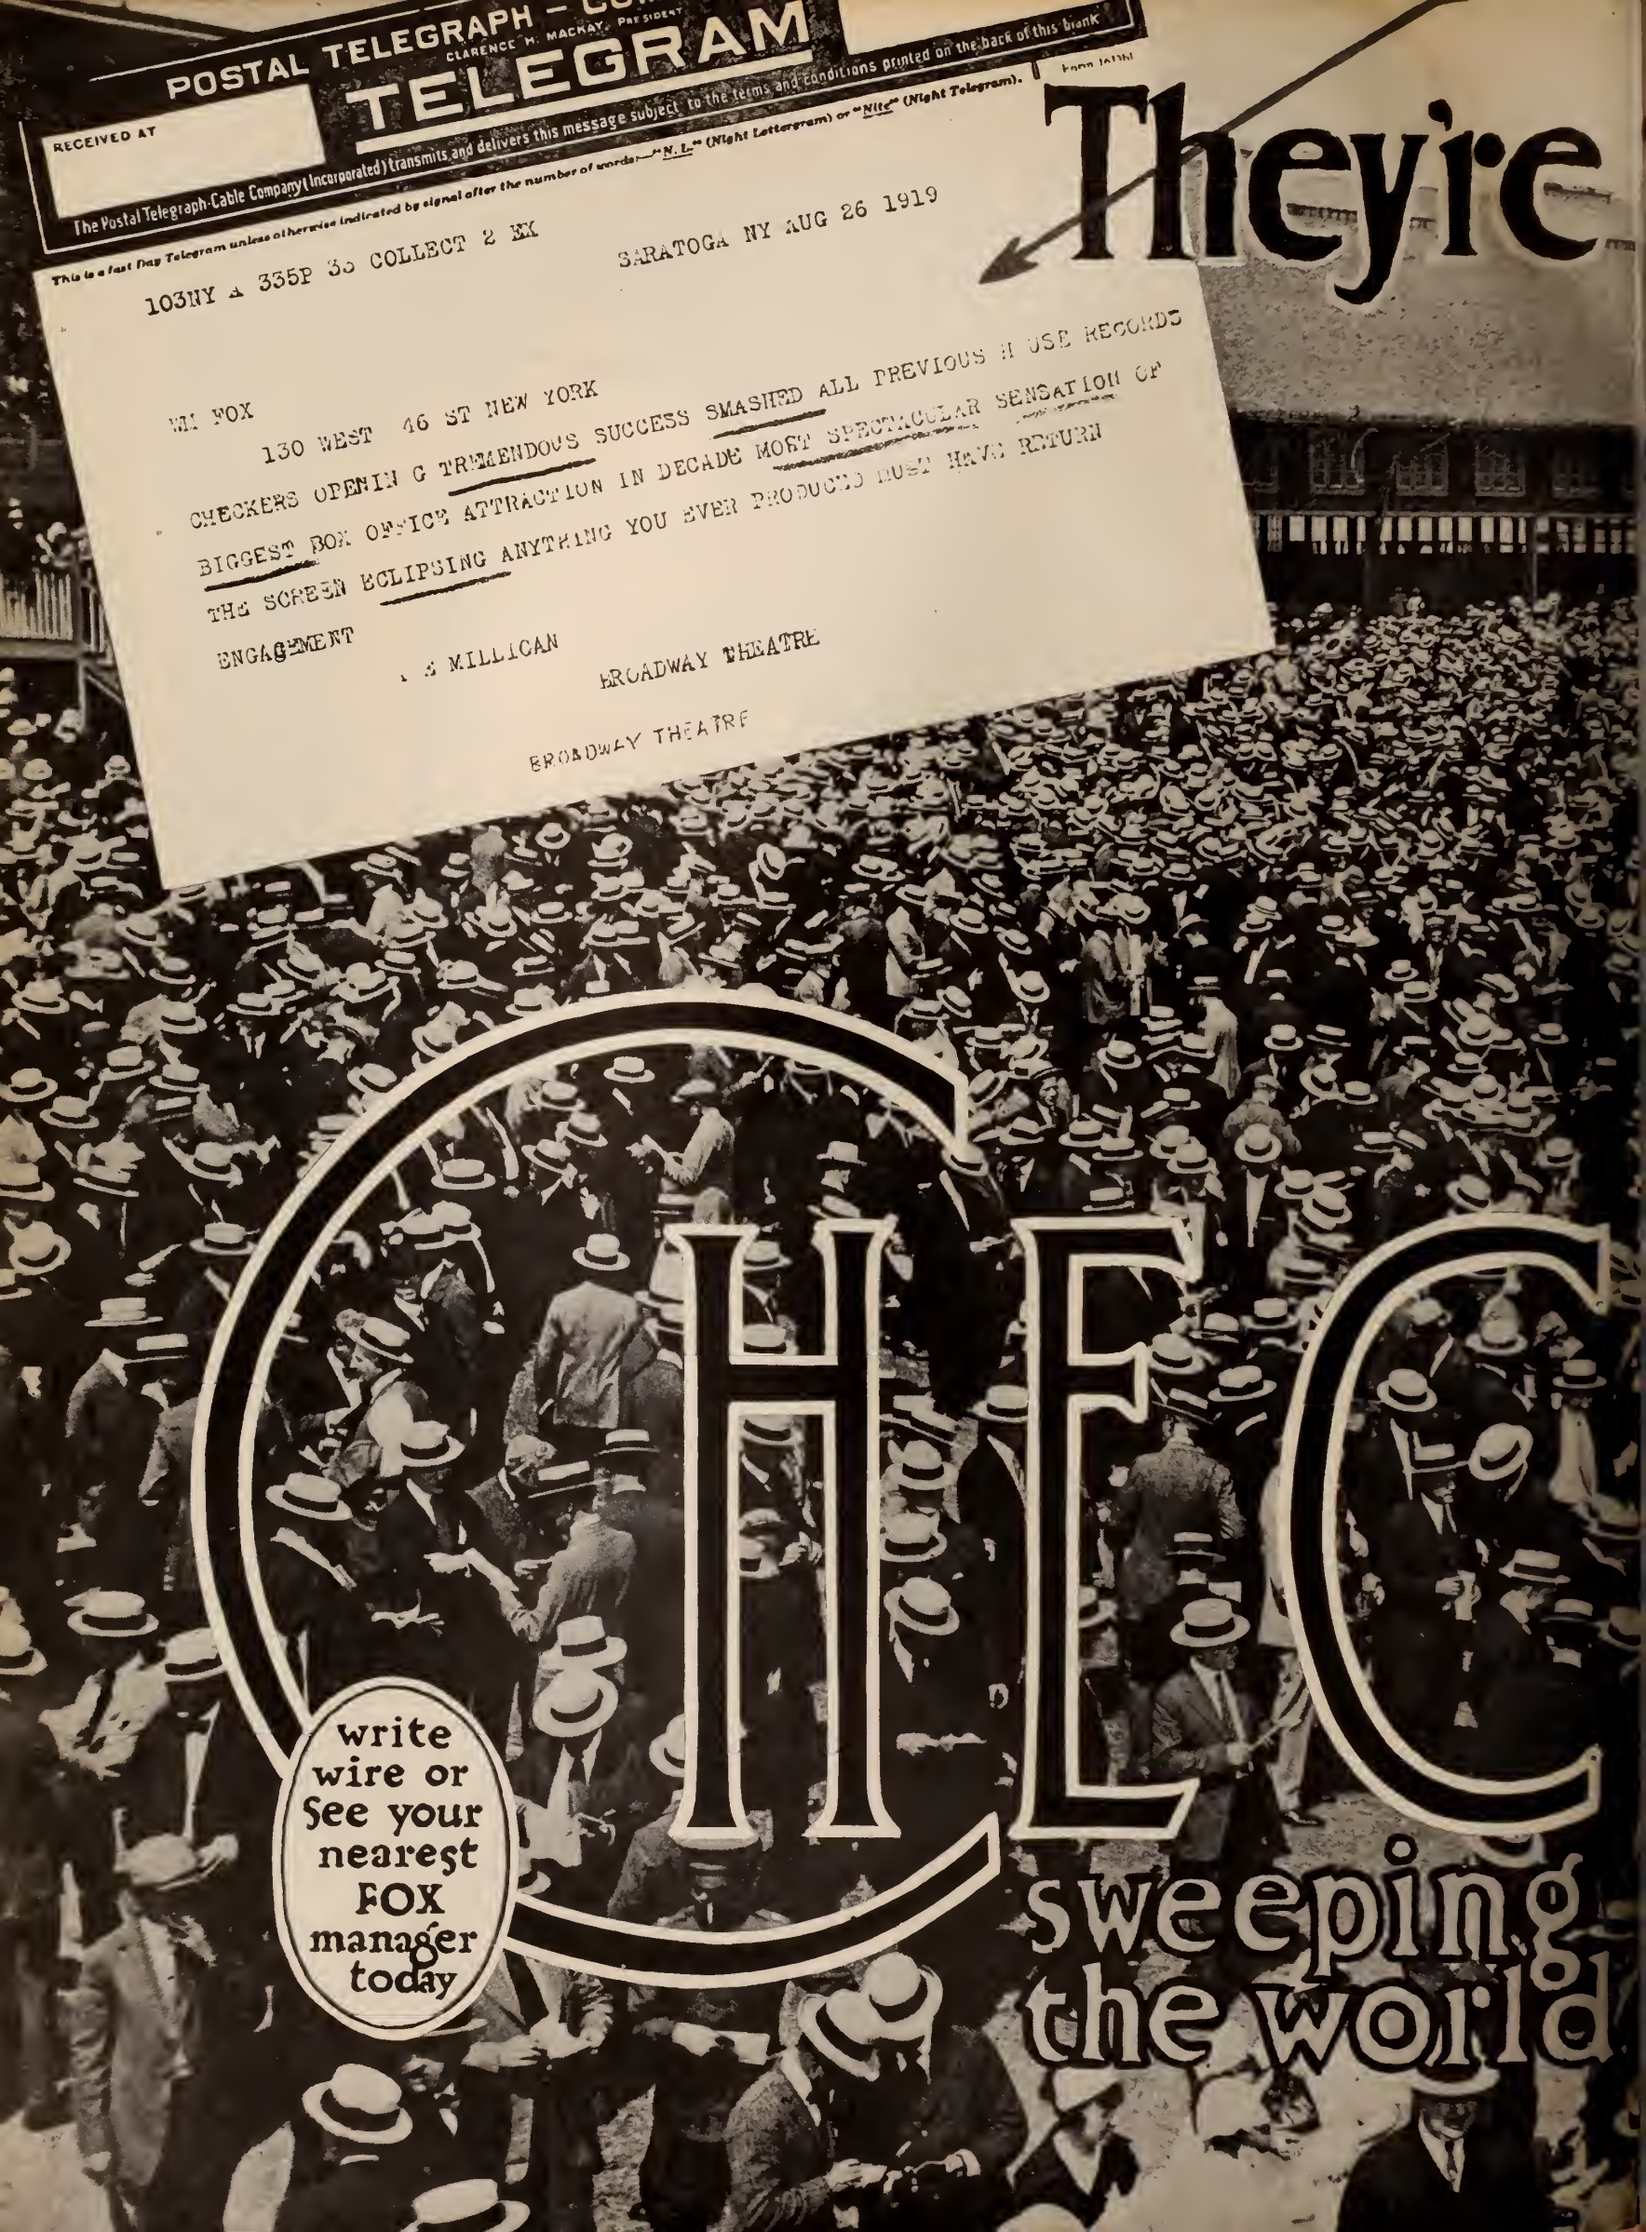
Mr. Ed. L. Moore,
Repr. D. W. GRIFFITH SERVICE,
Morrison Hotel,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Moore:-

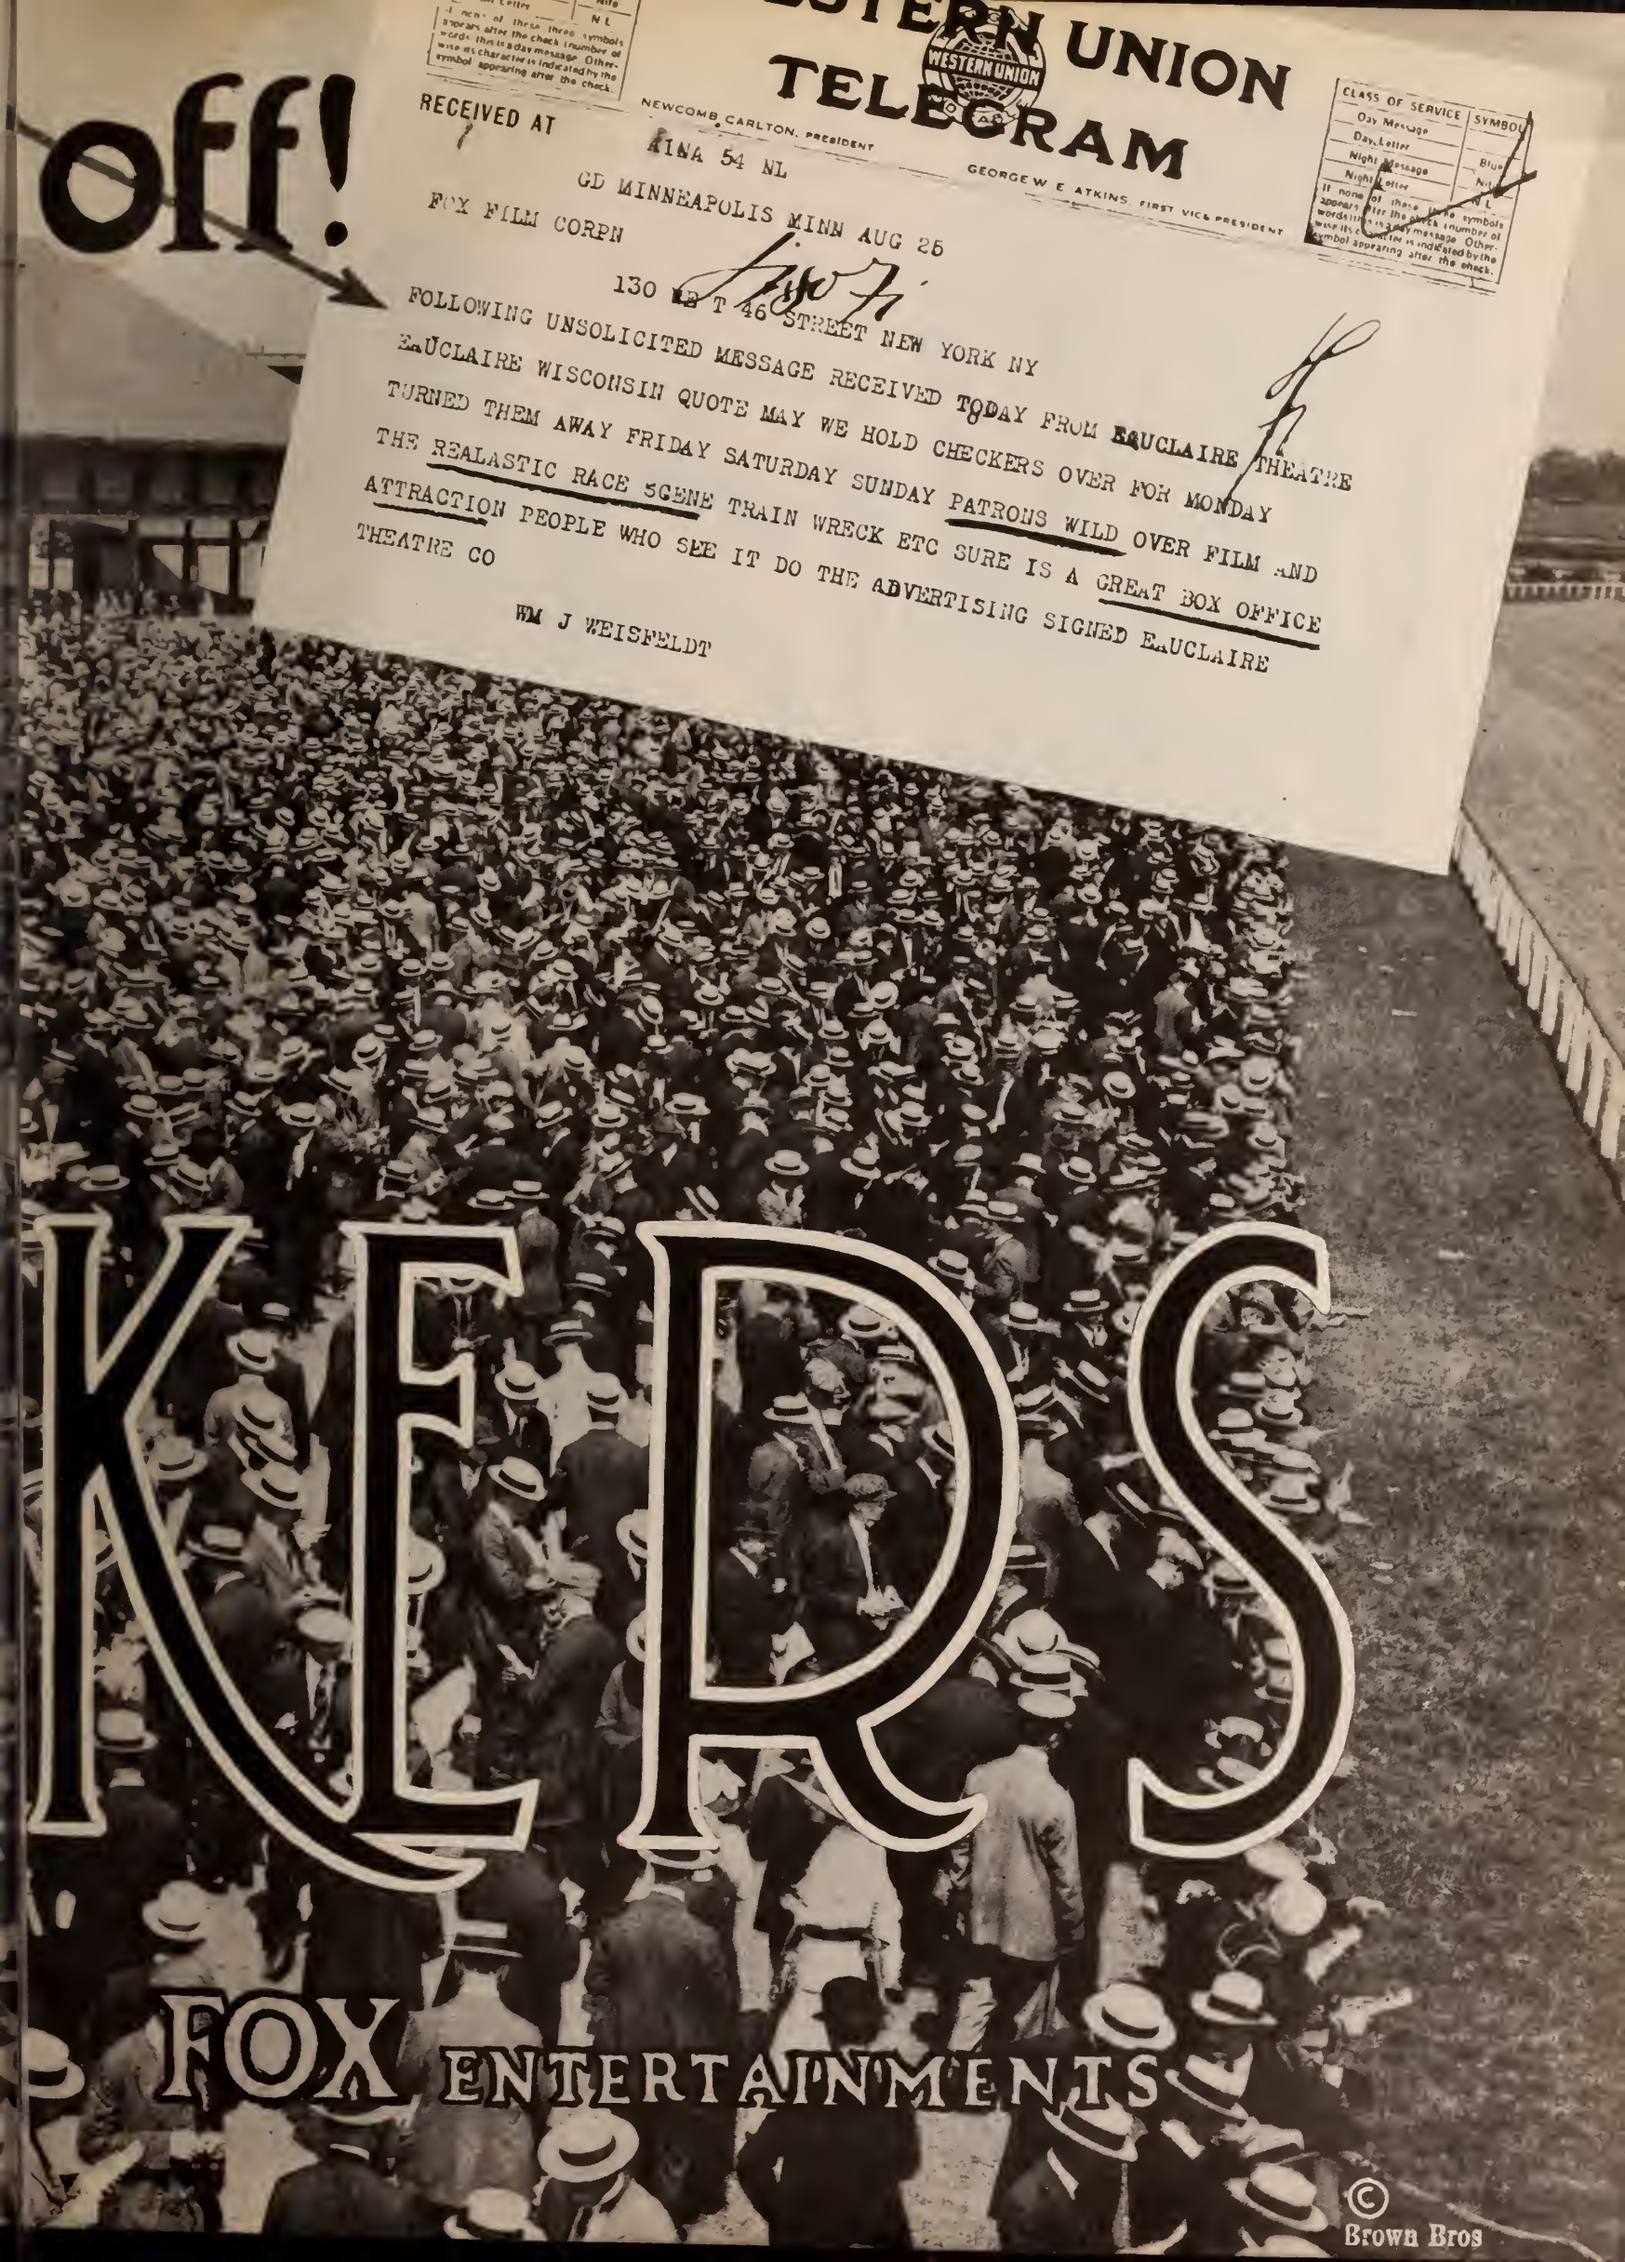
We hereby accept your offer to play D. W. Griffith's "HEARTS OF THE WORLD" and also D. W. Griffith's "MOTHER AND THE LAW" for four hundred days, two hundred days each, at the price quoted us.

We wish to say to you that this is the biggest contract for any picture that we have ever given to anyone, or bigger than any contract we have ever known to be given on any two pictures.

We feel, however, that both these pictures are great productions, and will make us a lot of money.



Very truly yours,
ASCHER BROS.
(Signed) Nathan Ascher.



NA:S

"Hearts of the World" (new version), "The Fall of Babylon" and "The Mother and the Law" carry the prestige of the Griffith Repertory Season of 204 consecutive performances at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, Broadway and 43rd Street, New York City, where they played to capacity business at prices ranging from 50c to $3.

All three productions are released through D. W. GRIFFITH SERVICE, Albert L. Grey, General Manager, 720 Longacre Building, New York City.

NOTE "The Fall of Babylon" will be ready for early bookings immediately following its present tour at $2 prices over the Klaw and Erlanger circuit.

SOME COMMON SENSE AND GOOD JUDGMENT:

"Either fully realize that the playing of 'The World Aflame' is more than an incident in the history of your house, and carefully plan a dignified exploitation campaign, so unusual and complete in its scope that you will have secured the attention of both the great classes which go to define Capital and Labor, or leave it alone. This is a film for no halfway measures. If you take advantage of the opportunity which is presented from almost every angle you will reap a great harvest of financial profit and deliver a message of vast importance to nearly every man, woman and child in your city."

Sept. 2, 1919.

Mr. W. A. Johnston, Editor,
The Moving Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Johnston:-

We have just completed a six months' study of trade paper advertising, and we believe you will be interested in our observations. Since March we have avoided our old plan of scattered and spasmodic advertising, and have followed a policy of "placing all our eggs in one basket, and then watching that basket."

The use of a regular page in the "News" has convinced us of the value of persistent, continuous advertising, and we feel sure that it is never necessary to waste an advertising dollar as long as we abide by a consistent policy. The expansion and broadening of "Educational" activities, which is to be effective in the very near future, will include an increased advertising appropriation, the application of which is to follow lines based on the solid foundation and known valuation of our regular "News" space.

Very sincerely yours,

E W Hammons

Vice-President.

SEPTEMBER 13

"Yes, It Is An Art!"

"The Miracle Man" is one of the brightest and most hopeful signs on the present horizon. The picture has already been fully and skillfully reviewed by many critics.

That is not our purpose here; but rather to treat of the picture with regard to its larger aspects toward this art and industry.

It has these aspects.

When I saw "The Miracle Man" a man sat beside me who may well be called an unbeliever in motion pictures.

He belongs to that class which doesn't go to see picture dramas, which believes that news pictures, scenics and certain novelties are about the only kind of pictures which ring true.

His kind are exasperating enough. Many photodramas are well worth their attendance; but, unfortunately, many are not and an occasional experience with these leads them to arrive at the conclusion that the picture drama is neither here nor forthcoming.

But his class is still a very large one, despite the inroads made upon them by better pictures and the national advertising of them. It is not at all a high-brow class; it simply embraces all those people who like good books and plays because they intelligently portray life. It is a class of people who are stirred broadly by the humanities—but only when life is depicted sincerely to them and as it really is or might be. It is a class the picture must attract if—to put it baldly—a million high class theatre seats are to be kept filled this year.

The unbeliever I refer to was literally swept off his feet by "The Miracle Man"; but the significant thing he said and kept repeating was this:

"Yes, it is an art."

The motion picture, he found, was genuinely an art. It could make him see, feel and think—and in a way altogether new and delightful to him. It was a new window opened upon life. And the vista amazed him.

And there, briefly, is "The Miracle Man"—and the motion picture.

I do not say that this accomplishment has not been gained before in other pictures; it has been, though never more artfully.

What concerns us most is the question: will we make many more pictures as good as "The Miracle Man"?

The answer is: we must. Surely, we can. And we will.

We have all but discarded the past eras and ideals of production. From mere motion the picture has gone into tricks, thrills, extravaganza, spectacles, stars, etc. It has striven to thunder, to show forth its bigness and newness, to appeal through unbridled extravagance, to display the obvious attractions—to be a show!

Today we are aiming to please through intelligence and sincerity. "The Miracle Man" is a high-light of this new era.

And this picture, let us hasten to say, will appeal and in a much greater degree to all that public which revels in thrills, spectacles, stars, extravagance, famous personages and the other high spots of picture production.

Let us analyze, briefly.

We know Mr. Tucker and his work well enough, we believe, to make some statements, without an interview.

He believes in taking time to make pictures—all the time necessary to conscientious, creative effort.

And he not only demands time, but also the tools to work with.

First he insists upon the right story material—right for pictures. He realizes that the art of expression through pictures is wholly an art of itself, unique and independent. So he doesn't go blindly and recklessly after big plays and best sellers and famous names and rely altogether upon these assets. He wants picture material.

That is one reason why "The Miracle Man" is far better than the book, and far better than the play of the same name. It leans on neither; it out-distances both. The picture is supreme.

He also believes in organization—that a thorough, rounded organization is positively essential to the turning out of a thorough, rounded picture—like "The Miracle Man."

And Mr. Tucker won't proceed without this groundwork—of time, material and organization. Those who supplied these facilities in "The Miracle Man" are also to be praised and congratulated.

This same groundwork is possible throughout the picture making industry. It is essential to the true expression of the motion picture because it is essential to intelligent and sincere production. And it is just this—intelligence and sincerity—that the public today demands in the photodrama.

"The Miracle Man" gives inspiration and promise. The author who sees it should go humbly forth anxious to create for a new art; the director, the man of ability and progress, will know that such work lies within the compass of his own powers and more and more he will demand the time and tools wherewith to reach this end.

Every good picture helps the whole industry. "The Miracle Man" is a clear light along the right way.

Service to the Producer

WITH this issue Motion Picture News offers a new service to the producer of motion pictures. In a department which has been called "The Fiction Mart" we shall present to the production executives a weekly review of the latest fiction adaptable to screen use.

The need of this new service has been made evident to us by many producers during the past few months. Novels, old and new, are being scanned eagerly in search of photoplay material. On a few subjects which have happened to catch the eyes of more than one editor prices have mounted almost beyond reason. While other novels, of equal merit, are slipping into the limbo of forgetfulness without a bid.

Producers—and scenario editors and directors as individuals—have been handicapped because they could not maintain a complete view of the fiction field without feeling that in proportion to the results secured much of the time and money was wasted.

"The Fiction Mart" is offered as a solution of this problem. In addition to the publication each week of synopses on all novels, it aims to render a personal service to producers that will be limited only by the demands made upon it.

Let us hear from you and let us help you—with the assurance that the service you receive is that of men who "know the ropes" of the publishing game.

The first appearance of "The Fiction Mart" is made on Page 2218.

Why Not South America?

EVIDENTLY we are to see, before the end of this year, American producing companies at work in several foreign fields—in some instances, upon a considerable scale.

A letter, just received from our correspondent at Rio Janeiro states: "The high duties and carrier charges on imported film, and the recent announcement that a large Buenos Ayres firm intends to produce and promote foreign films would seem to suggest to American producers the advisability of sending their producing companies here to make pictures."

The picture houses, too, he states are badly in need of American enterprise and management. They are too small, poorly run, and have no idea whatever of how and why they should advertise.

Joining the "H. C. L." Forces

NEW YORK'S picture palaces, the Rialto and Rivoli, a announcing to their patrons an increase in admission pric in the near future. Rochester theatres have taken concert action towards increasing admission revenue. The Loew theatı are planning increases.

It's coming, all over the country. One by one we will hear other cities joining the procession. With every other factor in l mounting in cost the motion picture seems destined to join the Hi Cost of Living procession.

Exhibitors in many sections will aver that they cannot mainta their patronage if they boost prices. With rentals steadily increa ing they will be forced to fateful decisions.

In many cases, especially in smaller communities, there is nec sity for trepidation about increased admissions. Exhibitors in su positions will declare that even so small an increase as the war t has had its effect on patronage.

But on the whole the exhibitor must face squarely the probl of increasing his admission prices. He can choose between mc erate rental entertainment and the bigger "specials" that the co ing year will bring. But if his choice is the latter, and if his patrc demand the best, the piper must be paid.

Harold Franklin, in a recent issue of the News, told of t methods he followed in raising his prices, working on the princip "Let the matinees alone so that the women and children will ı be affected, and increase the evening prices on loges and su sections of the house as are patronized by those who can afford pay more."

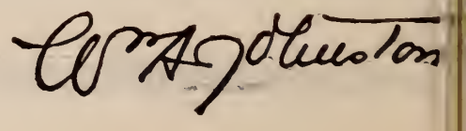
The village theatre and neighborhood city house cannot foll this advice literally but must work out its own adaptation. Lil wise must the manner of approaching the public with the announ ment of an increase be carefully considered. Motion Pictu News is at work on plans to assist exhibitors in handling t problem.

The Exhibitor's Place in the Sun

AMONG the several large changes in the general industry t year let us not overlook the decided advance made in exhibiting business.

In every large city today several theatres devoted to pictu completely dominate the amusement situation, in size, luxury a investment.

But everywhere, large towns and small, the picture house inve ment is sizable and settled. The fly-by-night, repainted front, st show days are all but gone. The exhibitor has become a lead business man in the community.



As such he feels the responsibility of the home-town man, citizen. He selects pictures for the good of the community of wh he feels himself a prominent and permanent part. He wants to a does make his theatre the modern day community centre.

There is need therefore for him to preserve his individuality in his own best interest and that of the entire industry.

A New Convert to Longer Runs

IT will be interesting to watch the experience of the Ri theatre when that playhouse presents "The Miracle Ma for an indefinite run. New York's big trio, Strand, Ria and Rivoli, have stood out against the longer run so long that lessons developed will be worth study.

The natural conclusion, of course, is that other longer runs planned when pictures present themselves that offer possibilit Perhaps, after all, New York will take its rightful place and not the most lagging big city of the country in the matter of long ru

HIST! Mystery! A rumor is about to be transfixed and transformed into a eal FACT. Ye Gods! Is it possible?

Yes, it's coming. Next week. Full details nd confirmation on one of the dog-gone umors that has been kicking around the ame for these many days.

Somebody whispered in our ear only this horning that within the next seven days we would have all the details on "that big nerger story." Then someone else came long and whispered that within the same ength of time we would be able to tell an nxious army of readers the big news that he Educational Film Corporation has been preparing for many weeks.

Then still another person—it must have been Old Dame Rumor herself suffering rom a stroke of conscience—came along and old us to put two and two together.

And we were almost tempted to do it. Only for the fact that we do not deal in umors we might have given you the total of our calculations.

So as it is we will merely warn you to look for a story in next week's NEWS that contains the phrase "Educational Corporation" n it. And we will hint that maybe the same story will have that word "merger" in its lines of type. Then we will go on to add that you will probably read next week of the entry into the picture game of one of the biggest outside corporations that we can think of. A veritable mountain of a bankroll.

And, just think, all of this will be in the same story. Keep your eyes open. We are pretty sure it will break in the next issue.

Regardless of the coming news, Educational has at all times been a corporation well worth watching. For steady, consistent, efficient progress no other outfit in the game can surpass this organization. Brother Hammons saw a goal some few years ago that no one else would agree was worth a tinker's cuss. And he never wavered. He kept right on the main track—after the same goal. And if he arrives home following a brass band and accompanied by loud applause it won't be one whit more than he deserves. We are here to apply for the job of cheer leader.

THERE'S a film organization which in the past few weeks has sent out practically no publicity matter for trade paper consumption. Yes, on some weeks not a line. As we asked above—is it possible?

In this case it is possible and it has happened. So unusual was the occurrence that one trade paper editor got real worried over the matter. We don't blame him.

The aforementioned trade paper editor called up the publicity department of this organization.

"What's the matter with your publicity?" he asked. "Are you sore at us for something? Or did the publicity come into the office without me seeing it?"

"You didn't get any," said the publicity man. "We haven't had any important news to send you this week and our time is too valuable to spend writing matter that is unimportant. That's all."

The Fiction Mart
appears for the first time in this issue of Motion Picture News.
You'll find it on page 2218.
It's a brand new service for our readers, and should prove a valuable one.
Give it the Once Over.

Gosh, if some others could only see the light. Then we wouldn't get letters from our subscribers such as the one last week from Douglas Branch, of Houston, Texas, which read, "If you would only clamp the lid on all that mush and those superlatives."

Branch doesn't read the bunk. There are many others who don't. But there are "those" who think they do.

Oh, yes, by the way. The identity of the picture corporation we mentioned above. The story's too good to let its light shine under a bushel basket. So here's confessing that it is First National.

An exhibitor-controlled organization.

Bill Rudolph and Personalities chased each other all over the lot at Saratoga last week, and then made the chase hotter by extending it to Lake George, with a later puzzling twist in a jaunt to Pittsfield. And when Personalities got back to New York he learned that he had missed the chance to get in on one of the big Saratoga killings. Oh, rats! What more could a trade paper editor expect? It takes these magnuts and their representatives to find the real money.

A LITTLE stranger walked into our office. He looked tired and care-worn. We hastened to place a chair for him. He tottered to it and slunk dejectedly down.

"Tell us your story," we encouraged.

"I am the 'Tie-up' he said. "I am the latest craze in the picture business. I am the weapon that puts over the knock-out special and saves the mediocre fillum. I am the hardest worked gink in the picture business. I am going on strike.

"I am the cigarette that is named after the leading man, with resulting publicity in seventeen million cigar stores, forty-eight thousand reformed saloons, and two caves in the Himalayas. I am the song that is named after the pictures, and if I am rotten enough as a song people rush to the picture theatres to find out what I am all about. I am the magazine article that boosts the picture in five million homes and on every newsstand in America and six in Hindustan. Sometimes I wonder how the picture theatres ever accommodate the panting millions that I send to their doors. I, the poor Tie-up, must be cussed by the police for the riots I cause and upbraided by exhibitors for ruining their carpets with the hurried tread of patrons.

"But, as I said, I am going on strike. I am over-worked. I am used to death. I get no rest. And only this morning the crowning insult was heaped upon me.

"A picture producer wants me to impersonate a case of cheese. He has prepared his announcements. 'Harold Hairoil Cheese will be on sale in six million grocery stores and available at the one free lunch counter left in America,' they read. 'Harold Hairoil Cheese will result in nation-wide publicity for that favorite star of millions. The effervescent, effulgent Harold Hairoil Cheese will be a daily reminder in every home and at every fireside of that peerless delineator of manly roles, Harold Hairoil. The sweet scent of Harold Hairoil Cheese will drive countless millions daily to the picture theatres—or worse.

"It's too much. I am going on strike. I, the Tie-up, can't stand it. I am through."

During the intermission we will announce that Eddie Eckles, general manager of Capitol Film, is in town. Wearing a broad smile. Capitol is coming along at great speed. Extending distribution, making its own pictures, and finding a ready market for good short dramas. And when the boys in New York first heard what this Indianapolis bunch was planning a year ago they were ready to send out for flowers.

OUR friend, Mr. Briggs, who broke into last week's NEWS with a diatribe on press sheets in general and everything in particular stepped into something. He is going to hear from quite a few of the New York boys in next week's issue.

Mr. Briggs made one big mistake. He spoke up at a moment when all the press departments were expending many weary hours and numerous of the boss's dollars in a sincere attempt to produce really helpful press sheets. A year ago this might not have been the case. But the producers are today working hard and working with men who should be just as capable as Bre'er Briggs to say what constitutes good material from an editor's standpoint.

And men of that calibre are ready to speak up in their own defense. Likewise, they are able to make out pretty good cases. Next week we will present their views.

Then we will probably have a few more letters from the field. The result should be a healthy argument. And we do love argument.

So let the adjectives shoot, gentlemen. Fire when ready, Gridley. An editor can always duck. Let the others take care of themselves.

What's What in Advertising Cut

By Marjorie A. Mahurin

Advertising Manager, Orpheum Theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind.

AFTER reading Mr. C. E. Holah's letter in the August 9th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, I cannot resist adding a bit of fuel to the flame he has started, and that with such honest cause.

Everything he says concerning the average press sheet is very true, especially as to the reception any newspaper man would give some of the "pretty stories" published as "money-makers," "crowd-pullers," etc., for the exhibitor. Mr. Holah also says, "Accentuate the illustrations," and therein he has my hearty support, but of what earthly good are illustrations unless we can show them to the public? To do this we must have adequate mats and cuts, which we do not have at the present time.

I contend that any producer who considers a picture worth selling to an exhibitor, is losing money if he does not provide the exhibitor with proper exploitation material to sell the picture in turn to the public. For if that exhibitor loses money on the picture, or even shows to only a fair audience, the producer will have to spend more time and effort to sell him his next picture.

There are three types of mats that I have grown positively to hate, as they permit no originality on the part of the advertiser. The first are the stereotyped, one and two columns, three to four inch half-tones with the heads and elbows of the stars sliced off and the figures generally extending only to the knees. In such cases the mats must always be placed in a display so they fit in just that sliced-off condition.

The second type are the too-smooth half-tones that, when printed, are little better than gray blotches. These are generally of the sliced-off variety also and are very unsightly.

The third is the kind that might have been a good mat, but one that has been cut off and already worked up into a type ad, with the lettering, the star's name, the title of the picture and some trite remark all furnished. All the exhibitor must do is supply the name of his theatre and send to the newspaper. Which might have satisfied an exhibitor five years ago, but if he's awake today, he throws it in the waste paper basket.

I need only refer to your Exhibitors' Service Bureau to prove that the advertising efforts of the wide awake theatres of today are far in advance of the same efforts on the part of the publicity departments of the producers, as proven by the publicity material furnished by them. Those theatres who employ their own artists have an opportunity to overcome the inefficiencies of the ordinary press matter, but for us who rely on the mats furnished with the pictures for our display work, we find ourselves constantly handicapped. We are unable to exploit our pictures as they should be exploited, much less advertise them with any degree of originality.

Take this instance: Last Sunday we opened with a four days' showing of William Farnum in "The Lone Star Ranger." We wanted to make a big display on Sunday, using about 60 inches. We had five mats on that picture, two one-column, three-inch mats of the sliced-off variety, half tones too smooth to print well, and three two-column, four-inch line mats, two of them duplicates and none of them resembling the star.

With that material we had to get up displays and readers for the papers Saturday evening, Sunday morning, and for three succeeding days. However, on the front pa of the press book was a stunning figure William Farnum, full length, about o column, 7 inches, with none of his anato cornered off. It would have gone fine in big display. It looked great on the pre book, but we were the only ones to get a advantage from that illustration. The publ never saw it.

I quote from the MOTION PICTURE NEW "Just knowing a picture is good won't brin a long waiting line at your box office if yo keep the information to yourself."

Well, here we are, positively extravaga in our desire to tell the public about ou pictures, but how are we to do it, and d it effectively?

Of course it is necessary to have sma cuts. Not all ads are big. But if they ar small, let us have them at least whole an printable. If a head, give the star his ear and the top of his hair. If there is any slic ing to do let the exhibitor do it. For group and figures, let us have whole figures, no men and women cut off at the knees. Con sider that an exhibitor may want to advertis a picture big and furnish him with the mean to do it. He will sell his picture to a bigge audience and snap up your next release.

I have read, somewhere in the MOTIO PICTURE NEWS, in an account of one of th many producers' conventions, of a discussio which was started concerning bigger an better publicity service bureaus for the exhib itors, urging it as an ultimate money-makin proposition for the producers. Pray heave that discussion may soon become an actuality It is money in your pockets, producers, i it does.

A Word Advanced for the "Road Men"

By J. R. Grainger

New York Representative, Marshall Neilan Productions

I BELIEVE that C. E. Holah has not covered the entire scope in his article on "So Called Press Agents," when he suggests that the "dope writers" take a trip into the country and find out just what the exhibitor wants.

I would respectfully suggest that a few "officials" who pass on contracts and sales also take a trip through the country to find out from actual observations and experience just what conditions are away from Broadway.

It is common knowledge among exhibitors that a great many of the so-called "heads" of various departments in the various "home-offices" have never been further west than the Hudson River, yet, these gentlemen, sitting in their offices, attempt to arrive at what is a proper price for this and that exhibitor to pay for their respective films, and these same "officials" are the first to criticise their sales force. I, personally, know an official of one big distributing concern who has never been out of New York City, yet, this man issues instructions on what exhibitors are to pay for this and that product, while at the same time, his actual knowledge of conditions in San Francisco, Seattle and other towns too numerous to mention, is gained simply by the fact that the towns are listed on the map; true, he receives reports from the exchanges on the local conditions, but I do not believe any "official" is competent to pass on matters of this importance unless his knowledge is gained by personal observation.

If I may be allowed to criticise I believe the trade papers in general waste entirely too much space extolling the virtues of this and that "official" with nonsensical stories and photographs. This does not interest the exhibitor, as no exhibitor is interested or concerned in the activities of this and that man. What the exhibitor is interested in is the PRODUCER, STAR, STORY, DIRECTOR and PRODUCTION, and nothing else—so why annoy him with a lot of foolish reading matter.

I am moved to write on this matter after reading Mr. Holah's letter and want to congratulate him on being the first person in the industry to call "a spade a spade" by going after what he calls the "bright boys.'

In one of the daily papers the past week in the column devoted to motion pictures, a story appeared five times concerning what a certain official was doing and not one word in the whole "mess" meant anything except that this "official" loves to see himself "three sheeted."

The one man in the motion picture industry, who receives the smallest amount of praise and generally the smallest salary for his work, is the salesman, yet he is the greatest cog in the wheel. The writer, who has spent the past twelve years in the motion picture industry, and who has traveled from coast to coast and believes he has a wide acquaintance with exhibitors throughout the country, would love to see some of the so-called "officials" trying to sell some of the products they set prices on for their sales-force to obtain.

In closing I want to say, "more power to Mr. Holah; giveum hell!"

Helping the Theatre "Put It Over"

Experiences in Springfield, Illinois, Are Typical of the Methods Followed Wherever Newspapers Have Successfully Handled the Motion Picture Advertising Problem

By W. F. Dagon
Motion Picture Editor, Illinois State Journal, Springfield, Ill.

HAVING had to do with theatres in general for many years, and with motion picture theatres for several, I have arrived at the conclusion that, say what you will, the publicity that is given a picture either makes or breaks it. If it's a good picture and it falls down, someone's to blame. You can put your finger on the fellow when you find the publicity man. I believe that applies always,—with two exceptions,—an epidemic or extremely bad weather.

In the five years that I have handled motion picture advertising on The Illinois State Journal, I have seen it grow from an odd ad now and then until today it brings in a revenue of about $12,000 yearly. And I know that the theatres today are making more money than in the olden days when admissions were low and the advertising was less.

The purpose of this article is to show how an advertising man can help exhibitors make money—put them across to success—and also make money for the paper on which he is employed.

The first thing the advertising man needs is a subscription to Motion Picture News. He needs that worst or most of all. Then he must devote sufficient time to digest the magazine carefully, reading all the ads and news items, exploitation helps, reviews and comment. If he does this faithfully, he will soon find himself chock full of new ideas all the time. Then if he will follow out the ideas that I have written, I believe that he will be able to get lots of business for his paper, and help the exhibitors so that the welcome sign is always out at every place he calls.

CALLING on all the motion picture theatres here every day, I know of course what pictures they are playing, and what they are going to play. So it's up to me to help them put over with profit.

I use an ordinary letter file for keeping the material I expect to use at some future date. Under the proper letter is filed all the good ideas and advertisements I can find for the different theatres on coming attractions. In this way, any emergency can be met. If the press matter doesn't arrive on time, what's the difference? I've enough information stored away to last out the picture's engagement. From our exchanges I cull the best ads from coast to coast and from the gulf to Canada. My cut morgue is filled with pictures and mats of the film stars. From the advance news items I know who is starring in a certain picture, who the author is, the producer, the cast and what the story's about. And a whole lot of other things.

In looking over the various newspapers I sometime run across some beautiful cuts, the finest kind of engravings. Motion picture editors in different cities can tell you of having had requests for mats of them. Seldom have I been disappointed. In this way I am able to give an exhibitor a crackerjack cut at no expense to him, thereby letting him spend a larger amount for advertising. I am always ready to send any mat I have on hand to anyone asking for it.

If a theatre is laying plans for something big, I also get ready. The manager tells me what he expects to spend in the way of advertising. Sometimes we differ on the amount. If it's too low, I suggest that he raise the admission a little and spend the extra receipts in publicity. This is a good plan. Then again a man may be willing to spend more to boost a picture than it is worth. You can usually get a line on such pictures from the reviews. My advice then is to go light, and wait for something worth while. You cannot make the public like a picture that "isn't there" because you have done heavy advertising and increased the admission. The chances are the patrons will "holler their heads off if you do."

WORKING with the exhibitor, every angle of the picture is gone over. Springfield does not want war pictures, costume pictures, sea pictures, historical pictures, bibical pictures, feud pictures, foreign pictures or fairy pictures. When they come they have to be "disguised" in the advertising. The public may like them after it has seen them, but if it knew beforehand what it was going to see, it wouldn't come at all. So any mention or reference to the above subjects is eliminated. This may cause some producers or directors to have a fit. But it's saving money for Bill Watts, Been Rovin, Harry Loper and the other Springfield managers.

One of the hardest jobs a theatre here ever had was to get women to come to see W. S. Hart. So for a long time pictures of Hart were run with the big boy in a dress suit and his hair oiled. To have shown him in chaps and sombrero would have been fatal. Of course it's different now but it only goes to show diplomacy is the thing at times.

If a lady star is going to wear some new and beautiful clothes, lay it on thick in the advertising. That gets the women every time. It has the same effect on them that the Mack Sennett girls' pictures out in front does with the poor male element. Marriage, divorce, the eternal triangle, the other woman, and stuff like that, is sure to draw both men and women. They can't keep away from it.

Keeping posted on what the big exhibitors over the country are doing, how the pictures drew, the methods used to put them over, what the admission was, and a general line of information is extremely useful to the motion picture man and Motion Picture News is the tool for this. Only last week I came across an idea that helped one of our exhibitors. For some time a certain star had lost him money at every engagement. She was a poor draw. But it happened that in this particular picture her leading man was a great favorite locally. So he was featured in the billing and advertising, and the picture went over nicely. Yes, the exhibitor was pleased.

A great deal of extra space can be secured from the theatres by making attractive layouts and submitting them, even if they have to be copied from a magazine (Motion Picture News) or some newspaper. There's something about an ad with a man's name in it that appeals to him, and a sample ad with his theatre's signature is hard to resist. More often than not he will say, "run it."

With the second run theatres the motion picture man can be of great assistance. Having seen all the first run films and knowing what they have done in the way of business, he can advise the booking or rejecting of a picture. Of course, it is not to be supposed that "The Blue Bird" will do as well in a labor class theatre as it did on the Drive. The chances are against it. Know your people and you can't go wrong.

Any time I am in another city, I watch what is showing there, and come back with information that is valuable to the exhibitor expecting to play a certain production.

Looking back over the last five years, I find that I used to get quite a thrill when one of the motion picture theatres ordered a three or four inch ad. It was an occasion. Yesterday one of the leading theatres volunteered the news that it expected to spend six hundred dollars in newspaper space on a coming production. My pulse never quickened.

If the motion picture man will co-operate with his exhibitors—not fight them—help them put the shows over, both he and the exhibitors will be happy. Of course they will get the money, but think of the glory that will be his!

SCENARIO EDITORS AND DIRECTORS

MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week offers a new service intended primarily for your aid. It is a department called "The Fiction Mart" and will be found on Page 2218.

Experienced publishing experts are conducting this department. Daily they are reading all the latest novels, many of them in advance of regular publication. Brief synopses of the stories are then prepared and will appear in "The Fiction Mart" each week.

The department is also ready to provide any personal service that may be desired. Should further details regarding any of the stories be wanted they will be supplied on request. "The Fiction Mart" will also conduct for you preliminary investigations regarding any of the stories, ascertaining the owner of the screen rights, the availability, etc.

Having a thorough knowledge of the publishing business the experts in charge of "The Fiction Mart" are in a position to save you many wasted steps and no end of time.

And, of course, like all Motion Picture News SERVICE the aid rendered by "The Fiction Mart" is ABSOLUTELY WITHOUT CHARGE.

Remember, this new department is on Page 2218.

Meet Some More of the Real Ones!

Exhibitors Who Help Keep the Industry In Its High Place

N. K. HERZOG, manager of the Silver Palace theatre, San Francisco, is an "old-timer," as years are measured in the picture business, having opened the first picture house on Market street, in the California city, ten years ago. He has managed at various times four different houses.

It is also Mr. Herzog's boast that he was the first secretary and president of the Motion Picture League in San Francisco, and that he has been on several motion picture leagues for the good of the public and the exhibitors.

Confidence in the eventual bigness of the picture art has always been held by Mr. Herzog, as early as eight years ago he having written an article for newspapers on the future of the industry.

L. A. CASTLE, of the Lyceum theatre, Wyoming, Illinois, has been six years an exhibitor. Like other brother exhibitors who have had a place on this page, he is a firm believer that the play, rather than the star, is the thing.

Of late he has had to buck the opposition of a continual string of tent shows in his territory, but is confident that by keeping to his program of showing only first class pictures—"Micky," "Eyes of the World" and such, he will come out on top. Mr. Castle took charge of the Lyceum in April last, and at the outset brought the house up to a paying proposition.

A. J. MOELLER presides over the destinies of the Theatre De Luxe in the automobile city—Detroit. The house has a seating capacity of 1,800, and beginning September 21 Mr. Moeller is establishing the policy of running only two attractions weekly, each presented with special musical score.

The Theatre De Luxe is located between two of Detroit's most exclusive residential sections, and caters to the better class of patronage. Competition is keen, as five other theatres, none having a smaller seating capacity than 1,000, are located in the same center, together with ten theatres of smaller capacity. Business, however, continues prosperous, according to Mr. Moeller, who has been an exhibitor since 1909.

"The trade paper to me is the NEWS," he is kind enough to state.

J. P. COTTER, who makes his headquarters at Baker, Oregon, has just sold the Baker, Empire, Grand and Orpheum theatres to the Baker Amusement Enterprises.

Of late Mr. Cotter has occupied the unique position of owning and running every house in the town of Baker. He came there in 1915, buying a half interest in the Grand and Orpheum, built them up and later took over the Empire and Baker theatres. The four houses had a combined capacity of 2,400.

DAVID MURDOCH runs the Needham theatre, four miles from Boston, Mass., to a residential population of 5,000. The people of Needham are said to be exceedingly proud of their theatre, it bringing the pictures in reality to their homes for the first time.

The highest class features are run, one performance every evening being given, with matinees on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Music is a feature of the daily program.

Mr. Murdoch declares he books his house from the Reviews in the NEWS, and finds "That I get more and better for my money from the NEWS than from any other paper in the business."

In addition to other duties, Mr. Murdoch is president of Needham's Board of Trade.

TO date we can recollect hearing from no exhibitor whose picture career dates continuously back to 1903, as does that of Eller Metzger, of the Rialto theatres, Des Moines.

With his partner Mr. Metzger is now building the Strand theatre at Creston, Iowa, a 990-seat combination house which will be a model in up-to-dateness. Many stunts which he has put over at the Rialto are credited with having been suggested to him by the NEWS.

A. D. STOTTE started in a small town as an exhibitor in 1916, and is now running the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa. Vinton and Cedar Rapids, Iowa and Omaha, Nebraska, have at various times been the scene of his activities.

The Des Moines is a new house, having been opened in July of this year. Five shows daily are run, presenting a program of short subjects, musical overtures and a feature. A large orchestra is used, and rehearsals called on each picture, Mr. Stotte being a great believer in presenting a real musical accompaniment. As a trade paper reader, this manager frankly states he "always opens the NEWS first," and is guided by it.

Business is flourishing in his section, Mr. Stotte reports.

HERE is George B. Flint, lessee and manager of the Virginia theatre Boone, Iowa, which plays high class theatrical attractions and first run pictures, booking exclusively in the open market.

Mr. Flint as an actor played Boone in 1918 and found the best theatre town was closed and in run-down condition. That was the Virginia, he says and without much ado he took hold and has now brought the theatre in the well paying class, despite that the house is located a block and a half from the main street. Advertising has turned the trick.

The open market is the only reliable booking source, according to Mr. Flint and the trade weeklies the salvation of the small town exhibitor.

Pertinence and Poetry Pertly Put and Partly Pun

The cry for "honest-to-goodness" newspaper men to enter the industry is bearing fruit. it would seem, for each week we find one or two live members of the Fourth Estate have entered the game. So we were naturally pleased to run against "Mike" Clofine, who once valiantly held down the "slot" on the New York American copy desk, and learn he is a "filmer," up with International.

THE LAUREL PATH

Rocky and hard lies the winding road,
And the tenure of fame is passing brief,
Yet each sets forth 'neath ambition's goad
For Stardom's Goal and the laurel wreath.

The best that we have is given and milled,
The alloy is tested—the bulk thrown away,
Appeal cannot stand, for the judge has willed,
And Public Opinion yields not in its sway.

The lure of the fight beckons and calls,
Adulation and praise to the winner is sweet,
Few there are who give heed to Oblivion's pall,
Closest when fame is at blood red heat.

The curtain falls and the effort is spent,
Yet the moment seems worth while.
No need to walk with head that is bent,
For you wrested from Fortune a smile.

REAL CONSIDERATION

Fearing it would sound like "hokum," the Selznick publicity department has issued a story explaining that it would not send out word of the fact that jewels worn by Lucille Stewart in a picture were worth $60,000, and were constantly guarded by a detective from the store which lent them out.

FREE TIP TO PROFITEERS

The long suffering public on this side of the watery waste, does escape a few grafts that our European brothers have expertly devised. For example, after paying the lowest admission price, approximately sixty cents, for admission to a cinema house in Paris, one is taken in hand by an usher. Said minion guides innocent lamb safely through the aisles, and finally deposit him in a seat without having disturbed the other three patrons of the house. After which an electric flashlight is sternly held full upon the victim until he dives into his pocket for a generous gratuity. And if said lamb needs further prodding, the request in pseudo-English, "Teep?" is uttered in resounding tone.

Taking liberties with a famous expression, many producers are now murmuring—

GEORGE D. GOULD.

The World in a Ward

How Broadway and Oshkosh Were Brought to the Pain-Wracked Doughboys

"BROADWAY!" breathlessly echoed throughout the hospital ward! Suddenly all was still, still with the intense quiet of concentrated attention. Broadway with its meteoric signs, its jostling crowds, its swerving traffic passed on the screen.

To the lad from New York the scene was home. To the man from the West it was the metropolis of his dreams. Broadway there in their own ward! The unavoidable monotony of convalescent days was forgotten and with it the pain and the harassing thoughts of the future. The cinema was the genii that brought forgetfulness.

And these movie shows did not happen just once in a fortnight or a month, they happened often. Always they were eagerly welcomed by the boys, many of whom had lain in this ward for months. They were from many different states. But someday, sometime, like the magic carpet of the fairy prince, the films transported them home, or to the land of their longing, whether it was the expansive prairies of Texas, the thronged streets of eastern cities or the mountainous regions of the West.

The showing of these movies in the hospitals was first begun by the Red Cross overseas. At least five, and as many as fourteen, performances were given at every hospital each week. The increase in the number of film feet shown is a proof of their popularity with the boys. In September, 1917, 200,000 feet were shown; in July, 1918, there were 859,490 feet film shown and in December, 1918, the figures mounted to nearly three million feet.

Not only have the movies whiled away many hours that would otherwise have been monotonous, thus helping to keep up the morale of the men, but they have hastened recovery by turning the thought into brighter channels and stimulating the desire to live.

A case of this type was in the hospital at Vichy. The lad was suffering from shell-shock. He never spoke. All efforts to arouse him from his apathy were of no avail, and the doctors feared he might never recover. One evening a "Chaplin" film was shown. Roars of laughter greeted the ludicrous antics of the comedian. Suddenly the Silent Doughboy joined in the merriment. He laughed long and heartily during the showing of the film and never relapsed into his abnormal state again.

The best and latest picture plays are secured for distribution among the hospitals and too much credit cannot be given to the forethought displayed by the American Red Cross in providing these health stimulating movies.

Operator Strike Talk Simmers Down

Unrest Reported in Several Sections Is Not General; One New York Theatre Closed; Indianapolis Operators Walk Out

A GENERAL simmering down of strike talk in sections where it had been most rabid on the part of Motion Picture Operators was noticeable toward the close of the week. Minor troubles and petty strikes of other than operators were inclined to be minimized by leaders of the industry, and are not laid to the door of the Actors' Equity Association furore.

Scattered reports of troubles in outlying sections of the country were received, probably the most serious being in Indianapolis, where a strike was called on August 29 by the local union of operators. In this instance the operators are said to have walked out in violation of their contracts. A dozen are reported to have been arrested on charges of vagrancy.

In New York City one theatre, the Bronx Opera House, was closed by a walkout of operators.

No Tension Exists

This move, however, was in line with the agreement reached by C. C. Shay, heading the Stage Hands' Union, which embraces picture operators, with leaders of the industry, that theatres closed by the legitimate actors were not to be opened with pictures unless a lease on the house had been entered prior to the actors' strike. The movement did not spread, nor has further trouble resulted.

The attendants, doormen and ticket sellers in a hundred theatres in New York and Brooklyn held a meeting early in the week, and resolved to strike unless their demands for increases in wages, and rearrangement of working hours, were met. No stir was made in the industry by this move, which is considered merely a growth of the general unrest, and not connected with the major trouble. It was pointed out that even if a general strike of such employes came, the theatres would not be seriously affected, at least so seriously as to cause a shutdown.

The strike in Indianapolis resulted as a demand of the operators for minimum wage of one dollar per hour. Heretofore the highest pay has been fifty-two cents per hour. A few theatres granted the increase, but the exhibitors as a whole were firm in their declaration that the demand was exorbitant, and would not be met. The strikers picketed down town before the affected theatres. one of which was Frank Rembusch's. None of the houses closed, however, managers and members of their family entering the booths in place of the strikers. The threat is made that stage hands and musicians will be called out on a sympathetic strike, but these latter have agreed to give the theatres two weeks' notice before walking out. The Indiana State Federation of Labor, in convention, indorsed the strike. In only one instance was violence reported.

Unrest in Providence, R. I., which threatened to result in walkout of the picture operators was settled late in the week after a meeting between operators and theatre managers. By the agreement reached the operators will receive $38 weekly for a six-hour day, time and a half for overtime, and double time for Sunday. For a week of thirty-six hours in houses where special prices are charged, the wage is $55 weekly. This applies to machine-driven machines. Hand operators will receive a ten per cent increase.

Predictions that the Actors' Equity and the Producing Managers will get together before a new week is entered on is taken as indication that no widespread trouble may be anticipated by exhibitors, and that any questions that arise will be amicably settled.

A meeting of several hundred "extras" in New York resulted in the forming of a permanent association, and the passage of resolutions demanding higher pay, and the doing away with the so-called "agencies" which exact a percentage for placing the players.

COPY FROM WEST ARRIVES DESPITE RAIL STRIKE

THROUGH the initiative of J. C. Jessen, Pacific Coast representative of the NEWS, and the courtesy of the Eldorado Stage Company, plying between Los Angeles and San Francisco, the news matter from the Coast arrived in time for this issue despite the tie up which at the time of sending, existed on railroads of the Coast.

Mr. Jessen's material was taken from Los Angeles to San Francisco by stage, without charge, a distance of 490 miles and a run of seventeen hours, and there was placed aboard a train for the East.

Build Fine Theatre in Small Town

Strand Opens in Brooklyn

Thirty-five Hundred Persons Witness Premiere of Handsome New Theatre

ON Friday night, August 29, the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Company threw open the doors of its recently completed Strand theatre, Brooklyn. This premiere was exclusively for invited guests and every one of the thirty-five hundred seats were occupied by people affiliated directly or indirectly with the motion picture industry.

It was a gala occasion and the lobby was literally flooded with floral gifts from many admirers who desired to congratulate the company upon the successful completion of its huge enterprise. As accustomed as the select audience was to beautiful lobbies and auditoriums, an involuntary gasp betrayed that all were fairly carried away by the artistic lobby and decorations.

And the stage settings came in for their share of spontaneous applause. The Mitchell H. Mark Realty Company is also owner of The Strand in Manhattan.

The new Strand in Brooklyn is centrally located down town at the corner of Fulton street and Rockwell place. Thomas W. Lamb was the architect and the new theatre is unique in that it it is the first in which the projection room has been built into the playhouse. The lobby is done in Pompeiian effect, while the interior follows other Grecian style.

A mural decoration above the proscenium arch depicts various nations paying tribute to America. The theatre houses two immense pipe organs and there are additional accommodations for an orchestra of thirty-five pieces.

On the following night, Saturday, August 30, the general public was admitted to the formal opening and report has it that this has rapidly become one of the most popular cor ners in Brooklyn.

A straight picture policy prevail and is presented in practically the sam style initiated by the New Yorl Strand. Geraldine Farrar and Lo Tellegen in the Goldwyn Picture, "Th World and Its Woman," was the fea ture attraction the opening week.

The stage is exceptionally wide an deep and the Strand is so constructe and its acoustic qualities are suc that it could easily be transforme into an opera house or a home for th spoken drama. It is a marvel in arti try and modern ingenuity.

Up to Date Playhouses Devoted to Motion Pictures are Springing Up Like Mushrooms Throughout This Country and Canada

FURTHER indication of the widespread prosperity existing and looked for in the industry, is contained in the varied announcements from all over the country of the erection of new palatial theatres. Several weeks ago, announcement was made of the investment of millions in a score of new theatres in all sections, and since that time, additional word on other projected playhouses is confirmation of the wave of theatre erection reports of which have been brought in from time to time by men of the industry whose business it is to keep their fingers on the public pulse.

The big theatre in Chicago's loop, projected some six months ago, and which now is approaching the stage where building is talked of, leads in cost of the several announced during the week.

Seating Capacity Paramount

With the new ground, this house will cost Balaban and Katz of the Windy City, somewhere in the neighborhood of $2,800,000, one million of which will go for the erection of the edifice. The site is on the south side of Lake street and occupies almost an entire block. The seating capacity will be 5000, which is second only to that of the new Capitol theatre, New York. It is understood that completion of plans etc. will delay actual construction on the house until May, 1920.

Cincinnati is to have a unique glass show house, to be located on the roof of the Orpheum theatre by Colonel I. M. Martin and his brother Jack Martin, who own that theatre. It will consist of a wired glass enclosure for the present Roof Garden, in order that it may be used in winter or bad weather. Just enough steel framework so that the sides and roof can be thrown open, allowing of the river breezes on the warmer days, will be employed in the construction. This will bring the seating capacity of the Orpheum up to 3100, making it one of the largest and finest in Cincinnati. The glass theatre is expected to be complete by the time snow flies this winter.

Following in the wake of New York —or rather preceding the metropolis, Elizabeth, N. J., has opened its new Capitol theatre. August 30 marked the initial performance. Herman F. Jans, well known in the State Right field is head of the enterprise, and incorporated in his house the latest plans lending to the comfort of patrons. Music will be an important feature of every program. A $20,000 Wurlitzer is a feature of the house, which opened with the first showing in the East of Douglas Fairbanks' production for United Artists "His Majesty the American."

From smaller cities the country over have come reports of the opening of small but up-to-date houses, to fill the ever growing demand of the public for screen entertainment. Canada, too, is getting its share of the industry's prosperity, playhouses springing up in many of the Dominion's towns.

A late report from Cincinnati told of yet another house to be erected by the Ohio Building and Construction Company for Ascher Brothers.

Proof of Films' Wide Appeal

Census Taken in Cincinnati Brings Admission from Four Non-Picture Fans

THE widespread popularity of the moving picture was evinced in a markable manner recently when anager I. Libson, of the Walnut there, advertised for the names and adresses of every person in Cincinnati no had never seen a moving picture. ut of approximately 500,000 people ere were only four who would admit writing that they had never attended "movie." The replies were to be ldressed to Constance Talmadge, in re of the Walnut theatre, she being e instigator in the search for nonovie goers.

Scores of letters were received, but t of them there were only four who ade "written confession" that they d never seen a single reel of film, though many of them admitted that ey had seen only one picture. One ter, from an invalid woman, stated at she was unable to leave her home d had never seen a picture.

As a result of the accident at the ars theatre, Cincinnati, August 5, 19, when the floor of the lobby colsed, injuring a score of persons, ur suits for damages, aggregating 3,000, have been filed in Common eas Court against Charles E. Marqua d Herbert Volker, owners of the eatre.

An educational campaign has been rted among exhibitors by the Asciated Film Exchanges of the Cinnati Chamber of Commerce for the rpose of seeing that films are rened on time. "Our desire is to prot the legitimate, square exhibitor m the inconveniences caused by the low who cares for no one but himf," says Jack Stewart, President of organization. "Many exhibitors not realize that when they delay returning a film they not only cause exchange extra work, but often y force another exhibitor to run lark house or, at the last minute, to bstitute another film in place of the e held up. This causes dissatisfacn among his customers, and results a loss in reputation and a corrending loss in money. Fortunately, the large majority of exhibitors is fair minded, and once the situation is made clear to them they are ready enough to pledge their cooperation toward eliminating this evil. They realize that their delay in returning films may act as a boomerang, and that they themselves may some day be forced to lose money through the carelessness of another exhibitor."

Allens to Build Big Theatre in Windsor

Still another link was added to the international chain of theatres owned by the Allen Theatre Enterprises, with headquarters in Toronto, with the announcement this week by Jule and Jay J. Allen that work would start immediately on the construction of a new house in Windsor, Ont., just across the border from Detroit.

The theatre will be combined with a seven-story office building and nearly a million dollars will be represented by the investment. Through arrangements with G. M. McGregor, vice-president of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, a site on Oulette street, in the very center of the city, has been acquired. Work on the structure will start immediately and it is expected that the new house will be in operation shortly after the first of the new year.

Like all of the new houses being constructed where there is not already a theatre bearing that name, it will be called the Allen. The house will seat 1,800.

HIGH EXPENSES COMPEL PRICE INCREASE

THREE leading motion picture theatres in Norfolk, Va., advanced prices of admission five cents on all classes of tickets the first day of September, the theatres thus affected being the Wells, the Strand and the American, all of which, like other motion picture places and legitimate theatres in Norfolk, are under the control and management of the Wells Amusement Syndicate, Inc., of which corporation Jake Wells of Richmond is president and his brother, Otto Wells, general manager in Norfolk.

The management announced that the advance in the prices of admission was made necessary because of an advance in rentals on films, higher wages and salaries, and increased expenses.

Prices at the Wells and the Strand theatres will be twenty cents for matinees and twenty-five cents for evening shows. The former prices were fifteen cents and twenty cents.

Child Labor Law Not Applicable to Industry

In a series of rulings which have recently been made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in respect to interpretations of the child labor provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918 there is one ruling which directly concerns the motion picture industry. The following excerpt is quoted from the official bulletin issued by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

"The moving picture industry does not come within the child labor provisions of the act. Although employment in conection with the making of moving pictures may be harmful to children in many ways, it is not believed that the law-making body intended that 'factory, workshop or manufacturing establishment' was meant to embrace the making of moving pictures, either in studio or out of doors, regulations state."

"Speed Carr" Is a Story by J. S. Woodhouse

J. Stewart Woodhouse, 5228 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood, California, has earned a unique distinction in film story writing.

Of the forty-three photoplays announced by the Paramount Artcraft company on their Selective Program, "Speed Carr," written by Mr. Woodhouse for Wallace Reid, is the only free lance original story in the list.

There are three other original stories by staff writers: C. Gardner Sullivan, John Lynch and Julien Josephson. The remaining thirty-nine pictures are screen adaptations from plays or novels.

Theatre Gutted—Shows Given Just the Same

With her theatre burnt over her head, Mrs. M. E. Brinkman, of Bemiji, Minn., refused to admit defeat or ruin. Not a booking did she cancel, or did she miss giving a performance.

San Francisco Theatre Deal

Imperial and California Houses Are in Agreement; Former "Long Run" One

AN anouncement of interest not only locally but to exhibitors in all the larger cities of the country, is that of the working agreement recently reached by the managements of the Imperial and California theatres in San Francisco.

Due to the high standard to which motion picture productions have been raised for the coming season, an arrangement has been made between Manager Roth of the California and Portola theatres, and Manager Partington of the Imperial, whereby the Imperial becomes what will be known as the "long run" theatre of San Francisco. Producers have been advocating and promising bigger and better pictures for a long time and the season just opened will offer many productions running from 7,000 to 10,000 feet or more in length. These features will call for the utmost in exploitation and musical and artistic treatment.

Among the first few releases to be offered at the Imperial are George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," and other productions bearing the Paramount-Artcraft trademarks, "The Miracle Man" will be the first to be shown for an extended run. It is the intention of Managers Roth and Partington to present these photo-dramatic masterpieces in big style, with enlarged orchestras, prologues and elaborate stage settings. When the engagement of "The Miracle Man" terminates, the new DeMille special will be presented.

The splendid programs heretofore offered at the Imperial will be transferred in their entirety to the Portola theatre, where the success starring Charlie Ray, Marguerite Clark, Dorothy Gish, Ethel Clayton, Wallace Reid and other Paramount-Artcraft artists, as well as the Cecil B. DeMille productions and the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies. Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and other short subjects will be presented.

Action Settled Out of Court

Suit in Cleveland Amicably Settled; Live Notes of Doings in Ohio City

SEVERAL weeks ago suit was filed by the Standard Film Service of Cleveland against Frank Hall, Jess Willard, ex-champion and his manager, Reichart, for a sum of money covering the rental of the Opera House, Cleveland, which these gentlement had subleased from the Standard Film Service to show the Willard-Dempsey fight pictures. These pictures did not materialize, however. They did not conform with the Ohio Censor Board's idea of a suitable entertainment, so the fight picture went the way of others of its kind. The controversy between the Standard Service and the lessees of the Opera House was amicably settled out of court this week, by a payment in full of all obligations.

Joseph Grossman has sold the Standard theatre, Cleveland, to some New York interests, who do not care to divulge themselves at the present time. Mr. Grossman is one of the landmarks of Cleveland. He has been manager of the Standard theatre for the past six years. In fact he built the house himself. And it was the first motion picture house to be built in the downtown section of the city.

Cleveland is to have a new motion picture studio. It will be called the Collins Laboratory and Studio, and papers for incorporation are now being prepared in Columbus, for $100,000. J. N. Ackerman and H. D. Bubb, both of Cleveland, are named as incorporators. The new organization is being formed principally to take commercial films.

"Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms" is the working title of the new Robert McLaughlin photoplay which will shortly follow upon the release of "The House Without Children."

The Star Feature Film Service, of Cleveland an independent releasing organization, has sold out its interests, and Bert Barnett, head of the company has returned to his former home in New York.

Universal's Pittsburg Men Get Together

Monday evening, August 25th, Manager Herman Stern of the Universal Pittsburg Exchange gave a dinner in honor of District Manager A. A. Schmidt, which was attended by each and everyone of the employes of the Pittsburg office. It was declared by all to have been the most enjoyable affair ever given under Universal auspices and a fitful illustration of the "get together" spirit that is rampant throughout Universal and which is particularly strong in the Steel City Exchange. An outsider attending this affair could not help but be impressed with the gathering's approach to a big family reunion, for that is what it certainly looked like, and it was natural for it to do so, for the Universal force in its operations during every day of the week exhibits the harmony of the well-regulated family.

Two Letters Which Explain Themselves

The Lay of the Land at Rio Janeiro, South America

A SHORT time ago we had occasion to send out letters to our foreign subscribers asking questions concerning advertising. Following is a reply from Rubem Ferreira which is a bit more illuminating than most of the communications, so we are printing it as a novelty. Mr. Ferreira is a bit short on English construction, but he is long on the big idea in motion picture exhibition exploitation. This is what he has to say:

RIO DE JANEIRO, July 2, 1919.

The Motion Picture News, Inc.,
New York City.

Dear Sirs:

Your letter has been received, which I thank very much.

What you ask me is something very interesting and which I can do very gladly.

What I write is about the advertisement of the pictures that the exhibitor does here.

To say how the exhibitor advertise his pictures here so poor I am telling about the showing of the great production entitled "The Heart of Humanity," which are being shown in this city.

The great production, "The Heart of Humanity," is being shown in city at the Lirico theatre. This theatre was formerly the Opera House; it's the largest theatre in this city, with a capacity of about two thousand people or maybe more (which I am not quite sure).

The advertisement for this picture was so poor that the first performance had about three hundred persons, so little for the capacity of this large theatre.

Very few people knew that this picture was playing at this theatre.

How can the people take interest in the picture when it's not advertised!

The exhibitor here wants to get the money from the public without spending a little bit in good advertisements, and then he sees that the results are bad.

The most important thing we need here is a good motion picture magazine like THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS that helps the exhibitor in the advertisement for his pictures, giving him better ideas and better suggestions.

They not only don't know how to advertise his pictures, as well they have very poor ideas in the advertisement they do.

Rucben Ferreira, who writes of the lack of good advertising in South America

I mean general advertisements as lobby displays, newspapers advertisements, all this kind of advertisement that attracts the public.

The great produpction of W. Griffith entitled "Hearts of the World" will be shown soon in this city. I hope they do some nice advertisements for this picture. Not only because it's a picture worth while to advertise as well the good advertisements means great results.

Talking about the most liked pictures here, I think that the Paramount and the Fox pictures are the best liked. Our public love the two great stars of these two companies; they are Theda Bara and Dorothy Dalton.

Every Bara and Dalton release here means a crowded house day and night.

About the Metro pictures, it's unfortunately to say that they are being hown at the Parisiense picture house. It's a small theatre that our public don't like to go, and the theatre does a very poor business.

The motion picture conditions here are very good, but what the exhibitors need is a little pep and better advertisements.

Hoping you may like what I write and that may be of interest to you, I remain,

Yours very truly, RUBEM FERREIRA.

The Theatrical History of a Natural Born Showwoman

THE NEWS is always anxious to secure stories concerning exhibitors of the gentler sex, especially those who have succeeded where men have failed. It is therefore with extreme pleasure that we print a letter from Miss Leila N. Hollin, manager of the Messner theatre, Attica, Ind. Miss Hollin is making a success of motion pictures in Attica; so much of a success that the news penetrated from the middle west to New York and occasioned the mailing of a letter from this office for a story of her experiences.

ATTICA, IND., July 28, 1919.

Motion Picture News, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen: Not that I overlooked the courtesy extended to me in the enclosed letter—but just that I rather hesitated—and so the time lengthened into months.

It isn't so bad to put a show over, but when it comes to advertising myself, somehow I lack the punch—probably because the release date is rather ancient—27 years.

The theatrical fever struck me in my early pioneer days, when I staged all the popular melodramatics, such as "East Lynne" and "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in the field back of the school house. In this I personally superintended the building of the stage, wrote the lines, selected the cast, rehearsed the performance, and then played the leading role myself.

Then after this ambitious start someone wished the drab existence of a teacher in girls' private seminaries upon me. However, after graduating from the University (De Pauw), I found the call too faint to even hear, so drifted into the orchestra pit of a vaudeville house as pianist and remained three years.

Later I decided upon business for myself, and so two years ago landed here—Attica. Reported to be a good show town, but when I investigated the territory I found one show filled the house with comps. and the other had no business at all.

I chose the house with the larger seating capacity, Messner (500), and started in.

Business grew steadily better, anyway, to such a degree that my competitor decided to sell out. I filled every night with the best service money could buy; at the same time got my wits together as to the right amount of money it ought to take to buy it, as I soon learned the buying constituted the long

Your Idea and Ours

HERE is a display which would be very good except that it is crowded into too small a space, two columns by six inches. The Liberty might better have purchased about two inches more in depth and then it would have had an ad which would deserve great praise. As it is most people are going to see "Home"

"The Liberty" and let it go at that. Come to look at this one closely the cut of Mildred Harris isn't very good. It might be any girl. Certainly Miss Harris would not be able to identify herself by this. We believe if you are going to use a cut, select one which means something. If it is just a cut of the star, with no action depicted, be sure that it is a good likeness. This one isn't. The Liberty is located at St. Louis.

A lot of so-called temperament is just temper.

THIS display of the Alhambra's, Newark, is another example of using a "head" cut too large for the space purchased, two columns by seven inches making it necessary to center the half tone, although this is better than most attempts of this kind. The reason for this is that the Alhambra did not attempt to use any reading matter over the cut, except the name and date line, and it therefore doesn't have that "cut in two" appearance an ad does have when dividing the reading matter over and under a cut of this character is attempted.

Most men are so busy trying to find out what one woman wants that "What Every Woman Wants" isn't interesting.

THIS ad of the Strand, Louisville, Ky., three colums twelve inches doesn't sell the "Price of Silence" as well as it might although at first glance it looks rather well. The use of the second descriptive cut at the bottom is responsible for a part of this good appearance but it divides the attention and doesn't fully identify itself as "Price of Silence" matter. It is also very melodramatic suggestive of the 10-20-30 stuff. We believe it might better have been left out and the space utilized with some talk concerning the smaller pictures on the bill and the music, etc.

The selling talk used on this picture is very good but it is contradicted in both the cuts used. The cuts say this is a society picture while the reading matter refers to it as a rural bill. Which is correct? We would have billed the feature from the rural angle and tried to get descriptive cuts which in action matched up with our talk. The display is also a bit crowded but that in itself is not a grave offense.

For once an actor has an alibi for being out of an engagement.

This ad is not especially artistic but it advertises Mary McLaren and "The Petal on the Current" very well. In larger space more might have been said giving some information concerning the picture itself, as this is a production where a little hint of the story is especially desirable. There is always an interest in the shop girl problem and this was a story of this sort. However, if the Alhambra did not care to buy more space especially in width so it might have shoved the cut over to one side and used some space along side it, about all that could be done has been accomplished. We are strongly in favor of using cuts as we have just stated. Muhc better results may be obtained by this method.

"The Miracle Man" has performed a miracle. The news editor who hasn't admitted that a picture was good since before the war has seen it twice, once paying real money.

THE Riley theatre is located at Doland, South Dakota, not the largest city in the world but nevertheless a place where a progressive showman has located.

This ad is nothing startling but considering the fact that in towns of the size of Doland, most managers don't advertise at all it is exceptional. The display three columns by twelve inches is good straightforward newspaper talk advertising three bills, which we usually term an advertising crime but which is excused in this case because we infer that Doland does not afford a daily newspaper and that the whole week's bills must be covered in one issue of the weekly newspaper. We want to commend the Riley ad man on one thing. This is the first ad on Mickey we have seen which used a descriptive cut of the biggest thing in the picture, the horse race, a subject always productive of interest and in this feature the big event.

In the "Garden of Allah" portion of the ad, mention should have been made of the fact that this is from the novel of the same name. Really that is the best exploitation angle this picture presents and the Riley hasn't touched on it. It the "Mickey" engagement is first run in Doland, the display should say more about the picture. So far as this ad is concerned the title here might be advertising a new horseshoe or something equally as irrelevent.

"Strike while the iron is hot" seems to be a favorite recreation these days.

HERE is the first ad we have seen on "Nugget Nell" which advertises the production in the right vein according to our idea. This half page from cuts to selling talk tell the reader that this is not to be taken seriously and that point is important for reasons we have given previously.

We like the first line over the cut of Miss Gish. That tells the whole story in a nutshell. If anyone comes in to see this picture without knowing that it is a burlesque, it is their fault.

The cut used is big enough to be seen a mile away and the billing of Miss Gish's name certainly will be noted. Putting "Nugget Nell" in smaller type is also correct. The title is inconsequential in this.

From 100% to Zero

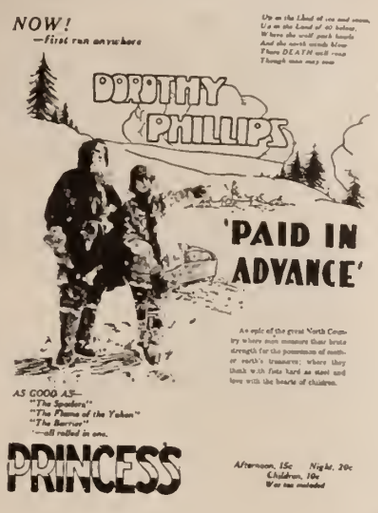
As for the selling talk that fits too. In fact this whole ad may be labeled mighty close to the 100 per cent. mark according to our view. It is worth clipping if you are going to play "Nugget Nell." The Colonial is located at Tacoma, Washington.

So far as we know the managers of the picture theatres in New York aren't worrying because the actors' strike still continues.



THIS display is four columns wide and a full page in depth and is typical of the sort of advertising which Tacoma, Washington, exhibitor's do and especially of Moore's Rialto. We have seen ads. from this source which we thought were better than this but for all that this is an example of using big space to advantage. The big descriptive cut will attract attention and the title of the production will be seen. Naturally this is a picture which a house must do a lot toward putting over as with picture fans, the fact that it is an exceptional melodrama will not be known and the Rialto has attempted to guarantee it by a big space ad and some strong selling talk, beginning with a question which carries interest. We should say that this ad covers the exploitation field as far as newspaper advertising goes. It recommends the picture in no uncertain terms and good results may be expected from it.

About to pass from the vocabulary of every man until 1920: "Is it warm enough for you"?

TO our mind here is one that deserves the full 100 per cent. There is just one thing that perhaps might have been improved and that is the title line. A little different style letter, something less blunt, say a letter like the "Dorothy Phillips" line except black.

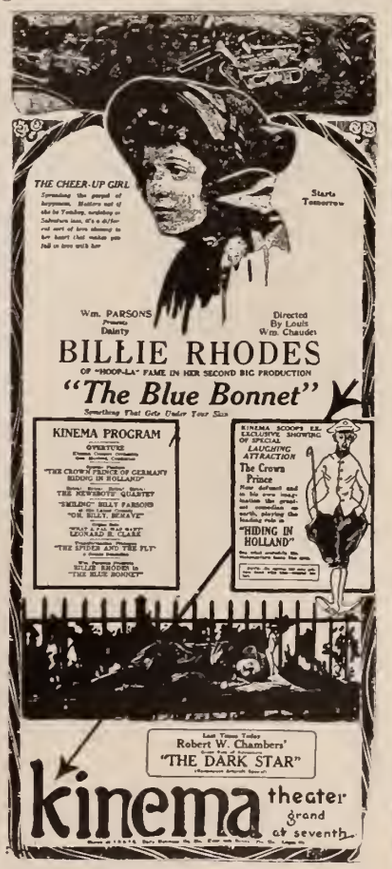
However, this is more than good. There is a great descriptive cut, one which practically tells you what the picture is about without a word of reading matter, a descriptive poem which does it some more and then some forcible selling talk that rings true.

On the left is a phrase that sounds a bit extravagant but from what we hear, this is a regular picture and the Princess may be forgiven for comparing "Destiny" with such great films as "The Spoilers," etc. This display was a full quarter page. The Strand is located at Kansas City.

The stage is set for "Fewer and Better Pictures," with an audience of skeptical exhibitors a sort of "death watch" sitting in the circle.



THIS display of the Griswold's appears to be one of the kind where the theatre manager shoves some memoranda at the advertising solicitor and the solicitor passes it along to the linotypes and in it goes without anyone paying much attention to the artistic side of advertising. This ad makes a lot of announcements and that is all. There is no attempt to sell the pictures. It just lets people know what the bills are for the week. It is also another example of what we think is a bad practice; advertising two bills at the same time and giving each equal display. It isn't good form and you don't get the best results in adopting it, in our opinion.

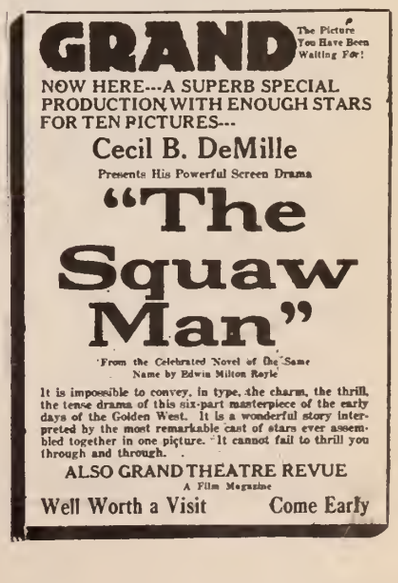
New York is now in the same category as the "tanks." Only picture shows are available for those who desire entertainment.

THERE is no use in talking, the West is the home of good advertising so far as pictures are concerned. In the East they kick about high space rates and buy a few inches and let it go. In the West they purchase a half a page and get their money and a handsome profit back. This display is from Los Angeles and surely does advertise "The Blue Bonnet," to say nothing of the other numbers on the Kinema program.

To begin with, there is a nice attention attraetor at the top, the band and Billie Rhodes in her blue bonnet and, believe us, that bonnet means something nowadays. Then comes the star's name, we would say too large unless she is rather popular in Los Angeles, and then the title. To the left is some good selling talk for Miss Rhodes. It is well worded, except perhaps that "shining in her heart," which might better have been "eyes," and will help sell the picture.

On the left in the box is the entire program which we claim is absolutely the thing to do—things if you have the space to spare. In the box on the right is the "Hiding in Holland" ad and a mighty good one. It treats this subject in a way which will help swell the box office receipts. Nothing written is so effective as well selected ridicule. Next comes another cut which doesn't do a great deal but balance the ad and help give it class. All in all, this is one of the best to come our way. It is too bad that every exhibitor can not duplicate it. In size this was four columns wide and a full page in depth.

Mack Sennet's bathing girls are going into Canada. Well they won't have to pay much duty on their wardrobe.



HERE is the best display we have seen on "Hearts of the World." The Midway theatre, Rockway, Ill., is sponsor for it. The original was four columns by twelve inches and certainly must have produced results for the Midway, especially at the prices quoted. In a straight type style we would say that the selling talk was a bit crowded, but in this it will pass as more than good. This is a different ad on a big picture and as such we will label it pretty closely to 100 per cent. We fear reduced to our columns it will lose some of its beauty, but believe us, in the original it is excellent. "They Shall Not Pass" is a catch line which can not be improved upon.

Rubbing it in. A new release is titled "Paid in Advance."

THIS display is by the Grand theater of Farebault, Minn., and for an all type ad is very good. The ad man, however, does not know his drama very well, as he advertises the picture as an adaptation of a novelization of "The Squaw Man" and not as one of the most famous plays of a decade past in which William Faversham starred. In neglecting this point the Grand has missed one of its best selling points. The picture has no star which can be headlined and in consequence the fact that it was a great play with this noted actor can be made to take the star headline. Neither is the play of the picture one concerning the days of the "early Golden West." This statement would lead people to think "The Squaw Man" was a costume bill like "The Girl of the Golden West." However, the ad sells "The Squaw Man" rather well for its size, two columns, six inches.

What Live Wires Are Doing

One of our reviewers is "out of luck" because "Nobody Home" was changed to "Out of Luck" after he had written his review using "Nobody home" in every line.

HERE is a display of the Strand's that looks like a great bet for a picture of this kind, a light comedy. Ordinarily we would be careful of "kidding" in our selling talk, but this feature is an exception and when a little laugh can be injected in anything in print without hurting things we are strong for it. Here, from cut to reading matter, this vein of writing has been used to excellent advantage. The cut gets the attention with the title displayed well and a first class catch line. This is more than good. It is a model of its kind.

THE Grand theatre is located at Bluffton, Indiana, and this sample of its advertising appeals to us as being first class. We like the idea of suggesting the "Turn in the Road" with the light rule turned at an angle and the catch line "And a Little Child Shall Lead Them." Also the selling talk, which, however, was in eight point and which we believe is too small for display work. However, this ad would not have stood much larger point without overshadowing the title line and if the reader gets as far as the line "Who and What is God?" he will finish it. It might have been a good plan to have isolated that sentence and put it in black face. That would have invited further reading. The cut prints up well and while not descriptive of what the picture is about will get and hold attention because it is a child. All in all, we call this a good ad. Better than many cities of larger and better facilities for good advertising are turning out. This display was three columns wide and ten inches deep.

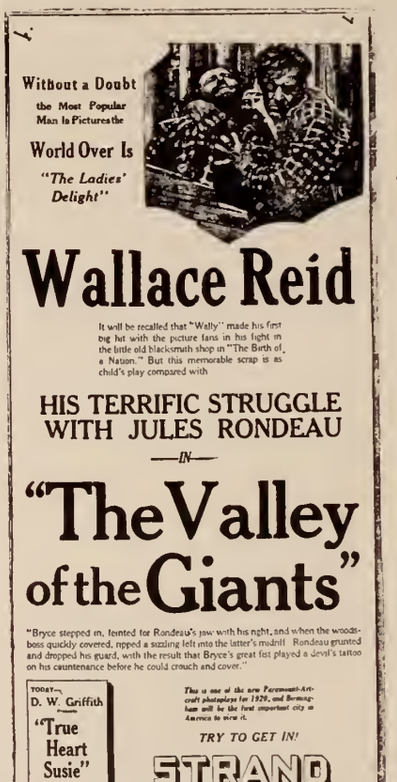
Two euphoneous titles of new pictures "The Brat" and "The Hoodlum." However, what's in a name?



HERE is an example of a good tie-up with local merchants on a picture, although the feature is one which doesn't lend itself especially well to this sort of stunt nor which needs anything extra to put it over. This is good work, but as a matter of policy we believe the Washington (Richmond, Va.), might better have saved this idea for some feature which needed some extra boosting. As for the ad itself, it is just ordinary and perhaps not quite that. The use of type set diagonally is rather confusing to the eye and doesn't add anything to the display. It will give exhibitors an idea what can be done in co-operative advertising, however, and is reproduced for that reason. This display was full page in width and eighteen inches deep.

If the young Prince of Wales was paying full rates for the photographs the News Weekly's are taking of him, the Bank of England would soon close its doors.

IF we were Wally Reid and had any idea that what the Strand ad man of Birmingham, Ala., has said concerning "The Ladies Delight" part of this four-column full-depth display was true we would begin looking for a nice chicken farm on which to encamp after our picture days were over, and that soon. There are certain male stars whose sun is beginning to set if not already down who might be truthfully referred to in this manner but not Wally Reid. We have no doubt but that Mr. Reid is popular with the women patrons of any theatre, but as for being of the type which would justify the term "Woman's Delight," he isn't and never will be. The beginning on this display was supposed to give Reid a boost, but its effect will be right the opposite. It also hurts badly a mighty fine display on "The Valley of the Giants." There is a nice display to the star's name, perfectly justifiable with type stating action in the right size and the title big enough to make an impression.

The selling talk concerning the picture we do not think so much of. In the first place it is technical prize fighting stuff presumably from the novel and it insinuates that the big thing in this picture is a scrap. Now women may enjoy a good rough and tumble screen fight, but it is the romance which fills their hearts with joy, and advertising wants to work on this weakness of the feminine sex. The Strand might better have said something concerning the plot rather than attempt to print something from which may be visualized a scene from the production.

Bragging about securing a pre-release on the Selective booking plan is all right, as most fans are aware that a change in methods takes effect September 1st and this will mean something. The cuts used are excellent. One provides atmosphere and the other depicts action, which is what cuts are for.

It is impossible to always please, but it is possible to be always pleasant.

THIS is by Saenger's Strand of New Orleans, a quarter page that is black and bold, advertising a picture which needs just this sort of a display. If you are going to run a picture which treats of moral codes and sin and unhappiness, give it a chance to attract the people who like to look on the gloomy side of life and be told something they already know over again.

This display advertises "The Unpardonable Sin" in no uncertain way, beginning with a headline that tells you pretty nearly what the picture is about. Some old guy who was a professor at Yale or something like that has said that there are only two things in the world, sex and religion, and probably he is right, for at least sex pictures that have an excuse in trying to teach a moral lesson have ever thrived. This one from a booking and audience standpoint is a good bet and the way the Saenger has gone after business with this ad is absolutely the right track. Everything that should be done has been done. A good cut well framed, the title placed to advantage and the author and director given proper billing, to which has been added good selling talk and a mention of the ther numbers on the program. We would call this the best ad we have een on this subject.

If you write for playing dates for "The Right to Happiness" you will e in right.

HERE is one of the New Strand's, Madison, Wis., that is bold and lack and rather extravagant, but it ertainly gets the eye right off the bat nd sells Fairbanks and "The Knicker-ocker Buckaroo." We can not find ny fault with this one unless it be hat bragging about what the picture s supposed to cost, which in itself is oo small a matter to take much of percentage off this display. The cut of Fairbanks and the "hoss" prints up very good. In a production like this only four things are necessary. Let people know it is Fairbanks and the name of the picture and the theatre and dates and you will have business. For that reason the lack of selling talk usually necessary is excused.

A popular vogue in film circles is referring to persons and inanimate things both as "birds." Peacocks or crow?

HERE are three ads in one, very bad business if the home town of the Novelty, Anthony, Kansas, could boast of a daily newspaper, which it can't.

This was a full page and from that angle it certainly may be praised. We are strong for the exhibitors in smaller towns who are wise enough to spend money for advertising. It shows that they are progressive. However, for the way this page has been utilized we can't say so much in praise. To begin with it has a very bad top. Looks like the beginning of an auction bill. If the Novelty is using big space right along it should have a name cut made which will give the theatre a little more distinction, as we presume that a better type than this was not available. In the first ad two words have been used which should be taboo in about 999 cases out of a thousand, "beautiful" and "gorgeous." "What Every Woman Wants" is a particularly good feature for advertising of the teaser variety. The Novelty could have done something along this line by referring to recent pages of this section of the NEWS.

The second ad bills "The Desert Hero" above Bryant Washburn in "A Very Good Young Man," which may be justifiable in Anthony, but we doubt it.

PART of the selling talk in this picture strikes us as very good and part of it as bad. We don't like the "Miss the Picture," "Perish the Thought." Both are very close to the "Don't Miss It" line.

In the "Eyes of the World" display a very bold cut has been used and then this lead was not followed out. The cut itself is good for a picture of this sort. At the left is what at first glance appears to be a fourth ad, but which is really selling talk relating to "The Eyes of the World." It doesn't fit the cut at all and has been detached from it by the light rule. In the first place the cut can not be used to advantage in a wider space than its four column width. The Novelty should have used its matter over and under it. However, it is probable that Anthony doesn't expect display ads in the weekly paper up to Kansas City standard and therefore this one gets by as good stuff for its purpose, to make a lot of noise about the shows at the Novelty.

Some one called up to ask how long "Six Feet Four" was. One of our brilliant editorial force said: "Seventy-six inches."

WE clipped this one from the Post-Intelligence, Seattle, to comment on a producer's cut which is pretty nearly valueless. This is supposed to be a scene from the picture. The funny-looking object to the right of the figures is supposed to be the wheel of an automobile and what looks like a watch case cover partly open is a tire partially detached from the rim. The figure lying on its back as if in a coffin or canoe is Jack Pickford and the girl holding Jack's head is Gloria Hope. Jack is lying on the ground and Gloria is sitting on it. Takes quite a lot of explanation, doesn't it, something which should be told without a word having to be written.

So far as the wording of this goes, it isn't awfully bad nor yet out of the ordinary class. We would never select it for an example of good advertising and it only gets in for the reason mentioned. The Coliseum is one of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses. The ad was two columns by nine and a half inches.

"When Bearcat Went Dry" isn't half as interesting as "Is New York to be actually dry?"

THE Newman at Kansas City does some good advertising and this sample, three columns by nine inches, looks mighty fine. The top and bottom of this ad of course is a special cut with border to match. By its use you get a distinctive appearance and a beauty impossible from the use of ordinary materials. The cut used is quite descriptive of the sort of production, "Upstairs" is, and in the selling talk the Newman ad man has never allowed himself to become serious which is entirely correct. Always keep your ad in the vein of the production. Here is another case where the exhibitor considers his smaller numbers entitled to space. This is a mighty good display worth copying, if you have the facilities for doing it.

Selective Bookings: "What is the next phrase to be coined for the use of press agents?"

THE ROYAL is located at Eldorado, Kansas, and the display from this source is good because the Royal ad man has had sense enough to select a good producers cut with which to work and added the matter top and bottom.

The display is all right. Nothing out of the ordinary, but sells Fred Stone in "Johnny Get Your Gun" in good shape. It has plenty of white space and in its original two columns by eight looked rather well.

If we had to find fault with everything that came along we might say that the Western costume of Stone and the light block printing about the figures suggestive of a desert in perspective is rather out of place with the old lady and girl both evidently not far from a habitation. However, that would be hypercritical. It is a good ad and commendable in every way as straightforward advertising where the producers materials have been used to advantage.

Advertising H. B. Warner in "The Pagan God" at Loew's New York theatre

Manager Sines Turns a "Frost" Into a Winner by Exploitation

NEW YORK and Chicago knew "Oh, Boy!" to be one of the greatest musical comedy successes of recent years. But Springfield theatregoers consider it the greatest "frost" that ever hit the town. It was played there at the leading legitimate theatre by about a third rate company at two dollar prices, and everyone who saw the show—and the house was sold out—went home with a bad taste in their mouth. To this day the management is being "kidded" about "Oh, Boy!" It was with this sort of a reputation that Manager Ed Kunz had to contend with when he brought the picture version to the Princess theatre for a week's run, and at increased admission. Even the reviewers spoke none too kindly of it, but Kunz screened the film before booking, thought it a crackerjack, and instructed his publicity manager, W. K. Sines, "to go the limit, to spend as much as he thought was necessary to put it over."

So Sines got busy. Several twenty-four sheets were put out, and also a great many sixes and threes, located in the best spots in the busiest sections of the city. Newspaper space was depended on, however, to produce the most results, and liberal lineage was bought in both local papers.

Then Manager Kunz had two very beautiful frames made at a local sign shop, with the title of the show and attractive cut-outs of the principals, These frames were placed in the Exposition Building at the State Fair grounds, and were seen by approximately 400,000 people.

Pretty good advertising, you'll admit. And at practically no expense, as a friend of Mr. Kunz's consented to let him have the space the frames would occupy in his exhibit, gratis.

An arrangement was entered into with the Majestic theatre whereby slides were used advertising "Oh, Boy!" at the Princess. The theatres are but half a block apart, and it is necessary to pass the Princess to get to the Majestic. Vaudeville patrons were somewhat astounded to see the Majestic running slides on a picture theatre, with the result that the advertisements were made more effective. The Princess management is going to reciprocate at first opportunity. It is nice to see such a harmonious feeling exist between showmen.

With everything working smoothly—billboards, newspapers, slides, and the frames at the State Fair—the Princess opened to an immense matinee, this too, despite the fact that the day was terribly hot. Business was almost capacity from opening to closing time on the first day of the engagement. Those who saw the picture went out and boosted it to the skies. For the rest of the week the crowds were so big they filled the theatre at all times, and at times swamped the playhouse. Of course many were turned away, but that is something that cannot be helped. It is estimated that at least 4,000 persons failed to get in on the week, and they never came back, as most of them were out-of-town visitors to the State Fair and went home the same day.

Summing it all up, it looks as though the unusual and remarkable combination of advertising stunts employed were responsible for the great success of the picture. It must also be mentioned that selections from "Oh, Boy!" were used as a basis for the elaborate musical program. The Princess made a record with "Oh, Boy!" that will stand for some time to come, and changed what was a "frost" on the stage here into a sensational screen winner.

SERVICE GALORE

Fifteen pages of service for exhibitors in this issue. And it's sparkling.

An Argument for the Effectiveness of the Lobby Display

A VERY effective display, conservative, attractive and inexpensive, was used by Loew's New York theater in the heart of the theatrical district, Forty-fourth street and Broadway, in connection with the showing of "The Pagan God," the latest H. B. Warner film.

It is an excellent argument for the effectiveness of the lobby display as a business attracter, especially in the downtown districts.

"H. B. Warner" and "The Pagan God," in letters twelve inches in height, are in a rack of bronze moulding above the ticket booth and covering the space of both entrance and exit. The letters are of a white opalescent material lighted from within, and they catch the eye just as quickly in daytime as at night. They are set in a bronzed background and rack. They are easily readable a block away.

The balance of the display consists of photographs and well printed signs announcing the bare facts: "H. B. Warner, in 'The Pagan God,' now playing." The signs are placed in frames on either side of the entrance. Covering the wall on the left of the ticket chopper are the photographs mounted on a dark background, and with plenty of space surrounding each picture in order not to detract from its effectiveness.

Loew's theater competes with several of the largest houses in the country, including the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand, and it is the lobby displays, and attractive "front" advertising, which has much to do with its success.

Exhibitors in cities and communities where special displays covering the entire lobby are not constructed due to frequent changes in program, will find that the lettering and sign work used by the Loew manager is about as inexpensive and effective a medium as can be secured to advertise current attractions.

Methodist Minister Endorses "Birth of a Race"

CONDITIONS broke right for the Rialto theatre of Rochester to have some unusually valuable advertising for the showing of "The Birth of a Race" for a week. One unexpected and welcome help of which full advantage was taken came in the form of a letter of indorsement from Rev. R. M. Connal, a Methodist minister of Scottsville, near Rochester, who wrote to Manager Wolff as follows:

"I am greatly pleased to have witnessed 'The Birth of a Race.' You are certainly justified in calling this photoplay one of the most pretentious creations ever made. It is marvelous in its character. It vividly portrays the struggle of the human race toward the democracy of brotherhood. The characters are admirably sustained throughout, and those in the persons of Adam and Eve and of Christ are handled with delicacy and effect. The scenes of Christ's birth and crucifixion are deserving of the highest praise. I commended highly this picture story to our church the Sunday following the private screening, to which I was invited, and I expect several of my people will come to see it this week."

Among the premeditated advertising stunts was one originated by Erwin J. W. Huber, who assisted in the publicity work for the picture. Announcement was made of a contest for the best advertisement exploiting "The Birth of a Race," to be used in the newspapers. The contest was open to everybody who attended the private screening preliminary to the opening of the engagement at the Rialto and admission to the screening was by ticket, obtainable on application at the box-office. Nobody was barred from entering the contect. A first prize of $10 was offered and four other prizes, consisting of season, six month and three month tickets to the Rialto.

The contest brought out quite a field of amateur advertising writers and stimulated interest in the picture, besides furnishing good publicity material,

"Blue Bonnet" Lobby Display at Kinema

Novel Exploitation Scheme for Billie Rhodes Picture Results in Added Box Office Receipts

SPECTACULAR advertising, attractive lobby display, and a most extraordinary stage setting, were the outstanding features of the pre-release showing of the Billie Rhodes picture "The Blue Bonnet" at the Kinema Theatre, of Los Angeles. The spectacular advertising for the subject began when Miss Rhodes went over the city in an airplane, and dropped 5,000 miniature paper bonnets, exact duplicates of the one she wore during the filming of the picture. On the inside of these small hats was an announcement of the showing of the picture at the Kinema theatre. On Friday evening, all papers carried four column ads which was followed up with the same copy in the morning papers of Saturday, previous to the opening on Sunday, August 10th.

Early Sunday morning, a new lobby display was installed at the Kinema, an attractive feature of which was a gigantic blue bonnet placed above the marque. This bonnet, made of papier mache, is ten feet wide and fifteen feet deep. The lobby contained a very attractive array of photographs of the star, and hand colored still pictures from the photoplay.

The Kinema prepared a suitable atmosphere for "The Blue Bonnet" presentation with a creative stage setting which was a reproduction of the spider web scene in the photoplay. This was used immediately before the showing of the picture, and on four evenings Miss Rhodes appeared at the theatre and sang with a newsboys' quartette. The song, Blue Bonnet, was the outstanding feature of this number. The only change necessary in the setting, which had been used at the studio when the picture was made, was the elimination of the girl from the center. The orchestra of twenty-five pieces had a special musical program suitable to the picture, inasmuch as it contained many airs familiar to everyone who has heard the Salvation Army on the street corners. The musical theme from the Blue Bonnet was used effectively in the incidental musical score, in addition to being sung by the quartette and Miss Rhodes.

The familiar blue bonnet of the Salvation Army which has been used by the Kinema does not reproduce well in the accompanying photograph although our West coast representative is authority for the statement that it was in reality a most excellent enlarged edition of the real thing.

As an attention attractor, coupled as it was with other good lobby advertising, it worked wonders in putting the Rhodes feature across.

New Theatre at Madison, Wis., Which Ranks With the Best

THERE has recently been completed in Madison a new photoplay house, built by Dr. W. G. Beecroft and associates at a cost of over $200,000. The New Strand is modeled along the latest lines in theatre architecture and design and is a notable community asset.

It is a spacious structure, with a seating capacity for 1,500 people, with "bad weather" standing room for 750 people more in a handsome lobby, 125 feet long, which leads to the main theatre.

The interior of the showhouse, exclusive in design, is in the Robert James Adams pattern of almost a century ago. The colorings are harmonious and will appeal to the most aesthetic, artists and decorators having carried out a color scheme of French gray, lavender and royal purple, throughout the entire interior. The stencilled walls are in cameo effect with medallions in relief. The seats are upholstered in dark gray leather.

One of the most attractive features is the huge pipe organ, which was built on both side of the stage screen.

Over 500 lights, all of which are special designs, were installed at a cost of $3,000. The large light in the center is a candelabrum in effect.

The building is equipped with the most modern ventilating and heating system obtainable. The heat is sent up through the floor and under the seats by means of hot air pipes, and a large ventilator in the ceiling helps to maintain the purest air conditions. In less than ten minutes the air in the theatre can be completely changed.

Modern and fireproof in every way, the theatre can be emptied in less than three minutes.—Exits on all sides, fourteen in number, make it easy to clear the theatre at the end of every performance or in an emergency.

The girl ushers, in harmony with their surroundings, are attractively dressed in uniforms of French gray and wear white aprons and caps of a French design.

The theatre, combining as it does every convenience in arrangement known in a modern theatre and the exquisite beauty of the interior, is an evidence of the ability of the architects, Rapp and Rapp Company, of Chicago. James R. Law, of Madison, was the supervising architect.

The New Strand is under the direction of Marcus Heimann, who also operates the Fuller Opera house and the Orpheum theatre in Madison, as well as a chain of twenty theatres in Illinois and Wisconsin.

The New Strand is under the management of Arthur P. Desormeaux, who has had twelve years' experience in the show business, during which time he has been employed in many important executive capacities.

The new house is now open and doing an excellent business. The programs secured are in keeping with the house, with special attention being given to the music and smaller numbers on the program.

The house has been especially popular during the hot weather owing to its large seating capacity and modern ventilating system, making it one of the coolest spots in town.

Never Overlook a Bet When Opportunity Knocks Says Hyman

"OPPORTUNITY knocks but once," is an old adage but one that is more true than most of us who are hustling to achieve honor and success in this rapidly passing Twentieth Century will admit.

The following is a discourse on what happened when Old Man Opportunity knocked on the door of the manager's office of St. Louis' most popular photo-play theatre.

Edward L. Hyman, manager of the William Fox Liberty theatre in St. Louis, is well known to the subscribers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and what he did when he heard the gentle knock of Opportunity will cause no surprise among his host of friends or his employers.

Several weeks ago the largest morning newspaper in St. Louis, the Globe-Democrat placarded the city with signs which read "Get Next." For several days the whole city was wondering what brand of breakfast food or cigarette was to be on sale.

Hyman suspected a 'nigger in the woodpile' but it was really Old Man Opportunity knocking and talked to the advertising solicitors of all the newspapers he advertises in. In a short time he learned from the Globe-Democrat's advertising solicictor that it was his paper launching a campaign to advertise an Artgravure supplement for its Sunday morning edition.

Having learned when the first supplement was to be distributed in St. Louis and surrounding territory Hyman couldn't see why he shouldn't share in the campaign at no additional expense to his theatre.

In less time than it takes to tell it he was burning up the wires to his New York employers inquiring what big production he could secure for showing simultaneous with the Globe-Democrat's artgravure edition. After an interchange of communications he was informed that "Wolves of the Night" would be available.

With his engagement confirmed Hyman lost no time in getting to the Globe-Democrat advertising office and made arrangements for liberal space both in the display and reading sections of the special edition. Then he sat down to wait his share of what he knew the advertising would bring figuring on the law of averages and the extra attraction, one of the selective booking pictures, a fact that he did not neglect to announce.

The advertising campaign of the Globe-Democrat was so well conducted that the newspaper received requests for 40,000 more copies of the Sunday edition containing the new artgravure supplement than the usual Sunday circulation. This brought the circulation of the Globe-Democrat on Sunday, August 10, to almost 300,000 copies.

Hyman was able to convince the Movie Editor of the Globe-Democrat that "Wolves of the Night" is one of the very best of all photo-play productions ever shown in the city and as a result got the "lead" in the advance notices, the best position for his half-tone picture of Farnum and also a five column over line.

Having taken all the advantages that Old Man Opportunity had to offer Hyman sat down to await results. He knew that 40,000 more persons would read the program at the Liberty theatre than the previous Sunday and he felt sure that his house was going to get a 'big play.'

His prophecy was correct because the credit side of the books at the Liberty theatre shows it plain enough to convince the most skeptical.

It is plausible to believe that anyone who had read the above story is satisfied that wonderful results may be obtained by taking advantage of what Old Man Opportunity has to offer.

If one were to 'steal' some of the stuff of George Ade's Fables in Slang he would say that the moral of this story is "NEVER OVERLOOK A BET."

Armstrong's Lobby Display Which Broke Box Office Records at Portland

DURING Portland's hottest weather, when the thermometer sailed skyward to the tune of 100 degrees Fahrenheit, Manager W. B. Armstrong of the Strand theatre found that his box receipts were 25 per cent. larger than during any other similar period throughout the entire summer. The cause of this success he laid to his lobby display. The picture then running was "The Wilderness Trail," in which Tom Mix is starred. By a series of drops the lobby was transformed into an icy trail leading to a wee log cabin in which ruled the ticket seller. Artificial snow was used to bank the sides of the lobby and to fill in between the drops. A huge cardboard figure of Mix in northern apparel was at one side of the entrance. Display cards advertising the entire program took up comparatively small space at either side of the entrance, almost out on the sidewalk. One of the three days in which the picture was shown at the Strand was the hottest day in twelve years, but the attendance records in Mr. Armtrong's office show that it was a fine day for at least one motion picture manager.

Advertises "Hoop-La" with Circus Tents

THE circus tent idea used in the lobby and on the stage was used to the very best of advantage by the Alhambra theatre, St. Paul, when "Hoop-La," starring Billie Rhodes, was played.

Both the lobby and the interior of the theatre were made to play important parts in carrying out the circus tent effect. The lobby was arranged so as to represent the entrance to the tent; a large canvas was stretched from the rear out over the ticket booth. Striped canvas covered the walls and the ticket booth. This gave a very attractive and realistic effect. Attractive signs conveying good selling ideas were placed on either side of the entrance.

The interior of the theatre, of course, was not altered in any way. Banners and pennants were hung about and the program tables were decorated to represent refreshment stands. The ushers were dressed as candy butchers.

An especially large number of children were attracted by the circus atmosphere, the management reports. "At all showing the house played to capacity and the audiences were well pleased.

end of the game. For with all due respect to my salesmen (I couldn't run a show without 'em), they will look me straight in the eye and ask the funniest prices you ever heard.

While I only have a small town to work on, I run the largest features on the market, and run them while they are new. Have my patrons educated to stay at home, save carfare and wait for the picture to come to them. They are never disappointed, either.

I am willing to pay a good price for a good picture at the right time. Then I put it over in a way that I get the proper compensation—not only in money, but a community of satisfied patrons.

The advertising I play big for a small town, using our daily and two weekly papers. On special features I advertise in six to eight small town papers. I talk, think, live moving pictures all the time—consequently my patrons do likewise. They are all "movie fans."

Of course, I realize I have only accomplished a few things in the show business so far and that in a small way; but I have real hopes and grim Irish determination. Thanking you for your interest. I am, Yours truly,

Hang all Your Pictures to "Local Color"

Says Branham, Who Practices What He Preaches, and Cashes in When Picture Refers to a Birmingham Newspaper

IT is nice to have a leading publicity-man agree with you in your pet theory, especially one who is an old newspaper man and is still capable of sitting in at most any old desk around a print shop dishing out copy that will bear head lines a foot wide. Our pet theory is getting "local color" into exploitation on every legitimate occasion and the person who has come through with some pertinent illustrations on this subject is Charles G. Branham, about the best beloved of our own Advisory Board because he never fails us in a time of need. We can send out a S. O. S. to Branham and he always comes through with material for a real story and it is never all theory either. Branham knows good publicity and he knows the show business. Just because he does know these things is one of the reasons that the S. A. Lynch Enterprises are paying him a regular salary to exploit their theatres and pictures in the South.

"Always look for something in your pictures to which you can hang local color," is the working slogan of Mr. Branham. "Many a good, round dollar has been lost to exhibitors everywhere because they have overlooked that little something in their pictures that will interest and arouse the curiosity of the home folks," says Mr. Branham. "In nearly every picture made there is some little angle that offers a suggestion for local advertising and publicity. This is why it is necessary for the exhibitor who is ambitious to reach the top and obtain the fullest measure of success for his house to see his pictures in advance of their local showing. Of course, it is almost impossible for the fellow in the country, miles away from the exchange centers to pre-view his productions, but he can at least spend a few days in his exchange every few weeks and look over his important future bookings.

"The new plan of many of the exchanges to have an exploitation man on the job to assist the small town exhibitor is a great thing provided this exploitation expert makes it a point to watch out for the things that will be of most value to his exhibitors. He can best do this, however, only when he is familiar with conditions in the various towns which his exchange serves. The idea of sitting in the exchange and working out the suggestions of the New York office never has or never will bring the big results. One of the first duties of the exploitation man should be to see all new releases and learn to pick out those things in the pictures that will help Hank Olson way out in Darwin as well as Finkelstein & Ruben in Minneapolis.

"Watch for the local color, boys! It's the old stuff that sells the newspapers and its the same old stuff that puts over the pictures that some exhibitors pass up because they just naturally are blinded to the value of so-called small town publicity.

"The longer I am in the picture business the more thoroughly am I convinced that the 'small town stunt' is the big stunt in the city. You can't give 'em enough of the things that the old circus man used to pull when you were knee-high-to-a grass hopper, watching 'em slop up the paper for 'the greatest show on earth' and wondering whether it would be your luck to carry water to the elephants."

Mr. Branham's latest success with "local color" was in Birmingham, Ala., when he recently exhibited Enid Bennett in "The Virtuous Thief." It happened that he had no chance to see this picture in advance. However, he viewed the first show at the Colonial and almost fell off his chair when he discovered that a newspaper used in one of the first scenes was The Birmingham Age-Herald, and that one of the sub-titles said, "The Mayor of Birmingham needs a calling down and I am going to give it to him right now."

This was enough for Branham. He didn't wait to see the rest of his show, but beat all hundred yard records to the Age-Herald where he increased the size of his advertisement from "two fives" to "three twelves," and obtained a special story in the Age-Herald for the next morning. The accompanying "ad" tells the story. More business than he could handle the next day was the result of tieing up the local angle in his picture with his advertising and publicity.

Now just stop to think what a help it would have been had the exploitation department in the home exchange sent out a wire like this:

"Virtuous Thief which you play August twenty-first contains mention of Birmingham Age-Herald and says 'The Mayor of Birmingham needs a calling down.' Get busy with newspaper. This office sending special story and suggestions for newspaper tie-up."

Waldorf of Akron Adopts New Exploitation Idea

THE WALDORF THEATRE, Akron, Ohio, which has long been noted for its progressive policy, has added another exploitation feature to its list of successes. It is in the form of a twelve-page booklet, a combination advertising proposition, memorandum and program. Eight pages are devoted to heralding forthcoming attractions, and four to blank pages on which notations may be made. The booklet is attractive in size and design. It is of vest pocket size and has a heavy paper cover.

The Waldorf theatre is one of the biggest first-run houses in Akron.

"Sahara" Given with Elaborate Stage Setting and Prologue at California

ELABORATE stage settings and prologue were used in the recent showing of "Sahara," the Louis Glaum spectacle, at the California, one of Los Angeles' leading theatres. Perhaps nothing quite as pretentious has been attempted in the Western metropolis, especially in the matter of the scenic canvasses used. The stage of the California is fifty-five feet across and three complete sets were utilized in staging the elaborate prologue requiring a cast of characters of ten people, all of whom were competent members of the acting profession.

The special number was presented just before the screening of the feature and succeeded a rendition of the "Ballet Egyptian" by the California's thirty-five piece orchestra.

First sections on the side of the stage were shown, each setting being approximately fifteen feet in width. On one side was the alcove arch of the Palace of the Dawn, while on the opposite end of the stage was the philosopher's lodging house of Broken Souls. Following this the great velvet drapes closed on the setting at the end of the stage and the curtains in the middle of the stage were raised. In the center was the scene of the oasis of El Shebar. The back drop represented the wide expanse of desert sand with lighting effects which created a beautiful sunset. Pastimes of the people of the desert were shown and finally a Fellah dancing girl appeared and entertained the party who had stopped for the night.

"The Palace of the Dawn" and "Lodging House of Broken Souls" were secured from Producer Reid and were the same settings used in the production of "Sahara." The oasis setting was prepared at the Edwin H. Flagg Scenic Studios of Los Angeles. The entire programme was staged under the personal direction of Managing Director Henry Leonhardt of the California theatre.

The interest aroused by this pretentious stage setting and prologue was productive of one of the biggest weeks in the history of the California and proved the feature of the bill, in spite of the fact that Los Angeles is used to elaborate stage settings in the motion picture theatres and takes them more or less as a matter of course.

The prologue beginning with an enactment of the desert pastimes and finishing with the dance number was greeted with rounds of applause and held attention throughout its somewhat lengthy presentation. Excellent actors were secured to take the parts and attention in detail was given the costumes. The patron might easily imagine that he had been transported to the actual scene of "Sahara" and therefore an atmosphere was provided for the film which could not have been supplied in any other way.

Strand of Providence Raises Admissions

IT is coming just as we knew that it must: the raising of admission prices concurrent with Selective Booking. One of the first instances to be recorded from out of town is that of the Strand theatre, Providence, R. I., where the new scale will read, after Labor Day, for the evening shows 25, 35 and 50 cents, with matinees at 10, 15 and 25 cents. War tax is included in these prices.

Like a good showman, Charles N. Williams was diplomatic in the way he informed the public of Providence that the prices of seats at the Strand were going up. He didn't take the bull by the horns and boost his admission without using some exploitation explaining why it was necessary even if he didn't tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth to his patrons.

Just the way Mr. Williams broke the "glad news" to Providence and "eased" them into the right humor for the first time they came down to ante up some extra centimes for their tickets to the Strand is shown by the accompanying ad.

The advertising was the work of D. Gus Schneider, the press agent of the house, who has been spending Mr. Williams' money freely recently. The Strand uses much advertising space because the manager believes in it—in the right way. His latest efforts are a work of art from the advertising man's standpoint at least.

More Co-operative Advertising on "Red Lantern"

THE New Grand Central theatres, operating in Minneapolis and St. Louis have been very successful in co-operating with the Woolworth and Kresge five and ten-cent stores, in advertising "The Red Lantern."

In the Kresge store in St. Louis, there was, besides a clever window display of the song, a young girl dressed in Chinese costume. She appeared in the window, announced that she would sing the song downstairs—and the crowd outside jammed the establishment to buy. Excellent window displays in the Woolworth stores in Minneapolis and St. Louis, in connection with the music sale, were highly profitable both to them and to the manager of the New Grand Central.

At the theatre itself, Amelia Burnette, the well known soprano, sang "The Red Lantern" before the showing.

The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

Ancient One Lung Flivver, Long Since Forgotten, Is Resurrected to Exploit "Better Times" at Los Angeles

THE Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, has presented an example of exploitation extraordinary in the exhibition of an early model Ford car that could still be induced to run, for the engagement of "Better Times." It is true that the theatre had to borrow the car of the producers, it having been used in making scenes in the picture, but nevertheless the stunt was one of the biggest advertising hits in the Western metropolis where motion picture events of all kinds have become so common that people take them as a matter of course.

The "ballyhoo" for "Better Times" was used on the streets and places where there were big gatherings of people. The accompanying illustrations were photographed at Ascot Park, Los Angeles, where auto races under the auspices of motion picture stars were being held for the benefit of the actors' fund, on which occasion Zasu Pitts, the featured player, served as the chauffeur.

The sensation of the day was the entrance in one of the races of the famous old first model Ford. With Zasu Pitts as the driver the rickety old car bumped around the track careening from left to right to set the thousands of spectators laughing. The car carried a big sign identifying it as "Brentwood's Better Times Flivver.

In the exploitation of "Better Times" on the streets of Los Angeles the antiquated "Henry" rattled and jerked its way about town, skidding around corners, narrowly averting collissions, and occasionally stopping dead still. Every time it stopped and the young lady driver climbed out and started to work on the motor with a sledge hammer and other queer tools while a big crowd collected. On the car was the slogan "Boost for Better Times."

Cards with the slogan were posted about the city but did not identify the advertising as that for a motion picture. Most people thought that it was advertising for Los Angeles and one of the stunts "pulled" which helped give people this idea and became one of the big features of the advance campaign was the distribution of stickers to automobilists to paste on their wind shields. "Boost for Better Times" were the words on the stickers and every auto in town carried one, the autoists believing the stickers of the Los Angeles boost the town movement.

By the time the announcement of the booking of "Better Times" at the Symphony was made hardly a person in Los Angeles but what had heard of the ancient flivver and had taken notice concerning the "Boost for Better Times" advertising which had been done in the teaser campaign.

The "flivver" which stopped all traffic in Los Angeles whenever the car stopped, which was frequent

If you are a judge of facial expression look closely at the two occupants of "Henry"

Consequently when the title of the film came out in the newspapers and went up on the electrics at the Symphony, "Better Times" had a prestige that could hardly have been established for it in any other way.

The announcement of the engagement was made for August 4, and the film is still showing to crowded houses.

The scheme for putting "Better Times" over in Los Angeles has been so successful that from all over the country come reports that other managers will attempt to duplicate the stunt and in consequence, coincident with the booking of the film ancient one lung flivvers long since abandoned to their unhappy fate have been dug from barns and towed to the garage for repairs sufficient to induce their rusty, creaky parts to turn and their worn out antiquated motors to produce power enough for a last trip down, not up, the boulevard in order that people may be stopped in their thoughtless mad rush through everyday life long enough to make mental note that a certain photoplay called "Better Times" is being played at a certain theatre.

Without doubt some wonders will be unearthed. We sometimes wonder what has become of the mator car of the early stage of the industry. With this stunt we will probably find out where some of them have been hidden these fifteen years.

From Lincoln, Nebraska, comes the information that the manager of the Colonial theatre in that city has found one which he claims is the original "Henry" and that it is now being overhauled for duty in the "Better Times" run in that city. We will write the Colonial for a photograph and a full account of his publicity campaign on the feature and if it will "come through" another photographic relic in motor cars will be produced for your curious gaze.

Incidentally those who are going to borrow this idea for use in their exploitation of the feature are not only invited but urged to have the photographer around when the machine gets in action and to send us a full account of what happens.

Another Franklin Ad Which Just "Demands" Space

THIS ad of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, looks so very attractive that we have decided to reproduce it without any great amount of comment, except to call your attention to a pen picture of William S. Hart which is a gem. The chap who drew the figure and desert background is entitled to full credit as an artist. It hardly seems possible to the laymen that so much of this star's personality could be gotten into a pen picture. Manager Franklin is fortunate in having secured the services of so able a man, as we assume that he does not do the actual drawing of his ads himself, although we do know that the ideas for his displays originate in his own particular head.

A snapshot of one of the typical crowds which clamored to get inside to see Mack Sennett's bathing girls, while "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" was playing at the Broadway

How Ascher Put Over "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" at the Broadway

IF an exhibitor who wants evidence that exploitation which is out of the ordinary pays he has but to look at the history of the past eight weeks at the Broadway theatre, New York, a house which has never been known to play a film to a net profit until "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" moved in.

If this is true then there is but one reason for the Broadway's phenomenal success and that was the Mack Sennett Bathing Girls, and the publicity given the theatre through them.

The presentation of the girls in conjunction with the film was first tried out at the Tivoli, San Francisco, where it was so successful that the New York engagement was secured.

One of Mack Sennett's beauties in her true environment

The New York run proved even a greater success than the San Francisco engagement and there can be little doubt but that much of it is due to the live wire methods of handling publicity.

This department was in charge of E. M. Ascher, who came on from the coast for this purpose. However, that does not harm the logic of our story considered from the standpoint of the theatre. The point is that exploitation put the film over in New York and San Francisco and it will do the same thing for Oshkosh.

During the eight weeks of the Broadway engagement eight different stunts which resulted in columns of newspaper space were engineered to success.

The first stunt that Mr. Ascher arranged for was the arrest of the girls at Coney Island. Although this was prearranged and was to be just for a publicity stunt, the girls were actually arrested, held in cells for three and one-half hours and when arraigned before a police magistrate were given a suspended sentence. This slip up lent flavor to the story and paper after paper gave it entire columns on the front page, to the story of the arrest. The next successful stunt that Mr. Ascher arranged for was to have two of the girls fly over the City of New York in a Curtiss machine, piloted by Lieut. Walter Hinton, who also piloted the NC4 across the Atlantic on its historical flight. While over Times Square the girls distributed 150,000 miniature photos of the Sennett Beauties.

The stunt that caused a near riot and compelled the fire department to close the box-office at 8:10 was Amateur Night, at which time the stage was converted into a regular motion picture studio and any member of the audience of the fairer sex could come up on the stage, put on a one-piece bathing suit and display their shapeliness to the admiring public. The pictures taken that evening were then shown the following week and the nine girls that were chosen as the best looking from the sixty contestants were given an opportunity to join one of Sol Lesser's road shows with the understanding that at the end of the tour Mr. Ascher would send them back to the coast to appear in Mack Sennett comedies.

Among the other stunts that were arranged for was a visit to Wall Street; a trip to Chateau Laurrie; the blocking of traffic at Broadway and Forty-third street, at which time the girls left their cars in their fancy costumes; a diving contest at Palisades Amusement Park, and then having Gleb Derujinsky model two of the girls for statuary. The statues are going to be made in plaster, which will be sold all over the country, giving the various exhibitors a chance to frame exploitation stunts in conjunction with the stores handling the statuary.

Another advertising scheme was the arrangement for one hundred and fifty of Liggett drug stores in Greater New York and Westchester County, to place colored photos of the Bathing Beauties (40x60 in.) in each of their windows.

The results accomplished in New York are being repeated in a smaller way all over the country where the film is being presented with the bathing girls as an extra feature.

It may be argued by some that the girls are part of the show the same as a chorus is part of a musical comedy, which is in a way true. However, reduced to the business getting end of things it is the bathing girls which brings the box-office receipts up to high water mark and as such it may be said to publicity stuff. Anyway, it gets the money and that is one thing that an exhibitor must always keep in mind.

Engages "Jazz" Band for "Upstairs"

WHILE running the Goldwyn, Mabel Normand picture, "Upstairs," at the Newman theatre, Kansas City, Manager Feld engaged a jazz band and played to capacity business. The band consisted of eight pieces and made an appropriate accompaniment for "The Ragtime Romance," as "Upstairs" has been termed. At a point in the picture where a jazz band was shown the screen was raised, disclosing the band on the stage. Two selections were played before the running of the film was resumed.

Mr. Feld is one of the live wires who always trys to find some new stunt which he can use for every feature he books. This is a fitting follow-up for his recent exploitation scheme on "The Firing Line" given space in a recent issue and which was productive of one of the biggest week's business in the history of the Newman theatre.

The Broadway at night time while housing the "bathing girls"

How New York Stages the Show

IF the current week's bills at the three Broadway theatres, the Rialto, Rivoli, and Strand are to be judged as a standard for photoplay to be released under the Selective Booking Plan, now effective, then Selective Booking is to be commended. Each theatre has a production for which it need make no apologies.

There is another feature of this weeks programs which is noteworthy. There is no slap stick comedy being shown which would bear out our recent observation that we are improving in our national taste concerning our photo-play entertainment. One theatre is using a comedy which perhaps comes closely to the type mentioned, but it is burlesque of a melodramatic plot making excusable some broad treatment of scenes and really has a story to be told in its sequences. In another house a substitute for a comedy has been found in a "kid" picture, and at the third a cartoon subject is being used.

We do not mean to infer that we approve of the elimination of comedy from picture programs. Rather do we think that the selection of shorter subjects, which at least try to present entertainment without undue resource to what a good many people term "vulgarity," is to be desired. During the high tide of slap stick vogue people laughed at pictures which were deserving of the term "vulgar" because of the novelty of trick camera work and the introduction into scenes of new business. Now that the library of the human mind seems to have been exhausted in these directions, the public is asking for a change. That New York at least recognizes this fact is evidenced by the tendency of the managers to give scenics and cartoon subjects place on their programs, and the continued bookings of multiple reel features of lighter variety.

The scale of admission prices at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres have been advanced to forty cents for the balcony seats, seventy-five cents for the orchestra rows, and one dollar for loges, with war tax paid. The usual percentage of reduction for matinees is, however, continued for the balcony and orchestra seats, making the admission for these shows twenty-five and forty cents, respectively.

Rivoli Theatre

DIRECTOR HUGO REISENFELD'S success with Lucius Hosmer's "Southern Rhapsody" as an overture some few weeks past has been instrumental in inducing him to use this same composer's second work of a similar nature, which he has titled "Northern Rhapsody," and which is builded along the same musical and technical lines as its Southern sister. It does not, however, make the appeal to the popular mind that its predecessor does, for the reason that the North has not produced the number of immortal melodies as has the South, and that the harmony of so much of Southern music is missing.

However, what the composer did for the South with his "Southern Rhapsody" he has done for the North in this composition, written a work which is a free treatment of motives and melodies dear to the hearts of the people who have heard them since childhood, especially those who have lived in the sections of the country from which the rhapsody takes its name. The principal movement is founded on the dances of old New England, developed freely and elaborately, and there is in its rendition, therefore, a cheerfulness and air of good spirits always to be found in the dance subject.

The rhapsody contains many of the Northern songs, including "Yankee Doodle," "Marching Through Georgia" and "Home, Sweet Home," the latter being given exceptionally free treatment. The martial finale is reminiscent of the old war songs, and builds to a splendid finish that stirs the blood. Even to the layman the overture impresses with the cleverness with which its harmonic parts have been knit and with its musical balance for orchestral use.

The Rivoli Pictorial opens with Kinograms showing more views of the Prince of Wales at Toronto, where he is accorded honors and officially opens the Toronto Exposition, with Gaumont following with an exceptional strip of fire scenes at Hyland, Md., where an oil plant burned.

Kinograms again contributes with a scenic strip, incidentally getting to be quite a usual thing for variety in weekly events at the New York houses. This subject is titled "Canadian Daisies," showing Canadian fields with the famous Canadian national flower in full bloom and pretty girls gathering bouquets.

Pathe's first strip is the recent "Baby Parade" at Asbury Park, with many of the pretty floats of this event shown, and is succeeded by International's views of the giant aeroplane which has made trial trips at Milwaukee and is capable of carrying thirty-six passengers.

The "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon is next, this week entitled "Switzerland, the Home of Swiss Cheese," and is incidentally one of the most entertaining products from this source yet to be conceived. The comedians are depicted as having engaged in the manufacture of cheese in Switzerland. The number is given the usual unique musical effects by the Rivoli orchestra, with trap drummer Manne contributing largely in this specialty.

Gaumont's views of the visiting Italian dreadnaught in Boston harbor follows the cartoon, with International contributing the demonstration of a new aeroplane parachute in New York harbor as the next strip, with views from Warsaw, Poland, showing the Polish city honoring aged veterans succeeding. This strip is also from International.

Pathe closes the reel with more views of the Allied Nations' Parade at Brussels, Belgium.

The third number on the program is a flute solo, with Lillian Kirksmith as the performer, accompanied by the orchestra.

For this selection Artist Wenger has prepared a tasteful stage setting. The stage backing is a canvas of a sunset sky suggestive of the desert in its colorings, green at the top and gradually blending into a full orange tint at the bottom. At the base of the canvas is a rather indefinite object which might be termed a huge rock which breaks the view in perspective, while from the wings and flies are colored vines projecting downward and masking the side walls of the theatre. To the left of the singer a figure of a man leans over a pedestal and listens enrapt to the music of the flute. The soloist is attired in a gown which matches the colorings of the canvas and with a spot centered about her presents a very attractive appearance.

The educational number is a new series of animal and jungle pictures by Paul Rainey entitled "In the Heart of the Jungle," which, however, is a misnomer, as most of the scenes shown in this first number of a series to be used at the Rivoli are not jungle, but rather the desert and water scenes.

The vocal number is Edoardo Albano, baritone, singing the Aria from "Faust." The singer was attired in evening clothes and was in good voice. He rendered his selection from the stage, on which a simple but pleasing setting had been prepared. For the back drop a fluted curtain in red was used, which was shaded to a dull yellow at the bottom. At the sides draperies in purple mask back stage. Potted cedars placed at each side of the back drop serve to dress the setting. A spot is used to bring the singer into visual prominence.

The feature photoplay is an adaptation of a

Lobby display for "Veiled Adventure" at New Garrick, St. Paul, Minn.

Peter B. Kyne story, "Valley of the Giants," a tale of the Redwood district of California, which, however, does not dwell particularly on the lumber industry except so far as to provide a logical reason for the building of a railway, the obtaining of the franchise for which forms the basis of the plot. Wallace Reid is starred in a congenial role with a notable supporting cast, including Grace Darmond and Charles Ogle. The direction is James Cruze's from a continuity by Marion Fairfax. The offering is melodramatic at times, but is never allowed to drift from the realm of probability or become unrealistic. A comedy, "Dangerous Dan McGrew," from the Christie studios, with Fay Tincher starred, is the eighth number. The offering is a burlesque of a melodramatic plot in which a modern Western town turns itself into one of the kind popularly known as "wild and woolly" for the benefit of one of its popular business women in order that an Easterner who would marry the girl to obtain a fortune left jointly by an eccentric uncle, may be scared into leaving precipitately for his New England residency.

The organ solo is "Marche Heroique," played by Professor Swinnen.

Rialto Theatre

THE overture selected by Director Riesenfeld for the Rialto this week is "Ideals," a symphonic poem composed by Franz Liszt, one of the most popular musical writers of his day, and one to whose works orchestras resort frequently for overtures and special selections for instrumental interpretation.

This work was composed in 1857 by Liszt for a performance in September of that year as a special event at the unveiling of the Goethe-Schiller monument, and was founded on a poem by Schiller. It is in several divisions—Ideals—Aspirations — Disillusion — Employment — and ends with an apotheosis. That the composer considered it one of his best cerations is evidenced by the fact that he adds a note to the score: "The firm adhesion to and therewith the ceaseless co-operation of the Ideal is the highest aim of life on earth. It was in this sense that I took the liberty of supplementing Schiller's poem by adding as closing apotheosis the jubilant confirmatory resumption of the motive which had gone before (in the first part)."

The second number is a combination of a scenic feature and a vocal rendition taking the place of the orchestra for the projection. The title of the film is "Come Watch With Me the Passing Night" a Post-Paramount subject largely night views of sky and clouds, beautifully tinted.

For this number a stage setting has been prepared, or rather two settings, one each side of the projection screen in the auxiliary arches. Both are scenic subjects on the same order as the film, being shown with sky and horizon in night time tints. The canvas on the left is especially artistic, since a water base has been so constructed that the light from a moon peeping from behind a wooded hill in perspective is scenically given the appearance of dancing over the ripples that a supposed gentle breeze is stirring upon the bosom of the lake. In the moonlighted sky fleecy clouds scud from back of the hill and out of the vision behind the draped curtains. So realistic is the canvas that it can easily be mistaken for an actual scene enacted by nature and not the craftmanship of the scenic artist, and also it outrivals the film scenes themselves, beautiful as they are. The eye continually wanders from the picture to the canvases, which is in itself an evidence of how closely stage craft has been able to reproduce the appearance of God's creation.

As the number fades out the floods are changed to scarlet, to again fade into the screening of the Rialto Magazine.

This number opens with Pathe's scenes concerning recent celebrations in Belfast, Ireland, in connection with the signing of the Peace Treaty, with Gaumont's "Annual Baby Parade" at Asbury Park following.

These strips are succeeded by the "Happy Hooligan" cartoon, this week entitled "Where Do the Foothills Get Their Shoes?" A rather humorous conception of the typical "Hooligan" type.

The recourse to current events is made with a Pathe strip showing the parachute drop from an aeroplane. The reel closes with Kinograms' views of the girls who were candidates for film honors at the recent contest at Roslyn, N. Y., getting their first tryont before the camera.

The Ampico reproducing piano demonstrated recently at the Rivoli is given place on the program at the Rialto, rendering "The First Movement in Concerto in A Minor," with Marguerite Volavy as the invisible soloist and the orchestra accompanying. As a novelty the number is interesting, and there is no trace of the mechanical piano in the rendition. However, the personal element of the musician is lost, and after the curiosity of the spectator is appeased one begins to wonder why the use of an Ampico if it is necessary to have a pianist, and why hide her when an audience would prefer seeing her in person?

The feature photoplay is "The Misleading Widow," adapted from the stage success "Billeted," with Billie Burke starred. The production is a farce comedy, a very suitable vehicle for Miss Burke's particular talents, those of looking very pretty and sweet and registering the ingenue, or as some more vulgarly express it, "just chicken." The film was directed by J. S. Robertson and the scenario is by Frances Marion. The original play is from the pen of F. Tenneson Jesse and H. M. Harwood. James L. Crane and Frank Mills are two well known players who are in support of Miss Burke.

The sixth number on the bill is a combination of the orchestral and vocal in the rendition of "Sweethearts," by Victor Herbert. The song is rendered by Gertrude Early, a soprano with a small but pleasing voice.

The fact that the feature picture is a comedy has induced the management to substitute Baby Marie Osborne—who incidentally isn't so small any more —in "Baby Marie's Roundup," for seventh place, and therefore the program contains no comedy in the sense usually applied to the shorter length films which have no greater appeal than laugh producing situations.

The organ solo is "Day Break," from the "Peer Gynt" suite, played by Arthur Depew.

Strand Theatre

THE STRAND is also choosing a selection from the compositions of Franz Liszt this week for orchestral rendition, the "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2" being utilized as the overture. The work is one of Liszt's most popular compositions, ranking with "Hark, Hark, the Lark," "Lorelei," and "Liebestraum," and has been given an excellent rendition by the Strand orchestra. There are times in the rendition of the composition when almost a dance tempo is evidenced, and at others a plaintive sadness is felt. The reeds and strings are used largely in its playing, with the brass coming up strong only at intervals. Near the close the overture dwindles to a piano solo, played by Eric Zardo. For this portion the house and pit, which have been fully lighted, are darkened and the soloist is placed in an amber spot.

The Strand Topical Review opens with International's views of Major Orde Lees using his parachute from an aeroplane, and is succeeded by Pathe's scenes of the Irish Peace Celebration at Belfast, with Kinograms coming in with a strip concerning the arrival of the Italian dreadnaught in Boston harbor.

A Bray scenic and educational strip is injected to follow this scene. The title is "The Samoian Follies," being a treatise of the Samoian natives' dances. This is followed by the "Topics of the Day," compiled by the Literary Digest.

The next strip is a semi-scenic piece showing Moe Mark visiting Hap Ward, with a flock of tame-wild ducks at Mr. Ward's summer place coming in for footage.

Kinograms succeeds with views of the giant aeroplane at Milwaukee, and Pathe closes the reel with three strips, the Prince of Wales at Toronto, the Allied Nations parade at Brussels, Belgium, and aeroplane races at New York.

The third number is Eric Zardo in piano solos (a) "Prelude in C sharp minor," and (b) "Operatic Fantasy."

The feature picture is "The Hoodlum," a Mary Pickford offering long heralded as a fitting successor to "Daddy Long Legs." "The Hoodlum" is comedy drama, with Miss Pickford returning to the type in which she first gained renown before the days of super features. A well selected cast of types are in support of the star.

The vocal number is "Largo Al Factorum," from "Barbiere di Siviglia," sung by Bruce Weyman.

A scenic is given place as the sixth number, and is a new Outing-Chester entitled "The Honorable Mr. Jap Van Winkle," being a Japanese subject with a slight plot about which the scenic views have been photographed.

The comedy this week is a cartoon offering from the Bray studios entitled "Out of the Ink Well."

The bill closes with the organ solo "Concerto Scherzo," played by Ralph Brigham and Herbert Sisson alternating.

Academy of Music

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC show this week opens with the overture divided in two parts as usual, the first being a characterisque, "The Evolution of Yankee Doodle," and, as the title suggests, is a selection built about the famous march song with what are commonly known as "variations" used effectively. The number cannot be termed a classic, but it serves as a novelty, and the second part by the strings, "Lion du Bal," will satisfy those who desire more music and less noise for their overture. The first selection is by Lake and the second by Gillet.

The International News Weekly is a carefully compiled reel of late news events, and is followed by the "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon comedy, "Sound Your A," made a feature last week at the Rivoli. This has been edited to fit the Academy of Music and is quite as much of a novelty there as it was at the uptown house.

The first feature is "The Boomerang," with Henry B. Walthall in the leading role. The picture is a melodrama adapted from the stage play of the same name. The subject is one of stock exchange manipulation, deals with the problem of high costs of living, the efforts of a food trust to make millions at the expense of the public. The feature is a timely subject, but is rather overdrawn, depicting a condition which as yet has never existed in this country, and doubtless never will, at least to the point which this picture relates.

Following the feature is a Fox comedy, "Her First Kiss," a slap-stick production of the usual quality of the Sunshine releases.

The second instrumental number by the orchestra is (a) "Solemelle, 1812," by Tschaikowsky, played by all pieces, and (b) "Love's Dream," by Cozzibulka. Both are meritorious musical compositions and rendered in good taste.

The second feature is Wallace Reid in "The Love Burglar," a comedy which has proven a very successful vehicle for this star.

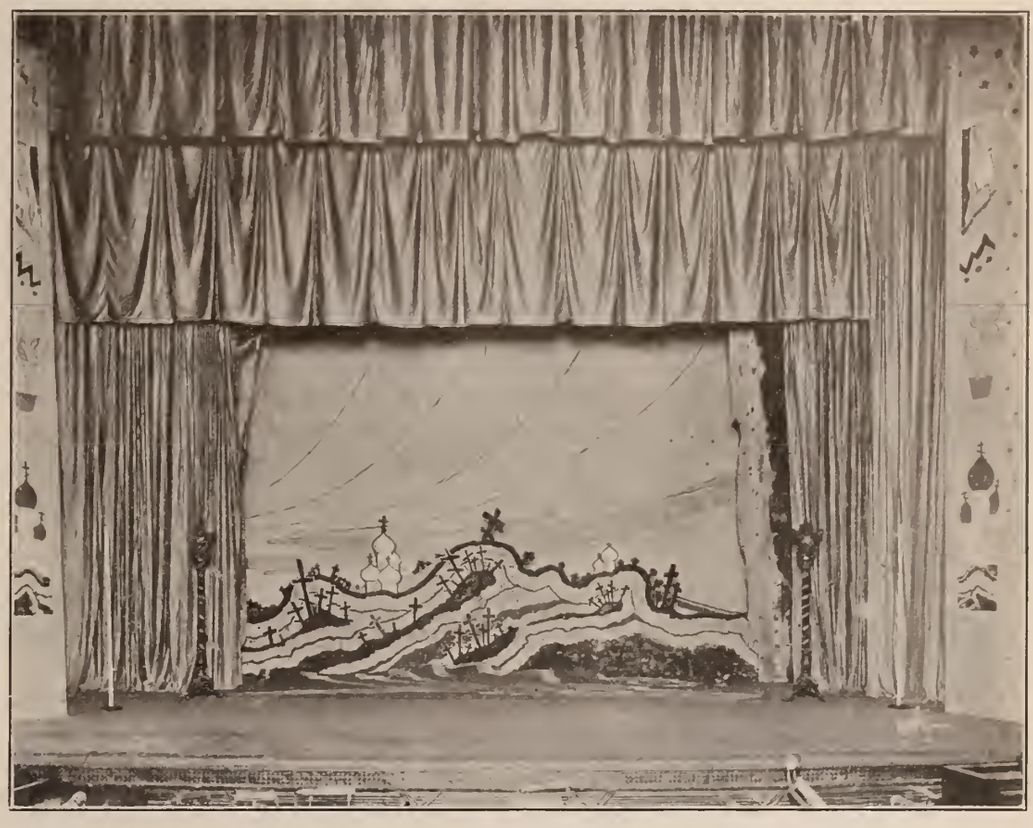
The second comedy is "Don't Shove," a slap-stick production with Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels starred. The skating rink is used for the filming of most of its sequences, a truly humorous background for broad comedy.

The organ solo is "Friar' March," by Herbert, and "La Tosca," played by Victor Despommier.

For next week the features announced are "Evangeline," which moves from the Forty-fourth Street theatre, and "Love Insurance," in which Bryant Washburn is starred.

Rothapfel Arranges Elaborate Prologue

Former Rialto and Rivoli Manager Will Pilot Destinies of "The Right to Happiness" at the Park Theatre, New York



ARTISTIC presentation of feature pictures, especially in the matter of elaborate prologues and stage setting have to all intents and purposes reached a much higher stage of development in the West than in the East with New York very badly in the rear ranks for the most part in the latter connection, so it is with considerable local pride that we seize on the presentation of the "Right to Happiness" at the Park theatre, New York, as an opportunity to tell of a stage setting and prologue, the creation of S. L. Rothapfel, which rivals if not surpasses those of Los Angeles where the idea originated and has thrived most largely.

Stage settings are not unknown to Broadway but they are given for the most part to provide atmosphere for musical numbers or for smaller films like a scenic and it has been the custom to screen the feature picture without any attempt to add to its entertainment value by extra attention.

It is naturally to be expected that if Rothapfel attempted some out of the ordinary he would not be satisfied with just making a fair showing, and in the setting and its attendant prologue for "The Right to Happiness" he has justified the belief that he is one of the foremost showmen in the country. When the film titles of this picture, tremendous drama although undeniably propaganda are screened, the audience has been treated to what is practically an opera and during its full fifteen minutes of presentation has been unconsciously tuned for enjoyment of the picture in a manner that could not have been accomplished in any other way.

The presentation of "The Right to Happiness" opens with the display of the stage setting, consisting of a canvas drop depicting a Russian night sky with the lights carrying out the idea of the cold light of a moonlighted night in this far Northern country. In front of the drop is a scenic set piece purporting to be a mound of considerable area on which a burial ground has been established. Down its precipitous sides, "rivers of blood" are flowing, symbolical of the history of Russia where the story of "The Right to Happiness" begins and from which it obtains its excuse for the abnormal traits of its principal character.

The set is lighted so that only a vague outline

The stage setting for "The Right to Happiness" at the Park theatre, which, however, fails to reproduce as was expected is visible and this is continued throughout the first part of the musical accompaniment and later the effect of a terrific storm is given by the use of lights. Lightning flashes in absolute realism light the canvass and the dull rumble of thunder readily transports the mind of the spectator from the realm of the theater, to that depicted by the scenic creation.

Before the eye of the spectator tires of viewing the stage setting, the mind and musical senses are appealed to, when a quartet of male voices begins singing compositions of that wonderfully appealing Russian music, which has such a hymnlike note and carries with it a mystic, sublime suggestion that has identified itself with the music of the Russian church and through this influence has permeated all the compositions of the land.

There are times when this music drifts to the minor strains which the uneducated musical ear is hardly able to determine from discord but for the most part the singing is harmony of the sort which has always made the male quartette a musical favorite.

The music is heard but faintly at first, but is gradually increased in volume until it suggests a mass perhaps in some great stone, ancient cathedral just hidden from view of the spectator by the walls of the theatre. From full volume the notes are again reduced to but a faint murmur of the melody and dies out as the picture is screened.

There may be those who argue that such a prologue is tiresome, that such stage effects are but a waste of time and money, that a film either fails or succeeds because it is dramatically good and therefore view the attempt to provide an atmosphere which aids in the picture's natural appeal, as wasted energy.

Those who make this claim, however, have never studied human nature. They do not know that deep down in the souls of most individuals is a great love for music which they themselves do not fully realize and that at heart pretty nearly everyone is an embryo artist loving the beauty of blended colors and possessing an innate enjoyment in the scenic canvass which is well done.

It is said that as a film house the Park has never been a pronounced success. If, therefore, "The Right to Happiness" is due for a long run in this theater as seems likely we believe that it is the prologue and stage setting as arranged by Mr. Rothapfel which will have a big influence in the film's success.

The Fiction Mart

A Service Department for Producers and Studio Executives

¶ Each week in "The Fiction Mart," MOTION PICTURE NEWS will publish brief synopses of the latest novels made available for motion pictures.

Should any particular story have especial interest producers and studio executives may secure further information upon inquiry to "The Fiction Mart." Then, if it is desired to proceed further, we will gladly undertake any preliminary investigations or negotiations that are requested.

This service is without charge and part and parcel of MOTION PICTURE NEWS service to the industry.

"The Wine of Astonishment"

"THE WINE OF ASTONISHMENT," by Mary Hastings Bradley, is a story of Chicago life and Chicago people.

Jim Clarke, son of a High School professor, living on the old West Side yields to eighteen-year-old curiosity and joins four youthful friends in an investigation of the bright light district and is seen at a disreputable dance hall in company with a young woman whose character and profession are beyond doubt by Mortimer Peebles and Christopher Stanley, members of a vice commission. Though Jim is a simple sight-seer on this trip the comparative innocence of his adventure in night life is not known to these men.

After this one dip into the Tenderloin Jim Clarke refrains from further investigation and goes away to Amherst College where he meets and falls in love with Evelyn Day, a North Side girl and a student at Smith College. A boy and girl affair springs up between these two, laughed at by the girl's mother, an ambitious widow who has already planned Evelyn's marriage to Christopher Stanley, very rich, very idle and very much in love with Evelyn.

Evelyn, persuaded that she can do great things for her mother and sister as Christopher's wife, finally yields to their persuasion, breaks off with Jim and become engaged to Christopher. She encounters Jim at the seashore and is persuaded by him that she has done wrong in engaging herself to Christopher whom she admits she does not love. She returns to the city determined to break her engagement to Christopher and to marry Jim, but Christopher not only threatens suicide if she throws him over but also tells her of seeing Jim in disreputable company at a dance hall. He does not explain that this occurred years before. Evelyn writes Jim that all is over between them and consents to marry Christopher on the distinct understanding that she will be his wife in name only.

They are married and when Jim learns the status of their marriage he tells Evelyn that she has no right to remain Christopher's wife in name unless she is his wife in fact. He urges her to either give up Christopher and marry him or to give herself to her husband utterly. Evelyn decides to take the latter course and tells Christopher who plans a honeymoon trip but drops dead of heart failure brought on by excitement.

Evelyn now becomes engaged to Jim but when they come to seek living quarters she demands an establishment more expensive than he can afford and he refuses to make use of the money which was left her by Christopher.

Jim enlists and after a period of training is sent to the front where he serves until the armistice which finds him in Paris unharmed but downhearted. He seeks diversion with a Parisian light-o'-love but is deterred from carrying out this plan by the thought of Evelyn. He pleads illness and rushes out leaving the astonished French woman staring after him. On the street he encounters Evelyn who has followed him to France in the hope that she might find him and make up to him the years he has wasted in waiting for her love. Evelyn agrees to live on Jim's salary and Jim agrees that if necessary he can bring himself to live on Christopher's money. And so they are married.

Lantaigne and Menzies-Kerr are lured to a house near the German Embassy by Nordeg and there confined and threatened with death if they do not deliver the true map. Tennant rescues them and discovers that both murders have been committed by young Lantaigne, who was convicted of giving or selling to the Germans certain papers which were really stolen by Nordeg. In the fight which accomplishes the rescue Nordeg is fatally wounded and admits his guilt. Young Lantaigne, who has also been captured by the German agents of Nordeg, admits that he killed Jarvet for blackmailing his mother years before and for sealing Lantaigne's lips by threatening to expose a love affair with his mother if he did not accept the blame for disclosing the military secret in question—the plan for an automatic spring increasing the range of the great guns.

With this confession is cleared away the barrier between Tennant and Mademoiselle Lantaigne, who had refused but now consents to marry him.

"A Pagan of the Hills"

"A PAGAN OF THE HILLS," by Charles Neville Buck, has for its hero Alexander McGivens, who in spite of her name and mannish costume, is a girl. Old man McGivens having made up his mind to a son, called the girl Alexander and brought her up as a boy. Later a son is born to him, but this son is lacking in the manly qualities possessed by the girl.

The story opens with the shooting of McGivens by Bud Sellers, an amiable enough young man when sober, but a bad man when drunk. Alexander swears to avenge her father, but on his death-bed he makes her promise that she will not start a feud and also makes her promise this on behalf of her brother Joe.

To secure timber for the dam which her father was building when shot, Alexander decides to make the trip down the river on a raft. Brent, a business man from the city, makes the trip on Alexander's raft with her crew. On the trip Jase Meadows jocosely proffers Alexander a drink from his flask, but she tosses it into the river.

At Coal City, the end of the run, Alexander seeks shelter at Kelly's tavern, where she must pass through a room filled with drunken lumbermen. Lute Brown, a drunken swaggerer, tries to thrust his bottle upon her, but Alexander draws her gun and at this moment a huge man comes forward from one of the side tables and throws Lute Brown out of the way. He offers to find the landlord for Alexander—an offer which she accepts. This is Jack Holloway, a rich young man, unmoral rather than immoral, who seeks diversion disguised as a native of the hills. He is recognized by Brent who warns Holloway not to trifle with Alexander.

Lute Brown knocks over his lamp and sets the hotel on fire. Bud Sellers comes to warn Alexander of the fire and is followed by Brent and Holloway. They jump from the window to the limbs of a sycamore tree nearby.

The following day Brent offers to pay Alexander for the timber which she has brought down the river and she asks for cash—a sum of four thousand dollars and more. Holloway warns her not to try to carry this much money over the hills. Lute Brown, Jase Meadows and others, learning of the payment, plan to waylay her in Wolf-pen gap. Holloway hears a telegraph message sent in regard to this. Holloway organizes a posse including Brent and Bud Sellers to protect the girl without her knowledge, and arranges with Jerry O'Keefe, a detective, to take a hand in the capture of the bandits.

The girl is captured and a mock trial for witchcraft is begun by the bandits, the plot being that Jase Meadows would effect a fake rescue, thus gaining her approbation, while the money would be stolen.

Holloway, meanwhile, has been taken by surprise by Wicks, the telegraph operator, who is working with the bandits and is handcuffed and locked in the baggage room of the station. Brent, in search of him gets a message clicked out by the rapping of Holloway's handcuffs on the wall.

Alexander, meanwhile, being unbound, shoots out the lights of the mine shaft in which she is confined. Later she finds that all of the men have left, but have taken her saddlebags. She is shortly found by Brent and O'Keefe and they are joined by Holloway, still hand-cuffed, who has escaped from his captors. It develops that Bud Sellers was entrusted by Alexander with the money and that her own saddle-bags were empty. Bud carries the money through to atone for shooting her father.

Then begins a rivalry for the girl's love between O'Keefe and Holloway. Alexander accidentally discovers the tailor's label in Holloway's coat and so learns that he is not a mountaineer.

The men concerned in the robbery of Alexander have recognized O'Keefe and trap him in a grain elevator, setting fire to it. Alexander opens the wheat shaft and Jerry escapes through this as the last of the wheat runs out—just in time to escape death from the flames. Alexander nurses him back to health and chooses Jerry as her life partner.

DIRECTORS AND SCENARIO EDITORS WILL WELCOME THIS NEW SERVICE

"THE FICTION MART," which makes its bow with this issue, is a new department to still further increase the service rendered by Motion Picture News to producing executives and their directors and scenario editors.

This new department is a direct response to the present-day needs of the industry. It is our answer to numerous requests for aid that have come from production heads. Believing that these requests indicated the need of a central agency comprehensively and completely covering the publishing field as a source for photoplay material "The Fiction Mart" has been established.

Experienced and competent publishing experts will conduct "The Fiction Mart." The service rendered will be three-fold:

First, each week on these pages "The Fiction Mart" will give a comprehensive review of the latest fiction; a brief synopsis of each novel, conveying the high lights of the story, the characters, the locale, and other information desired by directors and scenario editors.

Second, should further details be desired concerning any of the stories, the name of the publisher, availability for motion pictures, etc., this will be furnished without charge upon inquiry to "The Fiction Mart."

Third, the experts conducting "The Fiction Mart" are at all times at your call,—AND WITHOUT CHARGE. They are thoroughly conversant with the publishing business, and can be of immeasurable aid to you in conducting your preliminary investigation regarding any of the novels listed, the owners of the screen rights, probable price, etc.

In a word, "The Fiction Mart" should become your "right-hand man." It will save you many weary hours attempting to keep in touch with the latest novels published; it will lift from your shoulders the worry caused by the fact that you are not able to COMPLETELY cover the field. And it stands ready to render any service in connection with the fiction publishing field that you may request.

Simply address: "The Fiction Mart," Motion Picture News.

"Joan"

"JOAN," by Amelia E. Barr, is named for Joan Darcy, the daughter of an old English family, long since fallen from its high estate. Her father, Stephen Darcy, at the time of the story is a superintendent in the coal mines belonging to Squire Straon. Between the Darcy's and Straon's there exists a traditional friendship which has been handed down from generation to generation. Originally the two houses were on the same social plane, but the Straons have kept their wealth and power, while the Darcy's have been gradually degenerating until in Joan there suddenly blossomed forth a beautiful flower, worthy of the old stock from which she sprang.

Squire Straon is a lonely widower. Called to America on business, he tells Joan that he loves her and she promises to marry him on his return.

Joan's fortunes undergo a sudden change with the return of her uncle, a rich, eccentric man who has spent most of his life in the United States and who now returns to end his days in England and with the avowed intention of restoring the Darcy Manor House—the old family home. He makes Joan his heiress and she immediately becomes a person of importance, filling her new position with the same quiet dignity with which she formerly cared for her father's modest cottage.

Labor troubles develop in the mines. Agitators come from other parts of England, strikes are precipitated and general distress results. Joan organizes the wives of the miners. The women band together and fight the instigators of the strike, threatening, if necessary, to act as strike-breakers themselves, rather than see their children suffer from lack of bread. Their threats are successful and the strike is ended.

Squire Straon returns to find that Joan has saved his fortune and his properties and they are married, thus uniting the two old families.

"Spanish Doubloons"

"SPANISH DOUBLOONS," by Camilla Kenyon, is a curious comedy of treasure hunting, with numerous thrills and a love story running through it.

Virginia Harding, officially the ward and unofficially the guardian of her Aunt Jane, a simple and romantic soul, has shipped her aunt to New York to recover from the effects of a blighted love affair; the niece having discovered that a fascinating suitor for the hand of her aunt is an imposter.

Virginia receives a letter from her aunt stating that she has met a wonderfully sympathetic soul in Miss Higglesby-Browne, an Englishwoman, who has seen better days, but who has in her possession a map of Leeward Island in the Pacific, where pirates are supposed to have buried treasure. This map has come into the possession of Miss Higglesby-Browne in a London hospital and Aunt Jane has consented to finance an expedition (which she joins) to hunt for the treasure. She invites her niece to write her at Panama, where the party will embark for the last lap of the journey.

Instead of writing, Virginia hastens to Panama and boards the ship just as it is about to sail. The captain refuses to put about and Virginia is carried along with the rest of the party, which includes the Honorable Cuthburt Vane, a very handsome young aristocrat, Dougald Shaw, a celebrated polar explorer, hired to command the expedition; H. H. Tubbs, self-styled Wall Street financier; and Captain Magnus, the navigator, an ill-favored ruffian.

With the addition of a colored cook, this is the party which lands on Leeward Island and sets up camp to look for the treasure. It develops that Miss Higglesby-Browne has only the most meagre data on which to proceed—a description of a cave where the treasure at some time has been concealed and the marking of a rock where it may now be hidden.

Virginia, being sceptical, and as Miss Higglesby-Browne describes her, "a disturbing element," has many wordy battles with the other members of the party, including Dougald Shaw—her only sympathizers being the Hon. Cuthburt, who immediately falls in love with her, and the cook.

Virginia, doing some searching on her own account, is trapped by the tide in a cave and rescued by Dougald Shaw, who, in the excitement of the moment betrays the fact that he also is interested in her. Virginia discovers that there has been another recent searcher after the treasure, who has left behind him a diary and a bull terrier. The diary tells of the whereabouts of the treasure.

At this point the camp is invaded by Captain Magnus, supported by three disreputable sailors whom he has sent to the island by another boat, with the intention of seizing the treasure. Captain Magnus takes charge of the camp, ties up the men with the exception of the cook and declares his intention of carrying Virginia away with him as soon as the treasure is secured.

The cook succeeds in getting the guards drunk on cocoanut wine and releases Shaw and Vane, who turn the tables by capturing the mutineers and confining them in a cave.

At this point appears a representative of the Republic of Santa Marina, who declares that the island and everything on it belongs to the Republic, and further states that the treasure has already been surrendered to the Republic by the last searcher—the young man who left the diary.

The mutineers are turned over to the Santa Marina authorities. Virginia, following her own intuition and certain hints given in the diary, with the aid of Dougald Shaw, unearths the apparently empty treasure chest and finds that it has a false bottom containing a fortune in precious stones. At the same time she and Dougald Shaw declare their love for one another and all ends happily.

"The Winning of Lucia"

"THE WINNING OF LUCIA," by Amelia E. Barr, is the story of a young girl's love.

Lucia Ragnor lives at Abbott's Rest, where she has been making her home with her father, Colonel Ragnor, and goes to Glasgow to spend the winter with family friends. Here she meets Mr. St. Clair's nephew, Geoffrey Gardiner, who lives in the house, and he falls violently in love with her.

One of their neighbors in Sadalside was Lord Fenwick, formerly a friend, but now a bitter enemy of Colonel Ragnor. He also has fallen in love with Lucia's charm and fresh beauty.

The love story concerns the triangle of the two men in their contest for Lucia. Lord Fenwick has wealth, position, is a polished man of the world, and has much to offer; his rival is a younger man of sterling qualities but less physical attraction.

Lucia becomes fascinated by Lord Fenwick, despite the fact that he is a much older man. She finally becomes engaged to him in the face of much opposition on the part of her father.

Lord Fenwick is called home by the severe illness of his mother. A letter comes telling of Lord Fenwick's past life, and stating that he has for many years been in love with another woman; that he is the father of her two boys; that the affair has been more or less an open secret; that he has always supported the woman in a comfortable manner and is at present educating her boys at good schools. Lucia faces this ugly problem, but decides that after all Lord Fenwick has acted in a brave and open manner, that he has not neglected and cast aside the woman whose life he might have ruined and that he has done his best to atone for the injury he has done to the mother of his boys by giving them a start in life. She says that she could never forgive a man for cowardice or treachery, but that the virtues of the man are not necessarily those of the woman. In spite of this knowledge of Lord Fenwick's past, she decides to stand by him and marry him.

In the meantime Geoffrey has been pressing his suit. He, too, admires Lord Fenwick, although he realizes that he is a successful rival for Lucia's hand. Lord Fenwick sails from Scotland on a small coast steamer, which has been over-insured by its captain, who takes advantage of a storm to scuttle his boat. Lord Fenwick takes control of the shipwreck, shows the greatest personal courage and heroism in saving the lives of others, but loses his own.

This news is brought to Lucia by Geoffrey and, in their horror at this catastrophe and in their admiration for Lord Fenwick, they find mutual love and happiness in each other.

W. H. Plans Handling of Serial

"The Mystery of 13" Is to Have a Strong Campaign

PLANS are rapidly forming in the W. H. Productions offices for the distribution of "The Mystery of 13," following last week's announcement that W. H. had been chosen to handle the Louis Burston feature. Word is expected to shortly be given out as to the exact method to be followed in releasing this serial. It may be regarded as certain that W. H. will inaugurate a country wide publicity campaign on behalf of the feature, advance reports on which indicate that it is one of the best serials yet put on the screen.

Burston himself, in line with the new battle cry, "campaign books minus book," has announced that his serial would have a real campaign book. This book, which will tell of the sailent selling points of the Francis Ford serial, will go a great way in the exploitation.

In the production, cutting and titling of "The Mystery of 13" no expense or trouble has been spared. Mr. Burston personally supervised the direction of the picture, and the "teaser" advertising campaign brought it forcibly to the attention of the country, so much so that on the first real public announcement of the serial Burston Films were literally deluged with inquiries.

W. H. Productions promise to exploit the feature in such fashion that exhibitors are bound to clean up when they show it. A strong selling point is the cast, headed by Francis Ford, than whom there are few more experienced serial actors or directors in the business.

"The Mystery of 13" was made with the purpose of being offered on the open market as an independent production, and this purpose was never lost sight of during the production. The claim is made that it is the first serial to be specially made for the open system. It was Mr. Burston's idea that fabulous sums need not be spent on a successful production, thereby raising the rental prices to exhibitors, and the soundness of the idea is said to be demonstrated in the finished product. At the same time expense was no bar toward securing exactly the effects desired.

Early announcement from W. H. Productions as to its plans for handling the serial is expected.

Arrow Handles "Lightning Bryce"

Joe Brandt Announces Consummation of the Deal

AN important announcement has been made by Joe Brandt, special representative of the National Film Corporation of America, to the effect that after studying the conditions of the independent field carefully for a number of weeks he has decided to place the handling and distribution of the newest big serial, "Lighhtning Bryce," in the hands of the Arrow Film Corporation. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, and his staff of associates reviewed "Lightning Bryce" recently, and immediately decided that it is one of the best serials ever produced. Little time was lost in effecting a satisfactory arrangement, and the serial will be placed on the independent state right market at once.

Both Joe Brandt, who has had years of experience in the serial field, and W. E. Shallenberger, who has also had considerable serial experience, are agreed that in "Lightning Bryce" they have a serial that will class with anything that has ever before been produced along these lines. Ann Little, the Paramount star, who was borrowed by National especially to make this serial, and Jack Hoxie, the Western star, are two stars who are bound to increase their already large following by their clever and unusual work in "Lightning Bryce." These two stars are typically "Western." They have lived the life of the plains for years; both are wonderful riders, being able to do all the "stunts" required of serial riders with ease and grace.

"Lightning Bryce," unlike many serials, is said to have a story running throughout. The story was written by Joe Brandt himself, and there is action, suspense, and thrills in every chapter, it is said. There are many unusual touches to this serial that places it in a class with the big "Special features." It is expected that "Lightning Bryce" will play in many big houses that heretofore have not been partial to serials.

Joe Brandt upon being interviewed as to his reason for finally deciding to distribute "Lightning Bryce" through the state right channel of distribution, said:

"When I became associated with Bill Parsons it was understood that he was to gamble on my experience that there were a great number of houses who wanted to book serials but could not because of inconsistent stories, ridiculous situations, and cheap productions, and mediocre direction.

"Parsons followed my advice, and did produce a feature serial, which is entirely different than any of the serials that have been produced before.

"Cairo street" in the Goldwyn studios. Lou Tellegen, Geraldine Farrar and Reginald Barker are inspecting the boulevard which is the stage for many scenes in Miss Farrar's present production

Capellani Subject on Pathe's Program

Womanly virtues are placed on a pedestal, in the Albert Capellani production, "The Virtuous Model," starring Dolores Cassinelli, which headlines the Pathe releases for the week of September 14th.

"The Virtuous Model" is an adaptation of Pierre Wolff's play, "The Gutter," which has an international reputation. The Capellani version has been dressed in American garb, but at the same time its Parisian atmosphere is preserved in its entirety. The production is said to give a true picture of Paris of today, with all its pathos and feeling.

Miss Cassinelli, as in her previous Pathe release, is surrounded by a capable cast, which includes Helen Lowell, May Hopkins, Vincent Serrano, Franklyn Farnum, Marie Chambers and Paul Doucet.

The picture was personally directed by Albert Capellani.

Kosloff, Russian Dancer, with Lasky

Theodore Kosloff, premier Russian interpretative dancer, has signed a contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and will become a member of Cecil B. DeMille's company, according to a recent announcement made by the officials of that organization.

This announcement marks Kosloff's second venture in the screen world. His only other work before the camera was as a member of Cecil B. DeMille's company in "The Woman God Forgot." He is to appear in two forthcoming DeMille productions, probably including "Why Change Your Wife?" the next DeMille special.

Although Mr. DeMille's plans are incomplete, it is understood that Kosloff is to play one of the two big male roles in a super-production which DeMille is planning to film later in the season.

Sessue Hayakawa is here presented in various scenes, and varied costume, from "The Illustrious Prince," his latest production which Robertson-Cole will distribute through Exhibitors Mutual. Rarely if ever does the Japanese star disappoint the fans, and this production is heralded as being on a par with any of his former pictures

Equity Reports Garson Studios Active

Reports to Equity Pictures Corporation from the Harry Garson Studios indicate great activity from this producing quarter.

Clara Kimball Young is rapidly completing what is said will be the greatest production this clever screen artist has ever appeared in, will be finished in about two weeks time. Two more weeks will be consumed in cutting and editing, and the picture will be ready for release about October first.

House Peters, in "Love, Honor and Obey" the first play by Monte Katterjohn, to be released through Equity by Harry Garson is well under way, and will be ready for release the latter part of October or first of November.

President Somborn is still in Los Angeles preparing for the first release date and going over other multitudious details with Mr. Garson before returning east, while Joseph Schnitzer, who has made a hurried tour of the various franchise holders in the middle west, is expected back in town this week, when the first announcement will be made as just what exchanges will distribute Equity Pictures throughout the country.

"The Sweet Shop," the third Charles Dorety comedy, has been completed for market on August 15. It was directed by Charles Parrot, and included in the comedian's support were Sid Smith, James Parrot and a number of pretty girls.

Studio Facilities Are Augmented

INCREASED production for Robertson-Cole is resulting in the enlarging of the studio facilities of the companies producing for that organization. Present facilities will of necessity be greatly enlarged in order to provide space enough to make enough pictures for distribution by Exhibitors' Mutual, according to Robertson-Cole's schedule.

Both Haworth and Brentwood have already announced plans for additions to their plants. Brentwood recently purchased the ground lease and complete studio plant in Hollywood, Cal., which it has for some months past rented from the Mena Film Company. The consideration is understood to have been $45,000 for buildings and equipment alone. The price paid for the ground lease, which covers a long period of time, has not been made public.

The property comprises three and a half acres fronting on Fountain avenue, and running from Berendo to Catalina streets. It is more than a half block in depth. The plant and one open air stage was built by the Mena Film Company for the production of such parts of biblical stories as could be taken in this country. War prevented the trip to Palestine so production was stopped in this country and the plant leased to Brentwood.

Since taking over the plant almost a year ago, Brentwood has made in it three features for Robertson-Cole. Its measure of success and the increased number of pictures it will produce for Robertson-Cole for distribution by Exhibitors Mutual has led to plans which will more than double the present floor space. Only about a half of the available ground space is at present occupied, leaving plenty of room for the extensions.

Feeding Companies for Robertson-Cole Enlarge Plants

Withing a short time it is hoped to have buildings and equipment ready to make it possible for two companies to work at the same time. Present facilities meet the needs of only one company.

Haworth will expand its production activities threefold during the coming year in order to meet the Robertson-Cole demands, and the studios will be enlarged proportionately. It will be necessary to have floor space available for three or four companies instead of one as heretofore. As Haworth does all its interiors under lights this means the construction of a building large enough for three stages and the necessary equipment. William J. Conery has just returned to the Coast to supervise the enlarging of the Hollywood plant. The work is to be pushed to the utmost as at least two companies will be working by the middle of September. By that time both Sessue Hayakawa and Edith Storey, Haworth's latest addition to the list of Robertson-Cole stars, will have started work on current releases.

Further Endorsement of "World Aflame"

Frank Keenan's "The World Aflame," has run another bull's eye on a gubernatorial endorsement. I is his His Excellency Gov. J. A. A. Burnquist of Minnesota, who is the latest to add his name to the long list of governors who believe "The World Aflame" to be the lesson of the day.

The endorsement was evoked recently when the Keenan picture had a private view in Minneapolis, probably the last time it will be shown to an invited audience before its release to exhibitors.

"Hall Room Boys" Paper

In line with their policy to supply exhibitors with the best in the way of advertising and exploitation material Jack and Harry Cohn and Joe Brandt have had the Otis Lithograph Company prepare some exceptionally fine paper for "The Hall Room Boys" comedies.

Omaha Makes Screen Bid to Fame

Universal Industrial Film Made with a Local Star

OMAHA folks have known for some time that out there in Nebraska that they have a perfectly good city. It has done great things in the way of commerce, business and social intercourse with other civic communities.

The folks of Omaha came to the conclusion that their town was too good for it to continue with its light under a bushel, and it decided to advertise. It resolved to inform the rest of the United States that Omaha had all the earmarks of its sister metropolises in the East, down to the minutest detail.

And that is the reason that Harry Levey, general manager of the Industrial and Educational Departments of Universal, sent a complete staff of cameramen and directors to the Nebraska city, with instructions to produce the best motion picture ever screened in which a city and its bids to fame and glory were to be the backbone. The company has returned to New York with nearly 5,000 feet of exposed film, in which the civic beauties of Omaha have been woven into a pretty love story.

The director's first task was the finding of a leading woman. Omaha backers of the project had insisted that a young woman of that city be used in this capacity, and assisted the director in every manner possible in locating a suitable type. Both the director and the city were fortunate in obtaining one of the most beautiful young women in the city, who at the same time was a member of one of the most prominent families. She is Mrs. E. John Brandies, daughter-in-law of Omaha's leading business man, and wife of the present manager of the city's largest department store. Mrs. Brandeis had had previous experience in pictures, and served quite satisfactorily in the leading female role. She is a relative of Supreme Court Justice Brandeis. Jack Marvin, of New York, played the leading male role.

The prologue depicts the arrival at Omaha of the Lewis and Clark expedition in 1804, and its meeting with the Oteo Indians, which inhabited that teritory at that time. From that time, the picture unfolds until the modern city is seen, with a beautiful love story its most interesting feature. Another explorer—a young aviator—arrives in Omaha from the east, and recognizes in Mrs. Brandeis the beautiful young nurse who had brought him back to health and life in a French war hospital. She recognizes him, also, and there follow many happy days.

All of Omaha's great business enterprises, all its architectural beauty and its great causes for a bid for fame, are shown during the remainder of the picture. Mrs. Brandeis was photographed more than 500 times during the taking of the scenes, by news photographers, so that her picture appeared in practically every newspaper of importance in the west.

Under Mr. Levey's supervision this picture will be presented all over the United States.

Scenic Grandeur for Farnum Picture

The most recent William Fox release starring the forceful William Farnum, the drama by E. Lloyd Sheldon, "Wolves of the Night," is claimed to be a distinct scenic victory and producer. In line with this achievement, Fox Film Corporation has determined to make "If I Were King" Farnum picture, based on Justin Huntley McCarthy's famous play, as big in scenic value as it will be in dramatic power.

To this end, J. Gordon Edwards, the director is personally supervising the work of the art and scenic departments in preparing the period backgrounds for the story.

Barriscale Offering Opens Theatre

Bessie Barriscale's latest picture, "Her Purchase Price," a Robertson-Cole feature distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, has been selected as the opening feature for the New Moon theatre, Omaha, Neb. Manager R. S. Ballantyne was so favorably impressed with advance reports on "Her Purchase Price" that he wired Exhibitors Mutual for a print to be available for use at the formal opening of the theatre.

Swedish Biograph Plans a Studio

A Picture City Equal to Any in Country is Now Planned

BUILDING a movie city equal to any in the United States as far as equipment is concerned, is the latest announcement of the Swedish Biograph Co., of Stockholm, with offices in New York, under general management of Mr. E. Mattson.

In an interview with a representative of the NEWS, Mr. Mattson made the following remarks:

"The closing of the present war has enabled us to carry out our plans of production for the American market. In our new studios which are almost completed, and located in Rosunda City, Sweden, we will produce fifteen special features each year, twenty-four two-reel comedies, a series of cartoons and several serials. In addition to this we are making scenics and we now have a company working in the jungles of South Africa, making a serial of hunting pictures. The last named will be released on the Serial plan, with a heavy advertising campaign to make it a special attraction."

In speaking of the possibilities of the foreign picture in this country, Mr. Mattson said: "We fully realize the foreign-made picture is quite an undertaking in placing on the American market, but simply because they are not suited to the tastes of the American people. Our productions will, however, be produced for this market, and every new idea in photography, sets and general make-up of the pictures will be Americanized."

When asked if he believed the exhibitor in this country was ready for the foreign picture, he said, "The Girl From the Marsh Croft" recently sent over here, was the first production offered for sale. After a screening, the negative was sold the same day to the Mickey Film Co., of Chicago, who intend retitling and releasing on a state right basis. In my eight years experience in this business, I find that it is not a question of where the picture was made, but a matter of quality and value of production. 'The Girl From the Marsh Croft,' run for eight weeks at Tremont Temple, Boston, to packed houses, which speaks for its self."

The plan of distributing film in this country by the Swedish Company will be to sell out-right the negative right for the entire United States and Canada, and under this plan they are offering for sale four productions of six to eight reels each.

Many Attractions in "Crimson Shoals"

In addition to the "mystery" element which is a feature of "Crimson Shoals," the Monopol Pictures Company production starring Francis Ford, it is claimed that the film contains five distinct spectacular scenes which for impressiveness and interest have rarely been surpassed. Ford appears in the most remarkable characterization of his long screen career, playing three separate parts at the same time. This is made possible through the medium of the finest double and triple camera exposures ever seen, according to the sponsors for the picture.

Among the spectacular features which mark "Crimson Shoals" as an unusual feature photoplay may be mentioned the running fight on the lonely island between the coral thieves and the employees of the company, which gives opportunity for thrilling leaps across chasms, headlong falls down mountainsides and several hand to hand encounters, the blowing up of a submarine, which is accomplished by the dropping of several tons of dynamite from an areoplane flying overhead, the struggle for control of the wireless station on the island, and a daring rescue on the part of Ford from drowning of the girl whom he afterwards marries.

Kashin Now Controls Screen Letter Box

Morris A. Kashin, Daddy of the Screen Letter Box, the clever little novelty that met with success throughout the country, announces that he has bought out Jack Cohn's interest in the company producing this weekly short subject.

This gives Kashin entire control of the company. Production of the Screen Letter Box from now on will be made exclusively under his personal direction and supervision.

George Walsh Presented in "From Now On"

Next in order of the "big author" pictures that William Fox has announced in his season's program, comes "From Now On," starring of "The Miracle Man." "From Now On" is scheduled for release September 28. This production is said to be the biggest thing Walsh has yet attempted.

Realart Creates Department

Bert Adler to Handle Exploitation-to-the-Public on Large Specials

REALART Pictures again proved its announced intention to assist the exhibitor taking its product when a department for the exploitation-to-the-public of Realart "specials" came into being this week under the charge of Bert Adler, well-known New York publicity man, who was lured from his own business for the new work. The first picture for special handling by Adler is Allan Dwan's "Soldiers of Fortune."

"We have fashioned the new department along new lines," said President Kane of Realart. "It will not exist in the sole interest of our branch offices of first-run customers. It will aim to get the money for our specials as long as they book. Mr. Adler has been engaged by us in the interest of all exhibitors.

"Some of the best local exhibitors have been glad to pay Mr. Adler, while he was conducting his publicity business, large sums for tiny ideas. Our customers now get such service absolutely gratis. Where Mr. Adler cannot be on the ground to give it, a representative imbued with his ideas will help the customer. Realart pictures must make money for the booker, or Realart will know the reason."

The creator of the new department ran a general agency in the Candler Building, Manhattan, for two years and a half, of which the advertising branch, handled by Adler exclusively, enjoyed particular prestige. Among its clients have been Inter-Ocean Film, The Manx Man Company, "The Better 'Ole," Arrow Film Corporation, Graphic Film, Educational Film, "My Four Years in Germany," "Chapin's Lincoln Cycle," "Who's Your Neighbor?" and several important executives, directors and exhibitors. Mr. Adler's principal client was Inter-Ocean Film, whose President Paul H. Cromelin gave him a farewell dinner at the Hermitage, August 28th at which the following were present: Louis Brock, Robert A. Foster, Gus Schlesinger, Leon Schlesinger, Mayer Schlesinger, Ricardo Castro, Paul H. Cromelin and J. L. Kempner.

Release of "Broken Blossoms"

United Artists Corporation Announces Griffith Film as Next Release

UNITED Artists Corporation announces as its second release D. W. Griffith's achievement, "Broken Blossoms."

Mr. Griffith's decision to make "Broken Blossoms" available through United Artists Corporation's distributing organization follows close on the remarkable bookings written by the "Big Four" on the first Fairbanks production, "His Majesty, the American."

The response of exhibitors to the sales policies and distributing methods of United Artists Corporation has apparently given Mr. Griffith the assurance that "Broken Blossoms" will, through the "Big Four," receive the distribution and exploitation that will give the leading theatres the country over every advantage in its presentation.

"Broken Blossoms" as a production beggers description. Motion picture trade papers and daily newspapers have accorded it what is unquestionably the most spontaneous and sincere approval that has been given a picture. It is needless to add praise where so much has been said.

It is certain that in the discussions that "Broken Blossoms" has aroused and in its admitted advance in the art of the camera a wave of anticipation has gone over the country that will redound enormously to the advantage of the theatres that will now have the privilege of showing it.

When it is remembered that all the plans for Mr. Griffith's repertory season in New York were set aside by popular demand in order to continue the run of "Broken Blossoms" at prices ranging as high as $3.00, something of the possibilities before the theatres of the country can be realized.

Bookings on "Broken Blossoms" are now being accepted at all of United Artists Corporation's Distributing Depots.

Graphic Picture May be Seen on Stage

In order to get maximum publicity for his new production, "Someone Must Pay," which he made for the Graphic Film Corporation, Director Ivan Abramson has now under consideration an offer made him by producing managers for the stage rights to his new play.

Should the deal be consummated the opening of the play on Broadway will in all probability take place simultaneously with the release of the film in a neighboring house.

As nearly as possible the original cast, which includes Gail Kane, Edmund Breese, Jackie Saunders, Hugh Thompson, Jere Austin and Baby Dorothy Arnold, will be engaged for the stage version.

"Virtuous Men" Given Wide Circulation

Arthur H. Sawyer, of S-L Pictures, stated this week that "Virtuous Men," their initial state right attraction, is being distributed in every section of the United States and Canada with the exception of New York, Eastern Pennsylvania, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Florida. The various purchasers who control "Virtuous Men" throughout this country are all enthusiastic concerning the box office qualities of the S-L production. Practically every buyer of the picture has placed it for runs of one week and more in the leading theatres in his territory and in several instances repeat dates have been demanded by exhibitors who have broken house records with the exhibition of the film.

Apfel Busy on "Me and Captain Kidd"

Oscar Apfel in making his production of "Me and Captain Kidd" in which Evelyn Greeley is the star and which will be released by World Pictures, is taking in quite a number of seashore resorts for locations of the maritime scenes of this picture play. The entire company were taken by special boat to Block Island and after several days at this historic island sailed to the Maine coast, near Portland harbor.

Sidney Dudley, Raymond McKee, Arthur Donaldson, Charles Mackey Logan, Paul and Pauline Dempsey are the more important members of the company.

Eighty Percent High Class Houses Book Paramounts

Such Is the Statement Issued Following Reports on Success of the New Season's Paramount Week

SEPTEMBER 1 marked the opening of National Paramount-Artcraft week, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's "drive for better motion pictures," which opened that company's distribution year of 1919-20, and in which it will be possible for practically every person in the United States who lives in or within convenient distance from any town of 5,000 or more—in many cases less—to see Paramount-Artcraft pictures at his favorite theatre.

Approximately 4,000 exhibitors are co-operating in the big drive to the extent of using Paramount-Artcraft pictures exclusively in their houses for a solid week, providing a block of more than 25,000 days of showings under the familiar nationally advertised trademarks.

The first National Paramount-Artcraft Week a year ago registered the biggest amount of gross business in the history of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the salesmen of the various exchanges had a high mark to shoot at this year, but it is stated at the home office that the present week shatters the old record by a wide margin. Nearly three weeks ago, the statement says, several of the exchanges had to refuse further bookings, for every available print in their vaults had been contracted for use during the entire week, and in many instances the reserve vaults in New York had been drawn upon.

The big newspaper advertising campaign of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation played the leading part in making the week a success. In the issue of the Saturday Evening Post, which appeared on the news stands last Thursday, there was a full-page announcement of the week to the general public. Then the schedule of newspaper advertising called for ninety full-pages at the opening of the week in as many cities. The campaign also called for extensive advertising in 375 other newspapers, covering practically every city in America of more than 10,000 population. In the co-operative scheme as worked out, the space was to run at least a half page, and in most cases a full page. Lithographs, trailers, slides, etc., were furnished free to all exhibitors, with the object of enabling them to make the biggest week's clean-up in the history of their theatres.

Many of the exchange organizations worked out special exploitation stunts of their own. In New York, for instance, the week was inaugurated with an airplane flight over the city. Dorothy Dalton, as a passenger distributing from the air free tickets to theatres co-operating. These flights will continue daily throughout the week.

Practically eighty per cent. of all the first-class theatres in the United States contracted for the solid week. Following is a partial list selected at random of the representative houses in New York and Chicago:

New York—Rialto, Rivoli, Broadway, Geo. M. Cohan, Proctor's 23rd St., Proctor's 58th Street, Proctor's 125th Street, Loew's Lincoln Square, Greeley Square, Victoria, Boulevard, National, American, Orpheum, Burland, Delancey, Avenue B, New York City; Keith's Greenpoint, Keith's Madison, Loew's Metropolitan, Dekalb, Fulton, Palace and Warwick, Brooklyn; Proctor's Yonkers, Albany, Portchester, Mount Vernon, Schenectady; Keith's, and National, Jersey City; Albany Theatre, Schenectady; Stratford, Poughkeepsie; Griswold, Troy, Palace, Saratoga Springs, Stratton, Middletown; Regent, East Orange; St. James, Asbury Park; Temple, Union Hill.

Chicago—Butterfly, Toy, Milwaukee; Apollo, Peoria; Princess, Quincy; Orpheum, Gary; Grand, Keokuk; Colonial, Rock Island; Orpheum, Terre Haute; Jewel, Burlington; Gaiety and Vaudette, Springfield; La Salle, South Bend, New Bucklin, Elkhart.

Wide Campaign on Pershing Film

General's Arrival in U. S. Marks First Shot in Drive

SIMULTANEOUS with the flaring newspaper headlines which will greet the Commander-in-chief of America's forces in the world war, General John J. Pershing, upon his arrival in this country, scheduled for September 8th, all branches of Fox Film Corporation will open a well-timed drive throughout the country on the big William Fox super-production, "The Land of the Free."

A big publicity and advertising campaign has been planned by the executives of the Fox organization to parallel the ovation which will be given General Pershing in New York and elsewhere, and everything possible has been taken in consideration by the motion picture producers to work their drive on this screen drama into the homecoming news surrounding the famous soldier.

The reason for this combined activities of the Fox executive staff is the peculiar significance which "The Land of the Free" has assumed with the return of the general. The basis of this dramatic production is the life of Pershing himself, founded on authentic information regarding his boyhood and school career, and leading up to his rise to the command of the greatest country in the world—the United States.

The central figure all through the picture is Pershing, and William Fox has planned to enable his patrons, the exhibitors, to avail themselves of this opportunity to answer a demand which the people themselves will create with the return of Pershing to his native land.

Based on a biographical sketch of John J. Pershing, Mr. Fox has erected a tribute in pictorial drama under the title of "The Land of the Free," eulogizing the character and portraying the life of the man whose name has become a household word in America since this country entered the great conflict.

In planning this nation-wide campaign, Fox Film Corporation has instructed its branch offices throughout the country regarding the details of the general's history and the facts concerning the gigantic photodrama, and has arranged a system whereby all exchange managers will be prepared to work in unison in their respective territories.

A maximum booking on this special feature is expected by Fox in view of the fact that many live-wire exhibitors, who were quick to realize the importance of a picture of this kind at this time have wired long in advance for the earliest dates possible on "The Land of the Free" in advance of the drive, thereby pulling the cork, as it were, before the party was seated.

These theatres are being cared for in proper order, without conflict with the plans as originally outlined.

Ince's Aid in Fire Prevention Recognized

Thomas H. Ince, photoplay producer, has been made an honorary fire chief of the Pacific Coast. The honor was conferred a few days ago during an assembly in Los Angeles of the fire chiefs from the principal cities on the Pacific coast.

With a patriotic spirit Mr. Ince turned over to the fire chiefs all the resources of his moving picture studio in Culver City to prepare an educational film to encourage fire prevention. This was made under the direction of Mr. Ince with all the fire chiefs participating, and it will be shown in public schools, women's clubs, civic organizations, churches and fraternal organizations throughout America. In recognition of his patriotism and his generosity the fire chiefs unanimously elected him honorary chief and presented him a chief's gold badge.

Strong Cast Plays in "Six Feet Four"

Jackson Gregory, the author of the novel of American life, "Six Feet Four," which the American Film Company, Inc., has just put into pictured form, has abundant reason to feel satisfied with the way in which his work has been put in celluloid.

William Russell carries with fine regard for its values, the stellar role of "Buck" Thornton, otherwise Six Feet Four. He is supported by a cast including Vola Vale, Charles K. French, Harvey Clark, Clarence Burton, Al Garcia, Jack Brammall, and Jack Collins.

In Blackton Subject

To the long list of screen stars who were initiated in the art of film acting and launched on their careers by J. Stuart Blackton, pioneer producer, whose productions are to be released by Pathe, must be added the name of Fanny Rice, comedienne, who appears in "The Moonshine Trail."

Little glimpses from three Realart pictures now in course of production: Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables"; Emile Chautard's "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" and Constance Binney in "Erstwhile Susan"

Several Promotions in Selznick Studio

Myron Selznick announces two important promotions in his studio staff. Frank Hampton, who has been business manager at the studio, has been made studio manager, and James Dent, who has been Myron Selznick's assistant is moved up into Hampton's post of business manager.

Both men are prominent figures in the film world. Hampton joined the Selznick forces on the Coast and came East with them. He has been associated with most of the largest producing organizations and knows the game by experience from A to Z. Dent was Director Ralph Ince's assistant for four years and before that assistant to a number of other well-known directors.

Virtus R. Scott, a newcomer to the Selznick forces, has been appointed assistant to Myron Selznick, filling the position formerly held by Dent.

ZaSu Pitts Drawing Critics' Attention

The real human interest in "The Other Half." Brentwood's latest Robertson-Cole Superior Picture distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, is due in no small measure to the acting of ZaSu Pitts in the role of Jennie Jones, "The Jazz Kid." Her work has met with especial commendation from the various motion picture critics.

"Brat" Open to Big Business

California Theatre, Los Angeles, is Reported to Have Its Biggest Monday

"YOU will undoubtedly be interested to hear that 'The Brat' opened yesterday to the biggest Monday's business in the history of our theatre."

The foregoing is the opening sentence in a telegram to the New York offices of Metro Pictures Corporation from Fred A. Miller and Harry Leonhart of the New California theatre in Los Angeles. The telegram, filed on Tuesday, August 26, continues as follows:

"We anticipate the establishment of a new box office record with this production; all of this in spite of the fact that the street railway and interurban service is paralyzed by a strike. This record substantiates our judgment that 'The Brat' is Nazimova's greatest and most satisfactory achievement. Congratulations."

It was only recently that the California theatre booked the latest Nazimova production, as well as the first three Screen Classics, Inc., specials to be distributed by Metro under its "fewer and better" pictures policy, although the three, with Bert Lytell, May Allison and Viola Dana as the stars, will not be released for several weeks. Mr. Miller took the pictures "sight unseen," so great was his faith in Metro's pledge of quality pictures that challenge comparison.

The New California's pre-release opening with Nazimova in "The Brat" for a week's run was a brilliant affair, attended, as is always the case in Los Angeles when a new Nazimova production has its premier, by a large gathering of stars and other players of the coast picture colony. These sereen players invariably pay ungrudging tribute to Nazimova's greatness.

Meanwhile, from Julius K. Johnson, manager of the New Garrick theatre in Minneapolis, W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro, has received the following wire:

"I have just screened Nazimova's 'The Brat,' which in my opinion is her best production. I am going to put my best effort on same and I cannot fall down, as the picture speaks for itself. It is a superb picture, played by a superb star."

English Knight Film Leader

Goldwyn Pictures Said to Be a Factor in Success of Sir Oswald Stoll

SIR OSWALD STOLL, founder of Stoll Film Company, Ltd., in London, through which Goldwyn Pictures have been handled in the United Kingdom ever sinee their inception, two years ago, has assumed the dominant place in the motion picture world that he has long occupied in the vaudeville field, where his position in England resembles that of the Keith interests in this eountry.

Knighted by the King a few months ago and relieved of his war duties, Sir Oswald has returned to a more aetive supervision of his extensive theatre, motion picture and vaudeville interests. With the expansion of the motion picture business that is expected to come in peace times, the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., possessing unequalled ehannels for distribution, is enlarging its organization to handle the Goldwyn product.

For a number of years Mr. Stoll remained aloof from pictures, and it was only after he had been convinced of the superiority of the Goldwyn product, two years ago, that he decided to add the distribution of films to his already extensive activities in the amusement world, and obtained an exclusive contraet for the distribution in the United Kingdom of Goldwyn pictures. His success with Goldwyn photoplays in Great Britain has been wide. Goldwyn stars have become popular favorites throughout the British Isles and frequently are the featured attractions at the foremost theatres of the United Kingdom.

East Indian Villages Built for Picture

H. B. Warner's next picture, "For a Woman's Honor," presented by Jesse D. Hampton and released by Robertson-Cole as a Superior Picture distributed by Exhibitors Mutual had to have a section of a city of India and a Hindu village to provide the necessary locale.

The staging not only necessitated the building of two streets of an Indian city and a village but also the erection of some especially elaborate stage interiors with their artistic, picturesque Hindu atmosphere. The exteriors of these buildings abuts the streets. They are one and two stories in height and their facements are accurate according to Hindu standards. Several well educated Hindus were employed as assistants to the technical director in order to insure accuracy in every detail.

Arrow Production in Circuit Houses

Nathan Hirsch, who is handling the "Law of Nature," an Arrow production, in New York, reports that he has booked this pieture in all of the Loew theatres, as well as the Fox Circuit. Mr. Hirsch states that "The Law of Nature" has already received over a hundred and fifty bookings, and predicts that this picture will have a long run in the big theatres in New York.

Griffith Pictures Get 200-Day Booking

Albert L. Grey, general manager for D. W. Griffith, is the possessor of the following letter from Archer Brothers, prominent amusement firm in Chicago:

"We hereby accept your offer to play D. W. Griffith's 'The Mother and the Law' and 'Hearts of the World' for four hundred days, two hundred days each.

"We wish to say to you that this is the biggest contract we have ever given to anyone for any picture, and bigger than any contracts we ever have known to be given on any two pictures.

"We feel, however, that both these pictures are great productions."

Meantime the Griffith offices in the Longacre Building are buzzing with business on another Griffith feature, "The Fall of Babylon," which at present writing is being shown as a regular 'road attraction' on the Klaw and Erlanger circuit. Immediately following its present tour it will be offered to exhibitors.

Famous Makes Deal with Morosco

New Arrangement Gives It Option on Many Stage Plays

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of productions, has announced the acquisition of another great source of play material in an arrangement just closed with Oliver Morosco, the noted producer of the "legitimate" stage.

Under this contract the producers of Paramount-Artcraft pictures obtain an option on plays produced by Mr. Morosco in the past and on all plays which he will produce in the future for a term of years.

While a complete list of the Morosco plays affected by this arrangement is not available at this time, it is announced that the first Morosco success to be turned over to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the screen under this contract is "Cappy Ricks."

Dramatized by Edward E. Rose from the stories by Peter B. Kyne, "Cappy Ricks" was one of last season's New York hits. It drew crowds for six months at the Morosco theatre and only the advent of hot weather caused it to close for the time being. This season the play opened at the Cort theatre in Chicago and for two weeks did S. R. O. business, with a promise of a successful and indefinite engagement, but the theatrical strike forced it to close. It is Mr. Morosco's plan to reopen immediately the strike situation is cleared.

"The arrangement with Mr. Morosco," said Mr. Lasky at his office last evening, "is a most important affiliation and affords us the opportunity of presenting in motion picture form some of the greatest stage successes the theatre has ever known. Not only does this agreement give us an option on many famous plays that are already established prominently in the public's eye, but it will open up to us the vast amount of material of Mr. Morosco's future triumphs for a long time to come. We will produce these subjects on the screen in a manner that will be entirely in keeping with the Morosco standards, using every facility and talent at our command to duplicate the success of the original stage offerings.

"The matter of obtaining material suitable for high-class motion picture production has become a difficult problem which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been able to overcome by reason of its wide affiliations with publishers and play producers, the newest and one of the most important of which is the arrangement with Mr. Morosco."

One of the younger of the most prominent theatrical producers of America, Oliver Morosco is also one of the most successful. He has long been noted for his ability to pick winners and his record in the past shows that he has had fewer failures than any other Broadway producer. The signing of this contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was one of his last transactions here before returning to the West Coast.

Chance for Photographers on Fox News

From Pell Mitchell, of the Fox News Pictorial staff, comes the cry that he is still in search of a few more good live-wire camera men to complete the photographic staff of this growing organization.

Mr. Mitchell, who is the most recent addition to the force under Herbert E. Hancock, head of the Fox News, advises us that the recent full page ad carried by Fox Film Corporation brought many returns and that within the past two weeks many expert photographers have joined the Fox staff and been stationed at various points.

There are still several fine openings on the staff for more good men, who are wide awake and looking for real good money and the right kind of a job.

Exhibitors Travel Far to Book Pathe Serial

Journeying 542 miles through three states to book this Pathe-Western Photoplays serial, "The Great Gamble," six exhibitors from Northern Maine reached Boston last week and signed up for the Pathe product for one year. This is said to be the first time in the history of the motion picture business in New England that exhibitors from that section ever went to Boston in a body to arrange bookings.

Exhibitors Seeing "Desert Gold"

Hampton Production Is Now on View at Exchanges

EXHIBITOR receptions to Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" are said to have run true to predictions, both as to exhibitor liking and enthusiasm for this first Benjamin B. Hampton-Eltinge F. Warner Zane Grey Picture.

Managers of the W. W. Hodkinson organization in thirty exchange cities arranged for trade showings early in the week and these showings were largely attended both by local and out of town first run exhibitors at every point.

"Desert Gold" is, of course, offered to exhibitors on the single picture sales basis inaugurated last April by the Hodkinson organization.

This first production of a new organization, in which the author himself exercises the important role of supervision and assistance, is one of the challenging pictures of recent years in the industry. It reveals the entry of new talents into motion picture making and shows that men of established abilities in newspaper and magazine publishing have much to contribute to the advancement of the screen.

Mr. Hampton is a publisher of many years' experience and one keenly alert and sensitive to those elements that are necessary in screen drama to win popularity with audiences. Mr. Warner is the publisher of the Smart Set Magazine and Field and Stream, besides being the owner of several other monthly fiction publications of wide circulation.

In obtaining the services of T. Hayes Hunter to direct "Desert Gold" the producers demonstrated that nothing was to stand in the way of making the picturization of the greatest of Zane Grey's novels every bit as virile, thrilling and interest compelling as the book itself. Long prominent as a director on the speaking stage, having supervised many of David Belasco's biggest productions, Mr. Hunter has been equally successful on the screen.

The Messrs. Hampton and Warner were equally as painstaking and as fortunate in the selection of a company to interpret "Desert Gold." Such players as E. K. Lincoln, Margery Wilson, Eileen Percy, Russell Simpson, Walter Long, W. Lawson Butt, Edward Coxen, Arthur Morrison, Frank Lanning, Frank Brownlee and William Bainbridge, are in the cast.

"Desert Gold" will have its initial presentations in the larger American cities beginning immediately.

Wistaria Serial Sold for South America

Lynn S. Card, president of Wistaria Productions Inc., announces that the South American and Oriental rights to "The Lurking Peril," Wistaria's serial production, starring Anne Luther and George Larkin, have been sold for the highest prices ever recorded for these territories. The exact amount received for the Orient is not made known but Mr. Card states that it is in excess of $10,000, which foreign rights buyers say is the top price for serial productions in this territory. The deal was made with the Australasian Film Company, one of the biggest operators in the Orient.

The deal was consumated between President Card and a representative of Australasian following a recital of the story, the name of the director and the stars. Without seeing the film, the deal was closed.

Burton King, vice-president and director-general of Wistaria states that the serial will be ready for release in November, possibly the latter part of October.

Judge Brown's Third

The third of the series of featurettes produced by Judge Brown and which are being distributed by World Pictures bears the title of "Gum Drops and Overalls." It will be released October 13. The success of the two previous releases, "Shift the Gear, Freck," and "Demand of Dugan" has encouraged Judge Brown to enlarge his studio facilities so that it is quite probable that the number of his productions will be increased.

In "Gum Drops and Overalls" he has taken an experience of his while presiding over the Juvenile Court in Salt Lake City and given it a motion picture setting in which the Eternal Boy is made the star.

Ruffell's Exchanges Are Far Reaching

An accompanying photograph shows the Ruffell distributing exchanges in the British Isles. The Ruffell Syndicate was recently purchased by Vitagraph, who will take possession in October. The acquisition of the system places Vitagraph in contact with 800 theatres in the British Isles.

Hampton's Production Rules

"Give the Other Fellow a Chance to Make Money Too" is His Principle

"WHEN I chose Blanche Sweet as a special feature star, to select her own stories, to produce her own pictures, and do so in her own individual way, I only carried out the same business judgment and the same commercial principles that made so much money for the big and little dealers of the American Tobacco Company." So said J. D. Hampton, formerly of the American Tobacco Company, now president of the J. D. Hampton Productions, who is presenting the Blanche Sweet Pictures as Pathe Release Specials.

"When I first entered the motion picture field, three years ago, my friends told me that motion pictures were not a standardized commodity, that the same ideas that made money for the dealer in the tobacco line could not be used in this field. But they forgot one big thing that business principles are fixed like theorems and are the same in any commercial endeavor. The details differ."

"And so after three years of extensive and intensive study, which has taken me through the various stages and experiences of production, distribution and exhibition, I find the same basic formula holds just as true with motion pictures as with tobacco.

"Don't misunderstand me, I'm not comparing a high powered star, who by past performances and success, is entrenched in the interest and confidence of the public and exhibitors, with a cut-and-dried product that you buy across the counter. No. But I do say emphatically that if the exhibitor is to eliminate the hit-and-miss methods, and leave out the gamble at his end of the bargain, and if the Pathe salesmen are to eclipse sales records, and if the Blanche Sweet productions are to pay dividends—then it is imperative that we put into active operation the self same basic thought that has been so successful and brought in the money before. Simple, isn't it? Yes, and the principle is just as simple." Here it is:

"To give the other fellow a fair man's chance to make some money while you are making yours."

"Checkers" Draws Attention

Exhibitors Planning Big Exploitation on the Heralded Racing Drama

THE demand of exhibitors throughout the country for the massive production by William Fox of Henry Blossom's turf classic, "Checkers," daily stamps that photoplay as one of the sensations of the year. With packed houses greeting the all-star cast in this super-picture at the Central theatre, on Broadway, and at Teller's theatre, in Brooklyn, it is practically assured that every city and town will find this motion picture all that the producer promised it should be.

Toledo, well known for its love and patronage of sports, is soon to see "Checkers." Manager Horwitz, of the Colonial theatre, in that city, has seen the William Fox feature, and says unhesitatingly that it is the best feature of the year. It will open for an indefinite run at the Colonial in the very near future. In anticipation of monster crowds, Mr. Horwitz is making special preparations to handle them with the least possible delay and to furnish all the people with an opportunity of seeing what the manager endorses as the greatest film of the season.

Not less enthusiastic is the management of the Grand Opera House in Grand Rapids. Mrs. Billman, like Mr. Horwitz, is exploiting the Fox special with a vigor and intensity that will make known, for many miles around, its arrival in that city. Profiting by her experience, Mrs. Billman has undertaken a campaign of publicity in the newspapers of Grand Rapids, that will cover more than three weeks.

"Man's Desire" Going Strong

One Theatre Cancels Bookings to Run It; Is Considered Business-Getter

THE Standard theatre, Cleveland's big first run house, is the third theatre within two weeks to shelve other pictures to run "Man's Desire," the Robertson-Cole feature distributed by Exhibitors Mutual. The Standard had contracted for and paid for another feature but its manager after seeing "Man's Desire" booked it at the last moment.

The record of "Man's Desire" is said to be surprising even its boosters. Theatres that have run it as a special feature have reported capacity business notwithstanding the fact that Lewis S. Stone, the star, has not a big reputation in motion pictures. In fact, "Man's Desire" marks his screen debut though he has long been known for his excellent work on the legitimate stage.

Exhibitors, especially those drawing patrons from the residential districts, report that the success of the production lies in no small measure to universal approval on the part of the first showing audiences.

The interest of the story, written by Lewis S. Stone, and the varied and picturesque locale are believed to contribute largely to the growing success of the picture. It is a story of the lumber camps of the Northwest, where the mill owner marries a girl after her brutal husband is supposed to have been killed. However, it is a case of mistaken identity and he returns to wreck the happiness of the couple. The wife is abducted and the mill owner goes to the desert country after her. There the former husband meets his deserved fate and the lovers are reunited.

Houdini is "pinched" in the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Grim Game"

Thrills and Mystery in Serico Offering

While the widely read novel by C. N. & A. M. Williamson, "A Woman in Grey," now being produced as a serial by the Serico Producing Company, is best known for the absorbing mystery around which its plot is constructed, the picturization of the book will be by no means lacking in thrills, according to a statement from the company.

Arline Pretty, who, as "A Woman in Grey" is being starred in the serial, will be responsible, it is understood, for no little of the realism of the production as well as for the elements of mystery and romance with which it is said to abound, for in this instance contrary to the usual rule, it is the heroine of the story whose mysterious undertakings will keep audiences on tip toes of suspense and speculation, rather than the heavy characters of the picture. In these endeavors Miss Pretty is seconded by Henry G. Sell, who plays opposite her.

Star Visualizes Past Triumphs in Film

By an ingenious but at the same time a very natural opening to "Her Greatest Performance," the drama in which Ellen Terry makes her bow to screen audiences for the Triangle Film Corporation, the actress immediately recalls to her audience several of her most famous roles on the speaking stage.

Ellen Terry is cast for the part of a woman her own age who is also a retired stage favorite. She is first seen reading a book of memoirs of her long and successful career, and as she turns the pages, close-up views of the illustrations show the different characters in which she is so well remembered. After each illustration she closes the book and sees again in a dream the Ellen Terry of the memoirs, playing the part about which she has been reading.

Realart's Advertising Is Planned

Wide Exploitation Has Auspicious Start; More Coming

THE faith of Realart Pictures Corporation in the power and value of advertising is evidenced by the manner in which it has carried on its advertising campaign in the trade papers. Realart is barely three months old, yet its name and policies are as well known, to judge from comments, as many of the companies that have been established for years. This remarkable condition, Realart officials believe, is due in part to the character of the inserts which have been provided, but it is recognized that the value of these has been materially enhanced by the circulation provided through the trade papers.

In addition to this advertising, Realart has adopted other means to exploit its productions. One of these mediums is outdoor advertising. This part of the work was started when one sheets and twenty-four sheets announcing Realart stars made their appearance on the billboards of New York and other cities of the country. Realart has been complimented on the artistic quality of the lithographs, as well as on the dignified way in which the announcement of the stars has been presented to the passer-by.

Realart also has leased the big electric sign on the roof of the Hotel Hermitage, located at the southerly end of Times Square, New York, the rental being $108,000. The sign stands twelve stories over one of the busiest and most famous corners in the world, Broadway and Forty-second street, and faces North toward the centre of the American amusement world. It is one hundred and four feet wide and seventy-two feet high, and is said to be the largest electric sign in the world exploiting photoplays.

A concrete example ofthe fact that it pays a producing and distributing company to advertise in the photoplay trade journals is the announcement that the New York World editorial department requested for distribution with its edition of Sunday, September 21, the portrait of Mary Miles Minter that was a feature of the Realart insert in the trade papers of August 16 and August 30. Not only will the World readers in New York, its environs and other cities become acquainted with the fact that Mary Miles Minter will soon make her appearance in Realart Pictures, but the World will advertise its intention to publish her picture on all its subway and elevated railroad billboards, on its fleet of automobiles and wagons, through its circulation department and in the advertising columns of the morning and evening World daily until September 21.

The publicity department of Realart also is busily engaged in the preparation of press books, lobby displays, lithographs and other advertising accessories. This branch of the organization, under the supervision of John Pont Fritts, has been one of the most rapidly growing departments of the Realart organization.

Two publicity specialists joined the staff last week. Bert Adler, who has a very wide acquaintance in the industry, and who has long been engaged in business for himself as an exploitation expert, will establish a department to be devoted exclusively to advertising and promoting big special features. His first work will be in behalf of the Allan Dwan Production, "Soldiers of Fortune," and the Emile Chautard Production, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room."

C. Alfred Karpen has been employed to specialize on copy and designs for advertising accessories. This has been Mr. Karpen's work for many years, and the experience he brings is expected by Realart officials to result in making the corporation's output of accessories both novel and effective.

George Landy and Edna Michaels, both recently with Select, have joined the Realart publicity staff within the past few days.

The oldest employee of the department, except Mr. Fritts, is Mr. Hugh Harvey, who is in charge of trade paper publicity. Jay A. Gove, formerly director of publicity and advertising for Fox, has recently joined Realart.

Posters of Realart stars are being sent out this week to a large number of exhibitors. These are reported to be unusually high grade one-sheets. Three styles of lobby display photographs, covering the first Realart releases, are now in work.

Pioneer Features Play to Big Houses

Henry B. Walthall in "The Boomerang," which has just been released in the New York territory by the Pioneer, began a swing around the William Fox circuit. Opening up at Fox's Academy of Music in New York, it drew a record crowd, during the entire length of its engagement, and is repeating its success at the other Fox houses in New York and Brooklyn.

The "Unpardonable Sin," which is handled in New York by the Pioneer, is playing the foremost independent houses, and at most performances the S. R. O. sign is in constant evidence.

Cosmopolitan Tinge to Cast of Chautard Production

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room," His First for Realart, Has Players of Local and Foreign Stage

THE long cast of players which will be seen in the picturization of the Gaston Leroux novel, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," has a cosmopolitan and international flavor. The actors include in addition to several prominent screen and stage favorites, a well known figure in film circles who is slated to go to Europe shortly to produce photoplays, and a man who came from France recently to appear in photoplays in this country.

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room" is the first of a series of photoplays which Emile Chautard is producing for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. They will be known as Emile Chautard Productions and will be released through Realart Pictures Corporation.

Field Manager Ben F. Simpson, Realart

Ethel Gray Terry, who will portray the part of "Mathilde Stangerson," has been in a number of dramatic productions in New York, among them Belasco's "The Lily," "The Smouldering Flame" and "Search Me." This will not mark her first appearance in a mystery photoplay, as she had leading roles in "Arsene Lupin" and the "Craig Kennedy" serial.

The character of "Frederic Larsan" will be enacted by George Cowl, who has had a long career on the stage and in photoplay. After leaving the stage, Mr. Cowl was associated for two years with Maurice Tourneur. He then became a director and produced "Betsy Ross" with Alice Brady, "The Boulevard Adventuress" and "Her Hour," two of Kitty Gordon's vehicles, and "The Corner Grocery" with Lew Fields. He cancelled a long term contract with World to enlist in the Canadian Army with which he served in France from Arras to Mons. Upon the completion of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" Mr. Cowl is scheduled to go abroad to produce photoplays in England and France for William A. Brady.

Edmund Elton, cast as "Robert Darsac" in the mystery photoplay, has been leading man for some of the most prominent stars of the stage, including Margaret Anglin, Viola Allen, H. B. Warner, Henry Dixie, E. S. Willard and Leo Ditrichstein. He was leading man with Florence Reed in "Roads of Destiny," one of the successes of the past season. In addition to his connection with Broadway productions, Mr. Elton has played with stock companies in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Montreal, Toronto, Baltimore, Portland, Ore., San Francisco and Hartford.

Lorin Raker, who has a leading part in "La, La, Lucille!" one of the hits of the New York summer season at Henry Miller's Theatre, will play "Rouletabille," the reporter who unravels the mystery of the Yellow Room, and Jean Gauthier will be seen as "Sainclair," the boon companion of the newspaperman. Mr. Gauthier is well known in French amusement circles. Since coming to America, he has appeared with Billie Burke on the screen.

The inventor, "Professor Stangerson," will be impersonated by William F. Walcott, who was in the stage production of "The House of Glass," and a number of other Cohan and Harris plays. William H. Burton, on the stage since the days when Joseph Jefferson was a prime favorite, will impersonate "Daddy Jacques," the faithful old servant of the Stangerson household. Mr. Burton has recently been in a number of Famous Players productions. Other members of the cast are Harry Koser, Joseph Morrison, Ivan Doubble, Louise Grisel, Carl Lowenhaupt and Tom McGuire.

Realart officials believe "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" will prove of particular interest to exhibitors.

Allan Dwan's Rise Due to Adherence to a Fixed Idea

From Super to Director of Big Stars, He Has Always Gone Ahead in Belief That Story Is the Thing

IT has been a long but steady rise that brought Allan Dwan to his present position as an independent producer in the motion picture field, as head of Allan Dwan Feature Productions, now making pictures for Mayflower Picture Corporation, of which Isaac Wolper is president. These productions, according to recent announcements, will be distributed by Realart Pictures Corporation.

Allan Dwan has passed through every stage of the motion picture business. Born in Canada, his parents moved to Chicago while he was still a boy, and it was there that he received his schooling. He continued his studies at the University of Notre Dame, where he specialized in literature and electrical engineering. At the same time he was prominent in the athletic activities of the University, being a member of various teams and making an especial record as quarterback on the football team. The same qualities of perseverance, careful training, pluck and ability have led to his rapid rise in the motion picture world.

After being graduated from Notre Dame, he took additional post-graduate work in electrical engineering, and this was the career upon which he actually entered on leaving the University. He was soon attracted by motion pictures, however—these were the days when Bison films were the sensation—and became an extra man in that company. A natural aptitude and an intelligent study of pictures led to his engagement as a scenario writer by Essanay; there he also made his debut as a director. He continued in this dual capacity for the American Film Company, with which he was affiliated for three years. When Famous Players Film Company was organized, Dwan joined its forces, and later was production manager for the Fine Arts Studio of the Triangle Film Corporation when that organization was at the height of its popularity.

Among the stars whose productions Dwan has directed are Douglas Fairbanks in "He Comes Up Smiling," "Manhattan Madness," "Mr. Fix-it," "A Modern Musketeer," etc. Norma Talmadge in "Fifty-Fifty" and "Panthea," William H. Crane in "David Harum," Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower" and Clara Kimball Young in "Cheating Cheaters," to enumerate only some of the most noteworthy pictures with which he has been associated.

Through every stage of his long and rapid rise in the motion picture field, Dwan has preached the same gospel: "The picture's the thing." His firm belief in this adaptation of the Shakespearean adage was perhaps best instanced in an incident which took place while Dwan was still a lowly super. During the course of a certain production, he was employed to represent a dead man on a battlefield, and the job was very easy until the star negligently rested the point of his sword on the prostrate Dwan, leaning on it at the same time. Although the sword penetrated deeper and deeper, passing through his clothes and then entering his body, Dwan remained perfectly immobile—as self-respecting dead men should—until the director saved him by calling a halt. Even at that stage of his experience, Dwan realized that he could not save himself without ruining many feet of film and necessitating a retake; and accordingly, he was willing to sacrifice his personal comfort, and even his own safety, on behalf of the production.

Similarly, as a scenario writer, editor, and later as a director, Allan Dwan's creed has always been that nothing was to stand in the way of the production's success. Personal discomfort or even danger, cost, or any other seeming obstacle that might hinder the production—all were merely difficulties that had to be overcome for the sake of the picture.

It is this same conviction which is behind the pictures Allan Dwan is creating as a producer; adding to this single-mindedness, his rich experience in every element of production and the reputation which he has won in his chosen career, it can be readily understood, Realart officials say, why they are expecting the great accomplishments in the series of eight pictures which this director has contracted to make for Mayflower Photoplay Corporations.

Allan Dwan, director for Mayflower via Realart Pictures

These expectations are being realized, it is claimed, in the first Allan Dwan-Realart special, a picturization of Richard Harding Davis' romance of adventure, "Soldiers of Fortune." Written about twenty years ago, the story was dramatized by Augustus Thomas and received its premiere as a play at the Savoy Theatre in New York City on March 17, 1902. For the motion picture version, which Mr. Dwan has adapted slightly to bring it to modern conditions, the cast includes Norman Kerry, Anna Q. Nilsson, Pauline Stark, Wilfred Lucas and Wallace Berry, each of whom has been recently featured or starred on the screen in worth-while productions.

Emile Chautard's Idea on Film Making : : : :

A MOTION picture made on the lines indicated by the term photoplay is not the best sort of production."

Such is the contention of Emile Chautard, director, who is making a series of six pictures for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, to be released by Realart.

"I am producing photonovels, not photoplays,' Mr. Chautard explains. "This is not quibbling with terms; it is a matter of fundamental principle. It involves attitude toward a production—affects the whole method of making.

"I am approaching production with an entirely different attitude from that in the mind of the usual producer of today. Terms such as photoplay, or photodrama, imply that a picture is merely a series of distinct episodes connected by wording or dialogue. When we see such a picture, we say it is 'jerky,' or that 'it has poor continuity,' and are right in both criticisms. The trouble lies in the fact that the producer or the director adhered too strictly to the photoplay idea.

"In my photonovels, I get away from this fallacious attitude and the evils which result from it. My purpose is to novelize the picture, not merely to picture the novel; really live the story in a smoothly-flowing, continuous form that avoids the episodic pitfalls of the usual photoplay. Above all, the photonovel will be free from the padding which is an obnoxious feature when it appears in a motion picture.

"Another way of expressing my idea is to say that the photonovel is read just as a book is read. It merely substitutes action for words."

Mr. Chautard began his career on the stage in Paris, his birthplace, where he soon became the favorite leading man at the Odeon, The Gymnase and the Theatre Royale. Later he directed productions at these theatres and it was a natural growth, therefore, for him to become a director for Eclair Films, when this organization commenced making pictures in the French capital. Chautard led all European producers in filming stage plays; his screen versions of "The Merry Widow" and "The Girl from Rector's" created a positive sensation abroad.

It was soon after this that Mr. Chautard came to the United States, and was forthwith engaged to direct motion pictures. He has worked with such well-known stars, as Alice Brady, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Clara Kimball Young, and others. Previous to beginning independent production, Mr. Chautard was a member of the staff of directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Chautard emphasizes the fact under his present contract he is not required to finish his productions according to a time schedule, or to attempt to meet widely-varying views on picture technic. He is operating his own company on his own plan, and producing according to his own views of what constitutes good pictures.

"Two masters," he believes, "should be studied in the production of motion pictures: Rembrandt, master of light and genius of shadows; and Gustave Dore. "Between these two," he says, "there is room for a symbolistic school."

Mr. Chautard is an advocate of the use of motion pictures in teaching children. The best encyclopedia, he contends, will be one written by the camera. He made also what he calls the first psychological picture. It was produced in France eleven years ago, and although it dealt with the evils of drink, not one character appeared intoxicated. The director simply showed the results of heavy drinking by logical deductions from psychological and scientific facts.

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room" is the first Chautard production which Realart will release. It is based on a book by Gaston Leroux and deals with the problem of a man's escape from a small room that apparently had no unguarded exit.

New Brooklyn House to Show "Westerners"

The Mark-Strand interests have added another immediately successful theatre to their already large interests in their New Brooklyn Strand which did capacity business from its initial performance last week. As the second attraction of this big house the management has booked Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Authors picture, "The Westerners," by Stewart Edward White.

"The Westerners" recently received its eastern premiere at the New York Strand and at the request of the Mark interests has been held out of the remainder of Greater New York to enable them to give it first run presentation in their Brooklyn institution.

No Haste on Minter Productions

THE contract by which Realart Pictures Corporation secured the photoplay services of Mary Miles Minter covers a term of three and one-half years and one stipulation is that she shall make only twenty productions within that time. In other words, she will not appear in more than six photoplays yearly. The reason for this provision, it is explained, was to insure ample time in which to produce the very best that this little star is capable of putting forth.

As an evidence of the care being exercised to insure that her photoplays will surpass anything she has has ever done before, it is related that her director, William Desmond Taylor, spent three days rehearsing the star and her company for the filming of just one scene of "Anne of Green Gables."

Since the members of the company appearing with her in her first Realart production are destined to work together for several weeks, Miss Minter decided last week that they should be acquainted socially as well as professionally. So she arranged a party which took place on Sunday, August 17, at the picnic grounds at Dedham, Mass., where the company is at present filming the exteriors for the picture. Sixty-five players were included in the invitation list and among the guests were also the hostess' mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, and her director, William Desmond Taylor.

After an old fashioned clam bake and corn roast, served in the open in approved New England style, there was an entertainment with the young Realart star playing the part of stage director for the first time in her career. Her "production" was an impromptu vaudeville show, the entire company contributing to the bill. Those who were not prepared to perform individually joined in singing popular songs, which was interspersed between the acts.

One of the features of the bill was the appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Coleman, old favorites of the London music halls, in the act which made them famous in English variety. The comedy element of the show was provided by Leila Romer with laugh provoking stories. But the biggest surprise of the afternoon came when the star's mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, made her appearance on the stage in a sketch. It is said that she was quite the hit of the entertainment.

Doubles of Celebrities in Rolfe Cast

Actors who are doubles for celebrities run in quantities at the Fischer studios in New Rochelle, N. Y., where B. A. Rolfe is putting on "The Amazing Lovers," Charles A. Logue's adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' "The Shining Band," for presentation through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc. Robert Baton Gibbs, who plays Major Brent, is said to be a "dead ringer" for Robert W. Chambers, while E. J. Ratcliffe, enacting the role of Peyster Sprowl, is in appearance a counterpart of the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt.

Mix "Bulldogs" Buffalo

The most dangerous performance ever attempted by a daredevil cowpuncher—to say nothing of a motion picture star—it is said the "bulldogging" of a buffalo by Tom Mix, the William Fox star, for a new special feature on which he now is working in Oklahoma.

This series of scenes made by Mix in his latest screen vehicle promises to furnish more thrills per inch than anything of a Western type ever offered to picture lovers.

Stories of High Quality Only for Constance Binney

But Three Pictures Will Be Made by Realart's Star in Season in Order to Create High Standards

EMPHASIS which is being laid by Realart Pictures Corporation on quality of production is said to be illustrated by the arrangement made for limitation of Constance Binney photoplays. She is to make only three productions during the coming season.

"The purpose," said a Realart statement, "is to make each of these three pictures of the highest standard. Care and thoroughness are not only to apply to production, but will extend to exploitation aids for the exhibitor."

"Erstwhile Susan" is Miss Binney's first screen starring vehicle. This is the well remembered stage play which brought Mrs. Fiske back to Broadway a short time ago. It is based on the novel, "Barnabetta," by Helen R. Martin and the scenario, which was prepared by Kathryne Stuart, is said to retain the best features of both the book and the play. "Erstwhile Susan" is being made under the direction of John S. Robertson.

Miss Binney has had a remarkable stage career—and comes to motion pictures while a current stage star. Her latest success on Broadway is "39 East." During an amateur performance at the finishing school which she was attending she was seen by Winthrop Ames, a leading producer, and was forthwith engaged for a small part in "Saturday to Monday." This was followed by a dancing role in "Oh Lady, Lady," an outstanding musical hit. The versatility and charm which Miss Binney displayed in these two productions were such that she was starred in her next theatrical engagement, "39 East," and the rest is history. How the young girl took New York by storm as the heroine of this play of Springtime love, has gone down in theatrical annals as one of its most astounding stories.

On the screen, also, her career has been dazzling in its meteoric splendor. She made her debut with her sister in Maurice Tourneur's production of "Sporting Life"; then came the role of leading woman to John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor." And now comes stardom in "Erstwhile Susan" and succeeding Realart pictures.

Judging from the genuineness of her pronounced success on the stage, as well as her previous screen achievements, Realart officials feel justified in predicting similar triumphs for this star in the film world. To her charm, ability, intelligence, beauty and training, Miss Binney adds a vitality and independence of manner which make her one of the most representative American girls in the public eye today.

It is to safeguard this reputation that Miss Binney's program as a Realart star calls for only three pictures during the coming year. Like "Erstwhile Susan," each vehicle will be selected with utmost discrimination from available popular novels and plays and will be produced with care and with an eye to the exhibitor's needs and the public's desires.

After a successful season on Broadway, Constance Binney "rests" by appearing before the camera for Realart

A million dollar star is the position now occupied by Mary Miles Minter. Here she is in a scene from her first picture for Realart, "Anne of the Green Gables"

Heads Realart Branch

With a record of seventeen years experience in the motion picture business, Joseph L. Marentette comes to Realart Pictures Corporation as manager of the Atlanta branch. He has just been appointed by Ben F. Simpson, field manager of the company.

Mr. Marentette became identified with motion pictures as an exhibitor in the pioneer days of 1902 when he showed "The Eruption of Mount Pelee" in Illinois and Indiana, using a black tent as his theatre.

Realart Branches Are Established in Twenty Cities

Managers Familiar with Territory and Conditions Installed; Result of Trip by J. S. Woody

IN the short space of two months the sales organization of Realart Pictures Corporation has installed branch managers and leased offices in twenty of the principal cities of the country. It is thought that this constitutes a record in establishing an exchange system, and it was brought about by J. S. Woody, general sales manager, and Ben F. Simpson, field manager, who toured the country for this purpose, Mr. Woody visiting the West and Mr. Simpson the cities in the East and South.

Mr. Woody's connection with the film world dates from 1908 with O. T. Crawford Film Exchange, St. Louis. In 1913 he became associated with the General Film Company, at that time one of the largest distributing companies, in a special capacity, covering all territory west of Denver. He stayed with this concern until 1914 when he joined Mutual to handle the Pacific Northwest district. Two years ated he became affiliated with Triangle in New York, where he attracted the attention of Arthur S Kane, then general manager of Select, with the result that Woody became ield manager for Select. He was ater promoted to general sales manger and when Mr. Kane organized Realart, Mr. Woody went with him n the same position he held with Select.

Mr. Simpson, prior to engaging in he motion picture business was for everal years a theatrical publicity anager, his last engagement in this ne being with the late Henry B. Harris in the exploitation of "The Third Degree." His first work in photoplay was the promotion of Kleine's "Quo Vadis," after which he opened an office in Atlanta, covering the South for the George Kleine photoplay enterprises. Mr. Simpson joined Triangle when it was organized in 1915, as manager of the San Francisco branch and remained with that organization until coming with Realart. When he resigned from Triangle to accept his present appointment, it is said that he was the oldest employee in the point of service.

In charge of the southern territory for Realart is Joseph L. Marentette with headquarters at Atlanta. He has been connected with filmdom for seventeen years, starting as an exhibitor in the pioneer days of 1902.

Walter R. Scates, who is covering New England for Realart, has been identified with the selling of photoplay since 1906.

A life long resident of Buffalo, Henry E. Wilkinson is Realart's Buffalo manager. He has opened offices at 221 Franklin Street.

The sales of Realart Pictures in the Chicago territory will be under the supervision of Harry W. Willard, from offices in Suite 1204 Consumers' Building, 220 South State Street. Mr. Willard has been in the business end of filmdom for nine years.

The Cincinnati manager is Mark Goldman, who has already established himself in this territory through his connection with Select as special representative.

Northern Ohio, with Cleveland as its center of activity, will receive Realart service through J. B. Reilly, another of the "old timers" connected with the sales organization of the company. Mr. Reilly started as an exhibitor in 1908.

Diaz Callahan, Dallas branch manager for Realart, returned there after an absence of only five months, during which time he was temporarily in charge of the Denver and Cleveland offices for Triangle.

The manager of the Denver branch, Bert R. Latz, gained his knowledge of the business of selling pictures in the Western territory, in which he is now operating for Realart.

C. C. Kingsley, manager of Realart's Detroit branch, has had ten years' connection with photoplay, prior to which he was advance agent and business manager for a number of representative theatrical companies.

John N. MacMeeken, who has been associated with the sales organizations of Universal and Select in the West, is manager of the Kansas City branch of Realart.

Another pioneer in film sales circles, Oren F. Woody, is manager of the Los Angeles branch. He established for O. T. Crawford, one of the first exchanges in New Orleans.

Harry L. Hollander, manager of the Minneapolis branch, started his film career in New York with Fox, but was soon transferred to Minneapolis, and has remained there ever since.

After ten years' experience exhibiting and selling photoplays, Lester W. Adler joined Realart as manager of the New York branch. His knowledge of his territory is very evident as he was an exhibitor in Brooklyn and a sales representative and assistant manager in New York for World and Select.

Nat Barach, another of Realart's executives, in charge of the Pittsburg branch, who wore khaki for the United States, saw nine months' service in France.

The Northwest district, of which Seattle is the center, is in charge of Albert W. Eden, who has offices in Suite 216 of the White Building. Mr. Eden's first film affiliation was with Fox, where he remained four years.

The manager of the St. Louis branch, J. C. Ragland, has been associated with the business management of many theatrical enterprises, and with the promotion of feature productions almost since the time multiple reel photoplays were first introduced.

William H. Rippard, Realart's Washington manager, was a newspaper man for four years. Subsequently he was connected with several theatrical enterprises.

Baby Show Recalls Alice Brady's Debut : : :

SEVENTEEN years ago last Wednesday a very self-possessed little girl with great big brown eyes and a bewitching smile sat in her seat of state on top of an immense float, representing a star's dressing room. Rouging her lips, powdering her nose—going through the entire program of an actress's make-up, she was oblivious to the applause of the enthusiastic grandstand. She was absorbed in the business at hand—that of imitating a theatrical star in her dressing room. Her father, today one of the biggest theatrical managers in the profession, had gone to the expense of having an exact reproduction of his biggest star's dressing room made for his seven year old daughter. And he was rewarded for his trouble in seeing this star-to-be carry off one of the biggest silver loving cups awarded at the Asbury Park Baby Parade of 1902. But the loving cup held no charms for the little miss. The miniature dressing table before her with its collection of cosmetics and appliances—even to the rabbit's foot—held her attention.

Those couple of hours playing a star were the first seeds planted in the heart of Alice Brady for a star's dressing room and a theatrical career. And those few tiny seeds sprouted up into a great big flower with the years until today the little girl who had been fascinated by a make-up table is one of the biggest stage and screen stars in the profession.

That little story is not from the imaginative brain of some press agent but is the truth as brought to mind by Miss Brady last Wednesday when she was the guest of honor at the twenty-eighth Asbury Park Baby Parade.

But instead of bringing home a loving cup Wednesday night, Miss Brady carried tender recollections of childhood days, a great big bunch of roses and a new idea of her popularity with the children.

Miss Brady arrived at Asbury Park night. A large banquet was given in her honor at the Monterey Hotel, at which Mayor Clarence F. Hetrick of Asbury Park, Tali Esen Morgan, Carnival Director; James L. Crane, her husband, and the "four hundred" of Asbury were present.

Miss Brady started from the New Monterey Hotel, which was thrown open to her as guest of honor of the city, with Mrs. Bruce S. Keator, who acted as hostess, and Miss Edna S. Michaels, Miss Brady's press representative, at two o'clock for her box in the grandstand. An immense bouquet of roses was presented to her before she left the hotel. This was from the committee of Asbury Park.

The popular star received a tremendous ovation as the car passed down the carpet-covered boulevard to her box, next to the Queen's stand. She was assaulted by a battery of cameras and for each one she presented her prettiest smile. Mayor Hetrick and Governor Runyon of New Jersey greeted her at the box and the parade was held up for five minutes while the interest of the grandstand was centered upon Miss Brady.

And then the parade began. The kiddies had received instructions to keep their eyes front, but when they heard that Alice Brady, the actress, was seated to the right—instructions were cast to the winds. They just had to have a good close look at the popular star. And Miss Brady smiled at every child and shook hands with many.

As the star left the grand-stand she was showered with flowers, pieces of paper, programs—anything that the enthusiastic crowds held in their hand at the time. And fully one hundre children followed her back to the hote They besieged her at the station agai and some even followed her on th train and rode one or two stations wit her.

Says Chautard Special is Thriller

"Mystery of Yellow Room" Is from Famous French Tale

"PROBABLY the best detective tale of our time," writes Gilbert K. Chesterton, the eminent English literary critic, in a recent review of the work of Gaston Leroux, the gifted French author of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room."

This is the mystery story which is being picturized by Emile Chautard as the first of the six photonovels which he is producing for Mayflower Pictures Corporation, to be distributed through Realart. Mr. Chautard has coined the term "photonovel" to distinguish his productions from usual, episodic photoplay; in his forthcoming pictures, the director will endeavor to make his characters live the story—as he puts it—rather than merely indicate its course through a series of separate episodes connected by subtitles.

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room" was originally published in France, where it was a sensational success and soon after was translated into English for publication in England and the United States. Here, too, it ran through several editions and is just now being republished to meet the popular demand. It is a tale of an absorbing mystery and the solution of the riddle comes about in a manner which is bound to surprise even the most blase reader of detective stories. Emile Chautard has, it is claimed, preserved the mystery absolutely; not until the very end of the photonovel does the spectator know the answer to the puzzle.

The mystery of the Yellow Room arises through the disappearance of a criminal, after he has committed an assault, from a room which appears to have no exit.

For his initial photonovel, Mr. Chautard has assembled a stellar cast of performers. The leading female role has been entrusted to Ethel Grey Terry, well known through her stage work with David Belasco and her screen performances in "The Sign of the Cross," "The Hawk," and "Craig Kennedy." Opposite her plays Edmund Elton, a stage favorite, who has played leads with Leo Ditrichstein, Margaret Anglin, Viola Allen and Henry Dixey and who has been featured in "The Eternal Magdalene," "The Devil," "The Spoilers," "Peter Ibbetson," "The Boss" and "Alias Jimmy Valentine." The heavy role is in the hands of George Cowl, who returned recently after having served with the Canadian armies all through the Great War. Prior to enlisting, Cowl resigned from a long term contract he had with World, for whom he had directed Kitty Gordon, Lew Fields and Alice Brady. Mr. Cowl has also worked with Maurice Tourneur and knows every angle of the motion picture art.

Among the others who have important parts in this production are Lorin Baker, William F. Walcott, Jean Gauthier, William H. Burton, Joseph Morrison and Ivan Doubble.

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room" was scenarioized by Mr. Chautard himself as well as directed by him.

"Sinners" was one of Alice Brady's most successful stage vehicles, and now she is making a screen adaptation for Realart

Realart's Branch Mana gers

After eight years as an exhibitor i and around Philadelphia, and tw years as city sales manager of th Philadelphia branch of World, Ja Emanuel, the recently appointed ma ager of Realart's branch in the Quak City, can rightfully claim extensiv knowledge of his territory.

With the exception of a short tim spent in New York as sales repr sentative for the General Film Cor pany, at Twenty-third Street Branc when Arthur S. Kane was manag there, Ralph B. Quive, manager the San Francisco branch of Reala has spent all of his six years in t business end of film circles in t metropolis of the Pacific Coast.

The newest appointee to the st of branch managers is Melville Maxwell, who has under his jur diction the territory of which Oma is the pivot.

It is pointed out by Realart offici that not only are the exchange m of the organization experienced sal men, but, in almost every case, th are familiar with the localities which they will operate. The f that so many of them have be photoplay theatre owners or m agers, it is contended, is a very i portant factor in putting into act practice the service principles wh have been established as a Real standard.

"Everybody's Business Bought for N. Y.

Mr. T. R. Gardiner, President the Gardiner Syndicate of Buff who is considered to be one of most progressive and successful in pendent exchange men in the coun has purchased the rights for "Eve body's Business" for New Y State.

A. S. Kane Announces a Policy Which Will Be Permanent

Welfare of the Exhibitor Is the First Consideration; Good Stars, Stories and Distribution

REALART Pictures Corporation this week announces its policy for the season of 1919-1920. The announcement is somewhat different from that to which exhibitors have been accustomed because it is declared to apply "forever," rather than to be limited to a short period.

Emphasis is laid on Realart ideals—a theme peculiar to all the advertising which Arthur S. Kane has done since he took the presidency of the new concern. His first pledge, and many of the succeeding ones, as a Realart statement notes, was to the exhibitor. Service both prompt and intelligent was promised.

Since then, this idea has been amplified, upon the theory, apparently, that there are two angles of a producer's program that are of vital interest to the exhibitor—the picture and the distribution plan. It is along these lines that Realart maintains it offers a helping hand.

As to the picture itself, Realart declares the opinion in its advertising that "the component parts are a great star, a popular vehicle, competent direction and beautiful photography." The ideal picture, it is contended, subordinates no one of these elements, nor features any one of them to the detriment of the others. "The story is the heart of the picture, the actor its soul, the director its brain, and the photography the atmosphere it breathes;" each is important and perfection is attained only through the harmonious functioning of all the parts."

Elsewhere Realart expresses itself: "A great actress is one who possesses youth, beauty and talent; a popular vehicle is one which has indelibly impressed itself upon the mind of the public as a successful novel, story or play; competent direction lies in the co-ordination of the various factors which make up the photoplay. The Realart idea is to ensure a satisfaction to the motion picture public that will reflect its quality in increased box-office returns. For in better business lies, after all, the only proper criterion of sustained excellence."

The distribution plan of the corporation is also set on the same high plane in the scope with which it covers the country and in the personnel of the men at the helm of national and local distribution.

"The distribution phase of the Realart idea," say officials of the corporation, "is based upon a mutuality of interest between producer and exhibitor. One cannot flourish long or prosperously without the other. The producer who gouges the exhibitor or who produces poor pictures cannot long endure; the exhibitor will protect himself. Similarly, the exhibitor who fails to do his share will also fall by the wayside. The welfare of each is thoroughly interwoven with that of the other and only those will survive who recognize this mutuality of interest and foster it by proper reciprocity.

"Realart distribution is permeated with the determination to serve. Courtesy, square dealing, promptness and hearty co-operation are its component parts; here again they are blended so that they work with a smoothness and an efficiency that keep the wheels going without any friction and produce the best results for all concerned. The basic Realart idea is an extension to the motion picture industry of that close-knit relation and the realization of the common welfare which is the basis for the success of those corporations in all other industrial lines that reflect the best ideals of modern American business.

"Realart's message to the exhibitor may, therefore, be summed up in a statement of the Realart idea, as applied to production and distribution; to work for the mutual interest of producer and exhibitor by blending essential factors into a harmonious whole that will tend towards perfection."

Constance Binney, pondering over something or other, in "Erstwhile Susan," her Realart vehicle

Such a policy, it is argued, cannot be seasonal. Its value, indeed, lies in the success of the endeavor to make it permanent. The idea of Mr. Kane and his associates is that the exhibitor is more interested in knowing what Realart's attitude toward him is to be than in having immediate information regarding all the productions it may be Realart's desire to sell to him.

"We Will Merit Confidence"—Kane : : : :

Norman Kerry, appearing in the first of the Allan Dwan productions for release by Realart, "Soldiers of Fortune"

"THE reception accorded Realart Pictures has been beyond all expectation.

"In founding this enterprise, we had a very definite idea that a field existed for anyone with experience, high producing standards, honesty of purpose, ample capital and a certain amount of ability. Though we may claim at least some of these virtues, if not all, and have been trying to make them manifest, we have been really amazed at the spontaneous, unanimous manner in which the country has risen to Realart.

"Our thought here is not to exalt over anything as having been achieved by us, but only to thank the exhibitors, who are showing their belief.

"Never in the history of the business was an exhibitor so pulled and hauled. He is tugged this way and that, toward this or that 'plan.' We may be iconoclastic, but we do not believe any selling scheme marks the highway to success.

"It has been my observation during twelve years of manufacturing and marketing pictures and before that exhibiting them, that the market is always crowded. There is eternally much more film than the photoplay houses can consume. But never in the history of the business had there been a surplus of good pictures. Wonderful as the productions are and have been, there never has been a time, is not now and never will be when worthy products will go begging.

"In this era of bigger and better producing, the difficulty of making attractions which will stand out, is greater than ever. It was with a full understanding of this condition that we of Realart have launched forth. We realize thoroughly that if our stars and specials appear in the important theatres over the country, as they are being arranged for, it will be for only one reason: because they deserve to be.

"Therefore it is our purpose not to go 'slanchwise,' 'catawampus' or 'kittering' but straight to the mark. That is our object and that our determination.

"The motion picture industry becomes daily more important, more dignified, recruiting a splendid type of men. The vast strides which exhibitors are making in the housing and the presentation of photoplays seem almost magical. Thousands are seated in comfort today in one theatre, where yesterday only a few hundred could attend. The exhibitors are showing their faith in the future by the handsome edifices constantly going up all over the land. Post-war expansion and activity in all lines is here and the coming season cannot be otherwise than wonderful.

"All this means those who furnish the attractions must strive as never before to equal the advance in theatres and exhibiting and the great era of prosperity throughout the country. Therefore the producers are tremendously alive to the importance of the new season and on every hand ambitious plans are being laid or are under way. We feel sure we will meet that part of the situation.

"It may seem paradoxical, but today so great is the demand for quality and class and so large the field for it that the most expensive thing a producer can do is the least expensive. And vice versa. Making a subject to fill a gap, securing a sum of money and then making a photoplay for that amount, and like methods which obtained in the past, are obsolete.

"It is Realart's idea to let the expenditure be what is necessary to put on the subject, and we believe that is what is happening more or less throughout the industry. We intend to continue to encourage all independent producers who have the resources, the ability and the determination to produce in this manner.

"Realart has been more than fortunate in the men who have aligned themselves thus far with us, in the whole-hearted cooperation of the trade press and in the magnificent reception given us by the exhibitors of the trade generally. We shall strive every minute to merit all the confidence so finely expressed."

Albert W. Eden, appointed Realart manager in Seattle

George Brackett Seitz, scenario writer, director and producer, is now working on the fifth episode of "Bound and Gagged," a ten episode Pathe serial of which he is star, director and producer.

Palisade Laboratories Making a Success

When H. J. Streyckmans resigned from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, six months ago, to take charge of the Palisade Film Laboratories, he informed this publication of the terms of his contract, by which he was given carte blanche in the mattter of funds but was obligated to satisfy his financial backers that by the first of September the plant would be second to none in America.

If Streyckmans failed in this endeavor his contract was to terminate, and if he succeeded he was to receive a substantial bonus and a three year contract. The following statement from him is, therefore, of interest to the trade:

"I make the unqualified claim that the Palisade Film Laboratories is turning out the highest quality of work humanly possible. The plant is splendidly equipped for expeditious work, and every department is headed by experts in their respective lines.

"Herman Doering, for five years chief negative developer for the eastern production department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has charge of our negative developing. Mr. Doering has probably developed the negative on more big productions than any man in the world, and producers entrusting their negative to us are receiving the same high class results."

E. B. Walden and F. H. Hall are officials of the Corn Products Refining Co.

Story of East Picked for Priscilla Dean

"The Virgin of Stamboul," from the story "Undraped," by H. H. Van Loan, will be the next starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean, the Universal star, who has just signed a new contract. It will cost a small fortune to produce.

Sparkling with pageantry and impressive in the mystic majesty of the East, "The Virgin of Stamboul" is expected to be the most talked-of photodramatic offering in which Miss Dean has yet appeared.

Tod Browning, who will direct Miss Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul" also directed the star in such Universal successes as "The Wicked Darling" and "The Silk Lined Burglar."

Earle Williams, Vitagraph star, reads his favorite between scenes of "The Black Gate"

Frohman Serial Is Announced

Fifteen Episode Subject to Be Made; Name of Feminine Star Is a Secret

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Mr. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, of the completion of plans for the productions of a fifteen-episode serial. The story is by Guy McConnell, and is said to contain as its basic plot the discovery of metal shedding an invisible ray that scientists throughout the world have been endeavoring to isolate, and which would revolutionize chemistry in all its branches.

"The story," said Mr. Sherrill, "has been under consideration by us for three months. The completed scenario of the fifteen episodes embrace situations that are absolutely staggering. This being the first serial produced by the Frohman Amusement Corp., I feel that we ought to start off with a serial story which, while it should contain all the essential fundamentals of a popular serial, must nevertheless be so far above anything heretofore screened that I was compelled to move with exceeding caution. I realize I have a tremendous contract on my hands, but I have set out to produce the greatest serial the world has ever seen, and neither time nor expense will stand in the way of my accomplishments. Mr. McConnell has been working every night in co-operation with Mr. Goldburg, our general manager, and all of the rough spots have been smoothed out, and we have arrived at a completed story that at least in one essential will differ from the average serial, in so far as there will be no disconnected tale, but a story pure and simple of vital interest, replete with sensationalism not injected into the story helter skelter, but which forms a natural outcome of the incidents which form the tale itself.

"At this time we are not prepared to name the star; frankly, out of a list of thirty-two we have narrowed them down to but two, and within the next few days we will announce to the public the name of the girl who is to be starred as the ingenue. In the meantime we are proceeding with preliminary production work. Jack Sherrill will be co-starred.

Nazimova Scores in England

Foreign Photoplay Journals Praise Metro's Russian Star's Productions

IN her first appearances before the British public as a screen star, Nazimova has achieved success of the first magnitude, according to a consensus of the opinion of the leading British dramatic and photoplay critics. The Russian actress has, in fact, carried England by storm, it is said.

A survey of prominent British journals, including the London Times, the Pall Mall Gazette, the London Evening News, the Sketch, the Daily Telegraph, the Daily Herald and the Daily Mail, just reaching here from the other side, reveals that the English critics and public as well have gone wild over the incomparable art of Nazimova.

A reviewer in the Pall Mall Gazette, for instance, says that "Nazimova is the first actress who is likely to win a place analogous to that of Sarah Bernhardt or Ellen Terry," while the Evening News proclaims her to be "the greatest film artist of the world."

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., who with Maxwell Karger presents Nazimova in her screen productions, is in receipt of a voluminous assortment of English journals, all loud and unreserved in their praise of Nazimova's art. Collected by Jury, Ltd., the English picture firm headed by Sir William Jury, the "movie king" of England, which has acquired for $2,500,000 the rights to the Nazimova productions and Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., productions for the next two years, these journals reached Mr. Rowland shortly after his return from his ten weeks' European trip.

"The opinions of thoughtful British reviewers," said Mr. Rowland, bear out what I confidently expected when I took the Nazimova pictures abroad to place them in the English market."

"The Bandbox," Hodkinson Release, Said to Show Master Touch of Author

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE'S mastery over melodramatic expression is said to be excellently demonstrated in "The Bandbox," the first Deitrich-Beck, Inc., production, just completed, with Doris Kenyon as the star, and to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson organization. "The Bandbox" is melodrama at its swiftest and best; alive with suspense and action and filled with mystery and thrill.

Prints of "The Bandbox" are being shipped this week to Hodkinson managers in the thirty Pathe offices and no contracts are solicited or taken until the arrival of the picture and its inspection by exhibitors. This policy of "see the picture before you book it" inaugurated ahead of all other organizations last April by W. W. Hodkinson has resulted in a series of successes for exhibitors respectively with "As A Man Thinks," "Sahara," Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Authors' picture, "The Westerners," and Benjamin B. Hampton's and Eltinge F. Warner's first Zane Grey picture, "Desert Gold."

In no instance has the single picture selling policy of the Hodkinson organization been departed from [illegible] exhibitors in every part of the U[illegible] States have expressed their appr[illegible] of a method whereby they see [illegible] tures in advance of contracting [illegible] them. Universal Announces Completion of "Loot"

"Loot," the well known Saturday Evening Post story from the pen of Arthur Somers Roche, has been completed as a six-reel feature at Universal City by Director William C. Dowlan. This is considered one of Universal's best program productions.

"If all magazine stories only contained such excellent picture material there would be fewer authors carrying a grouch against the motion picture industry," was Director William C. Dowlan's compliment to Arthur Somers Roche, who wrote "Loot" for the Saturday Evening Post.

Two new Universal stars are featured in "Loot," Ora Carew, a former Keystone beauty and more recently leading woman for Wallace Reid, is seen as "Morn Light," the musical comedy actress, who double-crosses the gang of crooks. Darrell Foss, leading man for Nazimova in "The Red Lantern" and "The Brat," and former Lasky and Ince feature player, has the leading masculine role.

Art Accord Doffs Khaki to Face Camera

Art Accord, the western star, has returned to the picture after two years service in the army. He has just signed a three-year contract with Universal to be featured in short-reel western dramas and in serials.

Sent from Camp Kearney (California) to France, Accord was transferred to the 4th Division, which went through some of the heaviest fighting of the war on the Verdun front. While "over there" he won the Croix-de-guerre.

Elaborate preparations are being made at Universal City for the starting of "The Man-Hunter," which is to be the first serial starring vehicle for this cowboy.

Second Series of Animal Hunt Pictures

Major Jack Allen, Spanish-American war veteran, and producer of the wild animal "hunt," pictures has just signed his second contract to produce another series of these pictures for Universal. These one-reel subjects have been featured throughout the country.

Says Showmen Buy on Star Basis

Exhibitors Mutual Official Gives Out Statement

DESPITE the early season flurry over wide-open booking the exhibitor is buying his pictures on the star series and fifty-two-a-year basis as he has in the past, according to William J. Clark, president of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

The tendency to book a solid schedule for a year, or to book star series, shopping for the stars he wants until his schedule is filled, is more apparent among the big exhibitors than among the owners of small houses and one of the most marked features of the return to former booking methods is apparent in the attitude of the larger circuits.

"The big exhibitor, particularly the owner of a circuit of theatres, was first to see the impracticability of the so-called wide-open market," said Mr. Clark, who himself is an exhibitor, president of Consolidated Theatres, Inc., in Michigan.

"The idea of buying his pictures wherever he pleased and one at a time appealed, upon first thought, to the exhibitor, but his second thought was of the enormity of the task such a plan put upon him with the dangers and uncertainty of securing suitable productions for his screen.

"The announcement of open booking caused considerable commotion within the industry. Some exhibitors hailed it as the Utopia of the motion picture business but the majority, upon analysis, fell back upon the star series plan of booking, which, from every angle, is the most satisfactory of all plans under which motion pictures have been bought and sold.

"The exhibitor is the boss in this business and he is going to buy his pictures as he pleases. Every indication from our exchanges indicates that the exhibitor is buying, and intends to buy, on the star series basis or on the basis of one every week.

"The open booking plan works well only for the exhibitor who plays a weekly change in a territory where there is little competition, but in territories where competition is at all severe and in houses where changes are made twice a week or more often, his troubles increase out of all proportion.

"The exhibitor has become more or less wary of the frequent cry of 'special,' 'special,' because he appreciates that the term which originally was used as the designation for a big production, one of those ever so often big pictures, has been converted into a selling term. Its indiscriminate use has destroyed the value of the word and the so-called special of today isn't getting bookings as a special nor bringing the prices of a special until it has been screen examined and box office tested."

Metro Purchases "Old Lady 31"

Successful Stage Play by Crothers to Be a Screen Classic

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, announces the purchase of the highly successful stage play, "Old Lady 31," which will be produced by Screen Classics, Inc., with an all-star cast and distributed by Metro as one of its "fewer and better" pictures.

"Old Lady 31" enjoyed a record-breaking run at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, where it was produced by Lee Kugel. It is by Rachel Crothers, America's foremost woman dramatist and the author among other plays, of "39 East" and "A Little Journey," two recent big Broadway stage successes.

This quaint comedy of plain folk is the latest addition to Metro's array of stage plays of note and celebrated novels—to be thirty-six in all—that already includes Avery Hopwood's "Fair and Warmer"; "Lombardi, Ltd.," and "The Walk Offs," by the Hattons; "Please Get Married," by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne; "The Hermit Doctor of Gaya," "The Native Born" and "The Temple of Dawn," by I. A. R. Wylie; "The Right of Way," by Sir Gilbert Parker; "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," by Thomas Hardy; "The Willow Tree." by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes and "Shore Acres," by the late James A. Herne.

"Old Lady 31" will be the third play by Miss Crothers to reach the screen under the banner of Metro. One of the first Metro pictures was a screen version of Miss Crother's "The Three of Us." Later "A Man's World," which had served as a stage starring vehicle for Mary Mannering was produced by Metro with Emily Stevens in the stellar role.

Miss Crother's work, while its appeal is particularly strong with women, is universal in its sympathetic understanding of every day people. "Old Lady 31" is a whimsical story of an aged sea captain and his wife, who through many long and stormy years in their weatherbeaten cottage on the shore, have remained sweethearts. One day misfortune comes and penniless, they are forced to leave the home that has become so dear to them that they know every flower in the garden, every stone in the gravel path leading to the front door.

The little old lady plans to go to the home for indigent elderly women—brutally stated, the Old Women's Home—but at the gate the prospect of parting from her life mate overcomes her, and both are overjoyed when a special exception is made of him and he becomes an inmate of the home. He is "old lady 31;" and for a time he is lionized by the spinsters and widows who occupy the institution.

But he is no diplomat, and soon finds he has lost his popularity among the antique ladies because he has shown particular attention to one. The sudden receipt of money from an old investment rescues the devoted couple from their predicament and all ends happily.

Pathe First Release for Fall Season

FOR the opening of the Fall season, which promises to be the brightest in its history, Pathe has selected as its feature offering Leonce Perret's screen version of the stage play, "The Thirteenth Chair," by Bayard Veiller, which as a legitimate production has played in practically every big city in the United States.

Pathe has listed a series of high class features for early Fall issue, among which will be "The Virtuous Model," starring Dolores Cassinelli; "The False Code," a Frank Keenan attraction; "The Twin Pawns," starring Mae Murray, and "Impossible Catherine," second of the Virginia Pearson series.

This aggregation of productions, Pathe believes, will furnish a great opening wedge in its Fall campaign, which has started off with roseate prospects, with "The Thirteenth Chair."

"The Thirteenth Chair," heads the list of Pathe releases for August 31st, and its success was forecast weeks ago when bookings on the feature began to roll in.

"The Thirteenth Chair" was produced in screen form by the Acme Pictures Corporation, with Leonce Perret making the adaptation and directing it. Creighton Hale, prominent in many Pathe serials and in Capellani productions, has the leading male role, while Yvonne Delva, a celebrated French actress, is the principal female character.

An unusually acceptable cast supports the co-stars of "The Thirteenth Chair." Marie Shotwell, one of the best known actresses before the camera, interpreted the difficult role of Madame La Grange the clairvoyant, a part which was so admirably acted on the stage in New York by Margaret Wycherly, wife of the author.

Marc McDermott appears as Stephen Lee, a character who never appears on the stage in the play, but who has an important part in the screen production. Others in the cast are Christine Mayo, Walter Law, Suzanne Colbert, and George Deneubourg.

Only in one important respect does the screen version differ from the stage presentation of the greatest mystery play of modern times. It was impossible on the stage to effectively show the murder of Stephen Lee, which is referred to in the dialogue only, owing to the time limit. This murder is the central point in the plot, and Director Perret figured he could maintain all the suspense even though he staged a prologue. His judgment was vindicated by the finished product.

Along with "The Thirteenth Chair" Pathe is issuing one of the most complete lists of advertising accessories ever accompanying a motion picture.

In addition to the customary accessories, and a large number of unusual advertising features, the Pathe publicity department has just issued a special press sheet which will go to every motion picture editor in the United States and Canada.

Bookings on "The Thirteenth Chair" are surpassing all expectations—and Pathe expected a tremendous demand for the production. The fame of the play is so great that exhibitors see in the screen version one of the best cards of the year.

Saenger Co. Opens a New York Office

Material changes in methods of production and sales on state rights attractions have lead the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans and its affiliated enterprise, the Saenger Film and Supply Company, owning and operating seventy-five theatres in five southern states, to open a New York office which will be the official purchasing department for film and theatre accessories.

The office, in the Longacre Building, is in charge of W. H. Gueringer, assistant general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company.

Soldiers Luke-Warm on Stars

Director of Camp Upton Theatre Says Their Taste is for Strong Dramas

LINDSAY McKENNA, former manager of the Buffalo theatre at Camp Upton, I. I., where about two hundred thousand soldiers from every state in the union were entertained in the days following the signing of the armistice, is confident that the military training has made not only soldiers but movie fans as well. Country boys who had never seen a moving picture before they went to training camps are now confirmed fans and it is the belief of Mr. McKenna that many new small theatres will spring up in the rural districts.

Having been retired from the service this week Mr. McKenna is at liberty to talk freely of camp affairs for the first time, and his observations on the character of pictures liked by time, returning soldiers may be of value to producers and exhibitors because there are more than four million of these potential patrons of the moving picture theatre.

"The most significant thing," Mr. McKenna stated, "is the fact that the average soldier did not like the women motion picture stars who appear to be having the greatest popularity at this time. They were critical of them and they also manifested a dislike of society pictures and pictures with plenty of well dressed people in them. They wanted pictures of rough he-men, good red-blooded dramas and westerners, and comedy. We tried out some of the big women stars but they were not welcomed by the soldiers.

"In the four months of operation we played all the Robertson-Cole pictures and I cannot speak too highly of them.

"Almost any comedy was welcomed, but the Strand and Fox Sunshine comedies were the favorites. We were kept busy supplying the demand for these two. They rang the bell every time. The New York exchanges were splendid in their treatment of the theatre."

Initial Rinehart Novel for Film Picked

A telegram from Samuel Goldwyn at the Culver City studios of the Goldwyn company, announces that "Dangerous Days" will be the first production for Eminent Authors from the novels of Mary Roberts Rinehart. The author herself and two sons are in California and conferred in this decision, which makes her latest novel her first picture.

"Dangerous Days" is a picture of American society during the most deeply aroused period of our history, and the men and women are caught up in the great tide of an unsuspected current of life. It is a penetrating study of married life, beginning with Mrs. Haverford's question: "What do men want, anyway?"

World Secures Rights to Comedy Series

World Pictures announces the signing of contracts that will give this company the distributing rights to a series of two reel comedies that will be produced by the Cissy Fitzgerald Film Corporation. Miss Fitzgerald will be the star of these productions and is well fitted for the position. This international artist has had considerable experience in screen work having been associated with the Vitagraph.

Series of Indian Pictures on Market

C. B. Price, of C. B. Price Company, Inc., announces that they have secured the exclusive rights to a series of Indian pictures. These are dramatic subjects, one-reel in length, and feature Princess Mona Darkfeather one of the few Indian stars the screen has known. There are fifteen pictures in the series, to be known under the brand name of "Pricefilms," and they will be sold for State Rights.

The time is ripe, Mr. Price believes for a return of Indian pictures. The market for a number of years has had nothing in the way of the good old red-blooded Indian dramas that made motion pictures popular.

Two-Reeler Depicting Pershing's Life

A timely two-reel picture is just completed by the International Film Service Co., which releases the new reels. The subject of the two-reele is "Pershing, the Weapon of Destiny." The International Service sent a cameraman to Pershing's old home in Laclede, Mo., where the life of the great general as a boy was re-enacted his life at school and West Point are shown and then the American Punitive Expedition into Mexico is shown.

From this point the production pictures Pershing as the leader of the American Expeditionary Forces in France and Germany.

Emily Stevens Signed for Schomer Pictures

ABRAHAM S. SCHOMER, playwright and director announces the acquisition of Emily Stevens, the motion picture and legitimate actress, as the first star of the Schomer-Ross Producing Corp., and she has already started work on "The Sacred Flame" an original play by Mr. Schomer, who is also directing the picture at the Biograph Studios.

Mr. Schomer has gathered a supporting cast around Miss Stevens, which includes Earl Schenck, prominent for his success in "My Four Years in Germany," Maude Hill, Lionel Adams, Fred Clayton, and others.

Mr. Schomer in commenting on Miss Stevens' work remarked, "I know that I have an artist, not in the usual sense that the word is used, but in the true meaning it should signify, and when we have a dramatic scene, one with a real 'punch,' I know that I can safely rely on Miss Stevens' power to portray the part, as if it were a life-like occurrence."

Zion Films Reorganize

Zion Films, Inc., announces a reorganization has taken place and a program of super-productions has been laid out. S. Adler, the former president, has resigned, and M. Kehlman, the vice-president, has been appointed general manager.

Their first picture, "Khavah," based on the story by Sholom Aleichem, has been renamed "Broken Barriers." It was directed by Chas. E. Davenport, and has been highly praised by the critics of the various Trade Reviews.

E. R. Wood, head of the sales department, announces that he has sold the world's rights to "Broken Barriers" to Jules Burnstein.

Expedition Sends Film of Chinese Fighting

The first film to be sent to this country by the Universal Alder-Laemmle expedition into the Orient has arrived at the West coast studios. Although the expedition is covering the Orient for scenic productions and unusual photography it is most unusual that the first picture to be returned to this country should be that of a battle scene between Chinese forces.

Sylvia Breamer and Margaret Barry in scene from Blackton's "The Moonshine Trail," a Pathe release

First Blackton-Pathe Release

Title is Again Changed to "The Moonshine Trail"; Reappearance of Stars

ON the heels of the affiliation of the J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., and Pathe, as distributors, comes the announcement that the first Blackton production to be released through the Pathe Exchanges has again undergone a change in title.

After a conference of officials interested and another private view of the picture, it was unanimously decided that "The Moonshine Trail" is a more appropriate title for the human interest story presented in this first Blackton-Pathe production, and also a better exploitation title. So the photoplay hitherto announced as "Moonshine and Shadow" and then as "My Boy" now bears the definite and final title of "The Moonshine Trail."

Those who have had the privilege of witnessing a private screening of this newest product of the Blackton studios, declare that no picture ever bore a more appropriate title for its story than "The Moonshine Trail." This name immediately suggests the locale of the plot, the Cumberland Mountains, and also conveys an idea of the theme, the basis of the incidents which link a phase of city like with the life of the moonshiner of the mountains, presenting a romance which abounds in heart interest and human appeal, with melodramatic situations to keep the spectator intensely interested and at the same time a strong thread of comedy to add to its entertainment value.

The original story of "The Moonshine Trail," which Pathe announces for early Fall release to inaugurate the Blackton-Pathe affiliation, is from the collaborative pens of Commodore Blackton, under whose personal direction it was filmed, and Stanley Olmsted, Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon being the featured leads. Incidentally, "The Moonshine Trail" marks the return of Miss Breamer and Mr. Gordon as a stellar team, the two not having been seen on the screen together since their appearance in Commodore Blackton's Picture "Missing."

Famous Programs Two Stars

Billie Burke and Dorothy Dalton Are Seen in Second Selective Booking Week

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY announces as its feature release for September 7, the second week under Selective Booking, Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow" and Dorothy Dalton in "The Market of Souls." Both are Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

Added interest attaches to Miss Burke's appearance in "The Misleading Widow," for it is her first since the release of "Good Gracious, Annabelle," on the Paramount schedule many months ago. It also marks her first appearance since the signing of her new contract whereby she will continue as a Famous Players-Lasky star.

"The Misleading Widow" is an adaptation by Frances Marion of the successful play, "Billeted," by F. Tennyson-Jesse and H. M. Harwood, in which Margaret Anglin appeared in the leading role when it was presented in New York a season or two ago. It is a farce comedy.

"The Market of Souls" is a Thomas H. Ince production, directed by Joseph DeGrasse from an original story by John Lynch, the scenario being by C. Gardner Sullivan. In this picture, which was the last she made in California before coming East to make a series of productions under Mr. Ince's supervision, it is declared that Miss Dalton is more beautiful than ever and climbs to the greatest heights of her dramatic career.

With this picture, Famous Players-Lasky asserts, Joseph DeGrasse enters the ranks of the upper ten among directors.

Miss Dalton's leading man is H. E. Herbert, while Philo McCullogh appears as the erring brother. Dorcas Mathews and Donald McDonald are among the others in the cast.

Widely Read Serial Obtained

Parsons Buys Ladies' Home Journal Story as Vehicle for Billie Rhodes

THROUGH his New York general representative, Joseph Brandt, William Parsons has purchased George Weston's big Ladies' Home Journal serial success, "Mary Minds Her Business," and this will be the third Billie Rhodes production for release through the Hodkinson organization.

The purchase of "Mary Minds Her Business" brought Mr. Parsons into competition with virtually every big producing organization in America, as there had been a concerted rush for this story since its first installment in the August issue of the Journal. This serial will run until the February issue, appearing in seven issues of America's largest woman's magazine and having a circulation in excess of 14,000,000 copies of the magazine. Upon publication of the last installment, next February, the novel will be published in book form, and the motion picture version of the story will be released in January and advertised in that issue of the Ladies' Home Journal to link all the readers of the story with its screen presentation.

Billie Rhodes is now at work in the California studios of the National Film Corporation of America in her second Hodkinson release, Harold MacGrath's "Hearts and Masks." Her first production, "The Blue Bonnet," is just now being released throughout the country by Hodkinson, after a most favorable reception in first run theatres where the pre-release showings were held, and at the hands of the trade journal critics.

Mr. Parsons is determined that all Billie Rhodes productions for the next twelve months shall be from previously published books or plays by authors of recognized popularity.

Change Title of Norma Talmadge's Picture

The title of Norma Talmadge's next Select, "By Right of Conquest," by Arthur Hornblow, editor of the Theatre Magazine and author of many novelizations from Charles Klein's plays, has been changed to "The Call of Nature." "The Call of Nature" will be the next Norma Talmadge picture to follow "The Way of a Woman," and will probably be released during the month of October. "The Call of Nature" was directed by Edward Jose, who recently formed his own producing company to make six Jose Productions for Film Specials, Inc. Wyndam Standing will be seen as Miss Talmadge's leading man.

Constance Binney to Have Cinderella Role

The universally beloved Cinderella role falls to the star of "Erstwhile Susan," Constance Binney's first Realart picture, which tells the story of the blossoming of a poor little household drudge into a glorious young woman. The picture was adapted by Kathryne Stuart from the successful stage vehicle which served Mrs. Fiske a couple of seasons ago. That play came, originally, from "Barnabetta," the novel by Helen R. Martin, and the photoplay version includes, it is claimed, the best features of play and book.

Snow "Atmosphere" is a Summer Puller

"Polar atmosphere is the biggest antidote for hot weather. Capitalizing in the Northern locale of 'Mints of Hell,' the Robertson-Cole feature distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, the White House Theatre, Milwaukee, played to capacity despite exceptionally warm weather," declared Manager Otto Meister.

Known Works Only Will Be Used by Realart

A point of view regarding production which most exhibitors will consider unique is advanced this week by Realart Pictures Corporation.

What can the profit be, it asks, of securing the services of favorably known stars, competent directors and expert cameramen, of preparing for elaborate productions, and then entrusting all those expensive necessities to an untried vehicle?

Realart argues that this not only is poor business practice, but the best possible justification for its refusal to consider scenarios of any sort, no matter how good, or by whom written, unless they are based upon a recognized, successful book or stage play.

As a practical working proposition the Realart plan already is said to have resulted in a decision not to read or consider submitted photoplay material. The policy adopted is to choose the books and stage plays desired and then, after the motion picture rights have been obtained, to employ recognized continuity writers to adapt the material to photoplay purposes.

This plan has been followed with success it is reported in the cases of all the Realart productions now being made and will be continued as a permanent policy.

Mary Miles Minter, Constance Binney and Alice Brady are all working on pictures taken from well known works.

Gladys Brockwell Has Emotional Role

Gladys Brockwell, the William Fox star, as Nella Banard in "Broken Commandments," had a part that that calls upon her to run full gamut of human emotion; and reviewers have declared her complete triumph in this—have found her at all points convincing and most impressive. The impulsive love of a young girl leads her to trust overmuch one of two men who come to her cabin home from the unknown when she is without protection; and from this develops a story in which every moment is tense, with love, anxiety or suffering until the final happy climax.

Publicity for New Universal

"Right to Happiness" Campaign Will Be Designed to Appeal to Exhibitors

THE exploitation campaign planned by Universal on "The Right to Happiness" is designed especially for exhibitors managing large houses who are in the habit of advertising a production to the fullest extent.

The first run in New York City of the production was given at the Park theatre on Saturday evening, August 30. Mediums other than the usual reliable publicity channels, such as trade papers and newspaper ads were: the distribution of some 300,000 hand bills in various sections of the city, the distribution of more than 75,000 cardboard fans, and the use of some 500,000 small stickers. The electric sign over the front of the theatre is some 75 feet in length and can be seen for many city blocks.

New York City and its environs were thoroughly covered with posters announcing the production. Subways, elevateds, and 24 sheet stands were utilized. No space was left unused. New York citizens knew that a real picture was to be given, its premier showing on August 30. This is proven by the fact that during the first two days hundreds of people were turned away from the box-office.

Besides the newspaper ads Universal placed the newspaper publicity in the hands of an experienced press agent who with the cooperation of the Universal home office kept a running supply of publicity to all the New York publications. Seldom if ever has any production received so much publicity prior to its premier showing.

On Labor Day, the third day after the opening of the production, another novel stunt was enacted. More than 50,000 persons attending the great race at the Belmont track on Long Island, witnessed the flight of Lieutenant Charles S. Jones over the grandstands where he dropped about 25 complimentary tickets to the Park theatre. Lt. Jones is an American war pilot and is one of the aviators who made a perfect score in the New York-Toronto international air race held last week.

Goldwyn Appoints Press Men

More Service Representatives Named; But One Vacancy in Twenty-two Offices

WITH the exception of Salt Lake City, where it is expected that an appointment will be made within the next week, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has completed its list of press and service representatives located at the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges for the purpose of assisting exhibitors in giving their pictures the most effective and complete exploitation possible. In most of the exchanges the press and service experts have been co-operating with exhibitors for the past month, and judging from the letters received at the home office their services are thoroughly appreciated by theatre managers who have been showing Goldwyn films.

Recent appointments, bringing the total up to twenty-one, are Frank C. Teck, Seattle; Gertrude R. Deppen, Dallas; W. Bodin, San Francisco and Mack McSween, New York. Spencer Sladdin has been named to succeed A. A. Lionais in Boston. From the many available applicants, Goldwyn has been careful in every instance to select those who have had a thorough newspaper training, usually combined with experience in practical showmanship.

Mr. Teck, the Seattle representative, is a newspaper man, magazine writer and publisher, who is widely known in the Northwest where he has spent most of his life.

Gertrude R. Deppen, at the Dallas exchange, is the second woman to be installed as a press and service representative, the other being Unda Hamren at the Omaha branch. Miss Deppen has been engaged in advertising work for several years.

Mack McSween, appointed in the New York territory, is a newspaper and advertising man who has made a special study of the handling of motion pictures.

Moving Into Larger Quarters

Contractors Working on Realart's New Offices to Be on Fifth Avenue

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week that the contractor had begun work in the partitioning of the new quarters soon to be occupied by the home office executive departments of Realart Pictures Corporation at 469 Fifth Avenue. Realart is to have the entire fourth floor of this building, the Winfield, which is at the corner of Fortieth Street. It is expected that the contractor will have the place ready for occupancy within a month.

The move from the present temporary quarters will mark the end of the preliminary period of Realart's organization. By that time the company's first releases probably will have been announced and the detailed and involved work of organizing the various departments will have been completed. Several of the executives have been named: J. S. Woody, general sales manager; Ben F. Simpson, field manager; John Pond Fritts, director of publicity and advertising; Dario L. Faralla, comptroller; Lewis W. Kniskern, supervisor of contracts, and David E. Berman, purchasing agent.

Organization work began only a little more than two months ago. Since then the stars have been signed, directors engaged, stories purchased, companies put to work, branch managers appointed, branch offices opened in twenty cities, quarters for home offices rented, advertising and publicity material of all sorts prepared, and a mass of details connected with the launching of a photoplay enterprise has been settled. The work throughout has been under the supervision of the president, Arthur S. Kane, and the bulk of it actually has had his personal attention.

The foreign marketing will be conducted through the New York office the policy being to sell productions on a territorial basis.

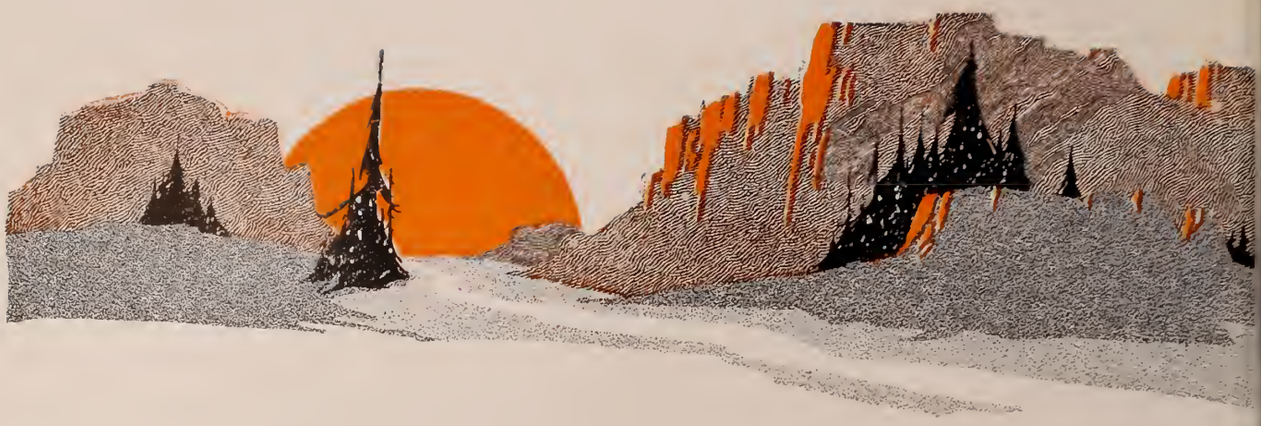
Arthur Smith Named to Vitagraph Post

Arthur V. Smith, brother of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has been appointed assistant to the president with headquarters at the Brooklyn studio. He entered on his new duties on Monday.

Mr. Smith formerly was studio manager of the Brooklyn plant. When the United States entered the war he entered the officers' school at Plattsburgh, although he was beyond the draft age, and won his commission as first lieutenant.



Author Cohen Elusive

Goldwyn is having a hard time keeping in touch with their new author, Octavus Roy Cohen. His first story for picturization is expected any day, but he has not been located. The last news of Mr. Cohen was to the effect that he was setting out on his annual tour. As an old newspaper man, he cannot keep away from the scenes of his early activities; and every year, he takes a few weeks off to swing around the circuit of his former jobs as reporter and editor.

Chambers' Tale Almost Completed by Rolfe

With the exception of one group of a half dozen scenes, B. A. Rolfe has completed the work of picturizing the exteriors for "The Amazing Lovers," his first production for presentation through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., and also the first of the Robert W. Chambers series of stories, recently acquired, to be converted into screen entertainment. "The Amazing Lovers" is an adaptation by Charles A. Logue of "The Shining Band."

Publicity Stunt Makes a Unique Hit

That's an old stunt and never can be worked again," was the reply Arthur E. MacHugh received from all angles when he stated he would like to convert the Broadway theatre into a moving picture studio and have a number of the girls from the audience come upon the stage and pose in various bathing costumes, the prettiest of the group being given an offer to go to the Coast to appear in Mack Sennett pictures.

But it Did work and went over.

"Mack," who by the way is press agent for B. S. Moss, made an announcement through all the daily papers that there would be an amateur Bathing Girl night and all contestants should please send in their names to Mr Leon Langsfeld manager of Moss' Broadway. Beside the newspaper announcement he placed three large signs around the lobby of the theatre in fron. of the building stating the management's plans in detail.

After the first performance the curtain was raised and there was a studio right before the eyes of the audience, with the Kliegle lights, the dressing tables with the make-up boxes, the two Gaumont cameramen, the still cameraman from the Press Illustrated, the directors etc.

If the girls were found to be anywhere near the type wanted they were sent to the dressing rooms where they were given bathing costumes a goodly number of them getting one-piece suits in which they had to parade before the audience in various poses while the cameras were chuggin away and registering every move thy made. This, however, did not take place until every contestant was made up by a member of the Mack Sennett Company, who are under the management of Sol Lesser.

By a process of elimination seven girls were picked by acclaim of the audience and were offered positions in a road company.

Director George Archainbaud has completed taking scenes of "The Stormy Petrel," starring Louise Huff, and this picture is rapidly being made ready for distribution.

Booking Marks Go by Board

Robertson-Cole Features Taken for Year by Six First Run Playhouses

BREAKING all records for many months, Exhibitors Mutual, last week secured six contracts from first run houses in the larger cities for Robertson-Cole features, booking them according to a solid schedule, fifty-two features for the year. In addition, Loew's Orpheum Theatre, Boston, has booked the Warner and Barriscale series of pictures. The Strand Theatre, Erie, has booked the new Hayakawa series for full week's run.

The Palace Theatre, Washington and The Metropolitan, Baltimore, in addition to booking the features will also run during the year, fifty-two of Robertson-Cole's Strand Comedies. Both of these theatres are big first run houses catering to the highest class of patrons.

Pantages Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., is probably the largest house in that city. It is said to be one of the best first run houses in the South. The fifty-two Robertson-Cole features will each have a week's run. The Modern, one of Providence, R. I., newer houses; The Palace, Milwaukee, and the Sun, Springfield, Ohio, complete the list of six theatres which have signed contracts.

Loew's Lyceum Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., has booked the Hayakawa features and the Davis Enterprises has contracted for several Desmond pictures and the Barriscale series for week runs over the Davis Circuit.

The principal theatres in Pendleton, Oregon and Reno, Nevada, are now running Robertson-Cole features, booking them through Exhibitors Mutual. The former runs all of the Robertson-Cole features and the latter has contracted for them on the star series basis.

"These towns are fair examples of the many that are showing Robertson-Cole pictures," stated an official of that organization. "The exhibitors are prosperous and report that their patrons are invariably satisfied. This proves materially that the small town exhibitor is one of the biggest factors in the motion picture industry. As a rule he offers the people of his community their only form of entertainment."

Restaurant in Fox Building

New Structure to Be Opened with a Banquet in Cost-Price Dining Room

ACCORDING to present arrangements ceremonies connected with the formal opening of the new William Fox building at Tenth avenue, 55th to 56th streets, will be accompanied by an elaborate banquet.

The banquet, as planned will be held in the main room of the restaurant which is to be established within the building for the benefit of the Fox employees. This restaurant will be opened on a cost basis. Prices will fluctuate according to market prices of foodstuffs, and everything on the daily menu will be sold to the employees of the company at actual cost thereby cutting the price to the consumer to the lowest possible figure.

William Fox himself will be the first customer of the restaurant, which will be of as much advantage to the producer as to the various departments of the company. Mr. Fox frequently finds himself so busy that it is necessary to send out for luncheon. With the installation of the restaurant in the new building this embarrassment will be obviated, for while at table he can keep in constant touch with every member of his home office organization.

The dining room will have a seating capacity of about two hundred, and arrangements will be made whereby the various departments will lunch at hours that do not conflict. The kitchen equipment will be up to the minute. Sanitary dry food bins will be installed; air-tight canisters for teas and coffees, dishwashing machinery, and fine table ware will be used. The whole room will be finished in ivory white, and the entire kitchen will be done in white.

Rogers on Second Production

Lee Kiddies, Under Tefft Johnson's Direction, Completing "The Kids from Dixie"

THE second of the series of Jane and Katherine Lee comedy playlets produced by the Lou Rogers Film Corporation and directed by Tefft Johnson is rapidly approaching completion, according to a statement from Mr. Rogers this week. The balance of the exteriors are to be filmed during the current week in the neighborhood of New York City.

A feature unusual in the two-reel class of comedy offering will be provided in the forthcoming Lee playlet, in which scenes of unusual magnitude are called for, a particular instance of this being a pretentious set comprising a specially constructed village scene, and "class" is added to the set by the filming of church interiors, choristers, etc., for which a hundred or more supernumeraries were employed. Another scene shows trick animals, dogs, geese, etc., in antics with the Lee children.

This second of the two-reel series is titled "The Kids from Dixie," and in keeping with the atmosphere a special trip was made by the little principals and their company to Georgia for the filming of this part of the feature.

Prominent in the supporting cast selected by Mr. Rogers in conjunction with Director Tefft Johnson, are Mme. Marceau, Leslie Austin, and George Halpin. In addition, for the colored players necessary to the comedy a number of Southern artists were engaged locally. J. A. Titus, internationally famous as the author of "The Face on the Bar-room Floor," and locally yclept, "The Bard of Tarrytown," plays the role of the cleric in the church scenes. Mr. Titus numbers among his dramatic experiences appearances in support of Booth and Barrett. Leslie Austin, well known in supporting roles for Constance Talmadge and other screen stars plays, the part of "Billy" with the Lee Kids, while Alice Brundage is also seen in an important role.

Fine Reports on Late Fairbanks Film

First reports are coming through on the opening of Douglas Fairbanks' initial release through United Artists Corporation, "His Majesty, the American," and while but few theatres have so far been heard from, the reports come from a sufficiently wide territory to indicate that some startling facts and figures are going to be made public within the next few weeks.

The picture opened in numerous cities on Sept. 1 of this week. A wire from the Chicago territory reports that the Riviera, Central Park and Woodlawn theatres in Chicago opened to enormous crowds. The Garden theatre in Davenport, Iowa, and the Princess in Joliet, Illinois, report extraordinary business.

A telegram received from Sig Samuels, general manager of the Criterion Theatre Company in Atlanta, reports that "His Majesty, the American," broke all house records, both in attendance and in cash receipts.

"13th Chair" Drawing

Reports reaching the Pathe Home Office indicate that "The Thirteenth Chair," the "special" produced by the Acme Pictures Corporation starring Yvonne Delva and Creighton Hale, is proving one of the biggest features of the year.

A telegram received from the Washington Exchange of Pathe last week, quoted Harry Bernstein, of the Jake Wells interests in Richmond, Va., as reporting all records for the big Isis theatre in Richmond shattered by "The Thirteenth Chair."

Erich Stroheim

Gaze on this man

This man's ambition is to make himself the most hated man on the screen.

He will succeed with the men, but we don't know whether the women will hate him or not.

* * *

He has just done a most amazing thing.

* * *

He has just finished directing one of the greatest screen productions ever made, AND IT IS THE FIRST AND ONLY PICTURE HE EVER DIRECTED.

* * *

His name is Erich Stroheim.

He played the role of the villain in Allen Holubar's photodramatic sensation, "The Heart of Humanity," starring Dorothy Phillips.

When that picture was completed Mr. Stroheim went to Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and begged for the opportunity of directing a picture.

"Why man alive, you're crazy," was Mr. Laemmle's amused reply, "you never directed a picture in your life."

"I know it," was the response. "I know I never directed a picture. I know I'm crazy. But, I know something greater than all that. I KNOW I CAN MAKE A MASTER PICTURE."

Well, Mr. Laemmle has taken many a chance in his moving picture career. Most of them have been blessed with what is known as "Laemmle Luck." But the greatest chance he ever took was when, against the advice of the whole industry, he took a chance on giving an absolutely green, untried director a chance to make a huge production.

That's one part of the story. Now follow this:

When Mr. Johnson sees a picture that he really likes, it almost makes him sick, because if there is one thing on earth he hates to do it is to praise a picture.

"The Pinnacle"

Julian Johnson

And then on this

On the other hand, he takes a fiendish delight in biting holes in hundreds of pictures that he doesn't like. It is claimed that he has almost worn his teeth down to nothing biting bad pictures and good ones, too.

Now then, bear in mind that Mr. Stroheim has just made the first picture he ever produced in his life. Then bear in mind that Mr. Johnson loathes the very idea of saying that any picture is great. With this carefully planted in your mind, please read what the most criticalest critic in captivity says of the greenest director and the man who wants to be the most hated man on the screen.

* * *

Mr. Johnson writes in the New York Evening World:

"Remember Erich Stroheim, the irreproachable young German Lieutenant of Mr. Griffith's 'Hearts of the World'?

"Well—Stroheim wrote a story of the Austrian Tyrol—entitled 'THE PINNACLE'—and he not only sold the story to Carl Laemmle of Universal but he also sold himself with it, as Director, notwithstanding that he had never directed a scene in his life!

"The result is one of those miraculous things which often occur in novels, but seldom in real life.

"'THE PINNACLE' is a flawless picture—an absorbingly interesting one—a powerful one.

"I know, because I have just seen it, and certainly I was as much surprised as any. Directors no more spring full-armed from their mere intentions than do writers, or composers, or playwrights.

"But Stroheim did—proving that nothing is so contradictory as life.

* * *

"I forgot to say that Stroheim also acts the principal part."

Close-up of Emile Chautard, whose productions will be handled by Realart

Wistaria Company is on Location

Burton King, vice-president and director general, Wistaria Productions, Inc., with a company of fifty players headed by Anne Luther and George Larken, co-stars of Wistaria's new serial production, "The Lurking Peril," left New York this week for Stroudsburgh, Pa., and Delaware Water Gap, where he will shoot several of the thrillers of the serial. The script calls for a fall over a cliff and Director King after scouting the East for suitable location, decided upon the high palisades along the Delaware Water Gap.

Pathe's French Star Back from Paris

Yvonne Delva, star of "The Thirteenth Chair," which Pathe is releasing as a "Special," returned last week from Paris, where she went following the completion of the screen version of Bayard Veiller's million dollar stage success. Miss Delva brought back with her a dozen gowns, which set back her exchequer in the neighborhood of 20,000 francs.

The young French star also returned with some wonderful stories of life in Paris which, following the armistice, assumed much of its former gayety.

Minter Film Probably Realart's First

Although no official statement has yet been issued regarding what will be the first release of the new Realart Pictures Corporation, reports which are available of the progress of work indicate that one of the productions which will appear on the schedule for the opening month is "Anne of Green Gables," Mary Miles Minter's initial Realart release. Miss Minter's company has been for several weeks at Dedham, Mass., engaged in the work of taking exteriors and the understanding is these will be completed in time to give the picture an early place on the Realart calendar.

Through the C. B. Price Company, Inc., twelve Charles Chaplin comedy features were sold to Allen Brothers for the entire Dominion of Canada, for the Clarke-Cornelius Corporation, owners of the Chaplin's, which were made for Mutual and have been revised for further release.

New Hayakawa Series Due

Robertson-Cole Announces First, from Well-Known Novel, for October Release

THE first of the new series of Hayakawa Superior Pictures produced by Haworth, will be released in October through Exhibitors' Mutual according to an announcement made by Robertson-Cole. This series is being awaited by exhibitors for the reason that the entire series will be Superior Pictures, a higher standard than that demanded for the initial series which have established this famous actor as one of the foremost box-office attractions. Figures based on advance reports and contracts received from Exhibitors Mutual show that the series of eight Hayakawa productions will start in over four thousand houses and Robertson-Cole expects this to be increased at nearly the same ratio that gave the initial series starting with a few hundred and having four thousand bookings at the end of the season.

A picturization of R. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, "The Illustrious Prince," will be the first release of the series. It is declared by those who have seen it to be one of the strongest pictures that Sessue Hayakawa has ever played in. The story itself has mystery, high dramatic value and a strong human appeal. It concerns a Japanese who travels with the one purpose, finding the man who had stained his father's honor. In England where he meets the one girl, he also meets the man he has been searching for. He does not falter in his avenging mission, and the man is murdered. The mystery is solved by the confession of a servant and the Japanese is acquitted and he returns to his own people with a name no longer under the reflection of dishonor. The production has been given the care and lavish detail that has marked the Hayakawa pictures.

The second of the series will also be a picturization of a novel, an entirely different type of story, however. The book, somewhat of a tragic romance has had wide circulation.

Houdini Signs for Long Term

Famous-Lasky, Following Reports on "The Grim Game" to Exploit Liberator

SO great has been the success scored by Houdini, self liberator and monarch of magic, in "The Grim Game," his Paramount-Artcraft picture which is now filling an advance engagement at the Broadway theatre, New York, that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has signed him to a long-term contract to appear in feature films. This announcement was made at the Famous Players-Lasky offices Friday by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President, in charge of production.

It is understood that Houdini's first appearance under the new contract will be in a five-reel mystery feature to be written by A. B. Reeve and John W. Gray, who wrote "The Grim Game," and that the authors have already started work on the story. Houdini, it is stated, will leave within a short time for California where the new picture will be filmed. It is further stated that while the story will have a mystery plot, giving Houdini an opportunity to do original stunts such as have made him famous throughout the world, it will in no way resemble "The Grim Game" except that it will be a thriller of the first magnitude.

Houdini's original contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation called for only one picture, for although his ability in his potential value as screen entertainment was a more or less uncertain quantity, especially so on account of the fact that his motion picture experience had been limited to one serial.

When "The Grim Game" was finished and was seen on the screen by the Famous Players-Lasky executives, the fact was recognized that he was not merely a stunt man but was an accomplished actor. The unanimous praise which has been bestowed upon his picture by the critics and the general public has confirmed this judgment. Moreover, the decision to have Mr. Reeve and Mr. Gray again collaborate on a story for him is considered, in the light of the success scored by "The Grim Game," to be a most happy one.

Mystery Play Attracts

"The Man Who Stayed at Home," Metro's mystery melodrama, has been doing big business. Not only did it do a tremendous business in its Los Angeles premiere, at Clune's big Broadway theatre, but evoked the following testimonial from W. H. Clune:

"Just concluded a week's run of your Classic, 'The Man Who Stayed at Home.' We don't often comment upon the productons we run, but so satisfactory were the results of this engagement we feel justified in this instance. It had a happy combination of thrills, heart interest, action, and suspense, giving it a broad appeal. Audiences were enthusiastic and pronounced it a splendid production. Congratulations.

Will Rogers "Gets Across"

Samuel Goldwyn, Rex Beach, president of the Eminent Authors, Rupert Hughes and others in the Goldwyn organization now located at Culver City, viewed a completed print of Will Rogers' first Goldwyn Picture "Almost a Husband," last week.

Here is an extract from a wire sent by Mr. Goldwyn to Gabriel L. Hess at the home office, the day following the showing:

"Saw Rogers picture to-day and am certain he will create a sensation. Everyone including Beach very enthusiastic. He is absolutely in a class by himself."

The promise of a screen triumph for the comedian of "The Follies" is particularly gratifying to Goldwyn executives. Motion picture history contains many instances of celebrated stage stars who have failed to register when removed from the medium of expression in which they have been trained, and wise picture men know that they always run the risk of picking an actor or an actress whose personality fails to "get over" on the screen.

According to the report from the coast, Will Rogers has fulfilled the highest hopes of Mr. Goldwyn when he engaged the comedian. It was felt that the next real comedy star must represent something "different" and that if Rogers could bring his comedy genius to bear on his studio work, he would occupy a unique place in current picture entertainment.

The chief question was whether the comedian could "get across" when robbed of his clever monologues. The most critical audience of directors and writers that Mr. Goldwyn could assemble on the coast was unanimous in its declaration that the "actor that doesn't act" has solved the problem of screen comedy without the loss of any of his laugh-getting power.

Constance Talmadge has almost completed her second First National picture, "The Bachelor," by Clyde Fitch. Like "The Temperamental Wife," this story is a John Emerson-Anita Loos adaptation and is being directed by David Kirkland.

Gertrude Claire and Wallace MacDonald have been engaged to support Frank Keenan in his next picture, "The Lite Test."

This week will probably see the concluding of Eugene O'Brien's second Selznick picture, "Sealed Hearts." Director Ralph Ince along with O'Brien, Edeson and Lucille Stewart have been sticking close to the grindstone to finish the last scenes.

Special Service Section on

E. K. Lincoln in "Desert Gold"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared atfer studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here, and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

GENERAL SUMMARY OF FILM

ANY exhibitor who books "Desert Gold" may sit back with the assurance that he has secured a picture which will make money for him if his crowd like Western stuff and also feel that the feature will get by as entertainment.

We don't mind telling you that reduced to plot "Desert Gold" goes the limit with the long arm of coincidence but that is the fault of Zane Grey who wrote the story and the producers are to be credited with sense enough to have followed the story in fiction form regardless of the fact that as photoplay material it is as old as Western stories are old. Therefore inasmuch as the producers have an alibi, you as exhibitor have one if any patron is to question the plot. In fact if a continuity writer had attempted to take liberties with the story as has been done in many cases where a picture has been produced from a popular novel, your audience would be a good deal more apt to resent it even if as a picture the changed version was a great improvement.

We of course know that the very first thing you considered when booking "Desert Gold" was the fame of the novel added to that of Zane Grey as a writer of Western melodramatic stories which have kept many a man awake nights to see just how the villain was going to be defeated in his nefarious purpose.

"Desert Gold" was melodrama in novel form, and it is melodrama still, as it is pictured with enough fights and gun battles to satisfy the most blood thirsty. The picture has action of the kind which really convinces, and it is in this department that you can depend on its pleasing patrons.

The producers are advertising it for an all-star cast production and it really comes pretty closely to the claim for a fine cast of great types has been provided with not a "super" or camera conscious character being presented.

Besides Mr. Lincoln who is well known as a leading man, other names which will mean something to your audiences are Margery Wilson, who will be remembered in several old Triangle-Ince productions, a number of times as leading woman for Hart, Eileen Percy, also an ex-Ince leading woman, who has appeared opposite both Fairbanks and Hart, Russell Simpson, a great character actor who your patrons will recognize even if they do not identify his name. All the rest of the cast are capable people, too, and the acting is of the very highest order. The direction is by T. Hayes Hunter who has a good reputation on stories of this kind.

Summed up, this picture recommends itself for the following reasons. Adapted from a very popular novel by an author of repute, a good star to feature and other players of note, a western story always of interest and some great scenic shots.

The picture is in seven reels, or rather six reels and a prologue, as the first reel is practically separate from the story proper and only serves to make more plausible the co-incidence of which we have spoken.

WHAT THE FEATURE IS ABOUT

THE first part of the story has to do with two men who meet in the American Desert and you'll learn that the older man is looking for his daughter's supposed betrayer and that the younger man is the person for whom he is searching.

The two men perish in a sand storm after the younger has found a lost gold mine, marked it with a monument and used his marriage certificate to announce his discovery of the lode.

The story then goes to another location where a young army officer is attempting to rescue his sweetheart from the attentions of a Mexican bandit. In this he is aided by E. K. Lincoln, the girl finally being taken to a ranch by Lincoln while the officer returns to his post.

The hero goes to work on the ranch after having fallen in love with the ranchman's daughter and while riding in the foothills rescues a Yaqui Indian from the bandit's gang and thereby gains his undying devotion.

The Mexican who is bending all his energies to securing possession of the officer's sweetheart learns that the girl is at the ranch and with his band comes to secure her. The ranchman thinking to outwit the bandit tells him to wait until morning and then most of the cowboys, including the hero, attempt to convoy the girl to safety, with the aid of the Yaqui as a guide. Their plan is frustrated, however, through the treachery of one of the ranchman's servants and the Mexicans are soon on the trail. High up in the mountains a fight is forced on the Americans which finally results in victory for the defenders, although many of them are badly wounded.

While the ranchmen are away, the period covering several weeks, a man has come into the valley where the cattleman has lived and established water rights and through a legal technicality succeeded in obtaining possession of the ranchman's holdings to such an extent that the property would be without water and therefore valueless.

The girl with whom Lincoln has fallen in love learns in the meantime that she is an adopted daughter and supposedly an illegitimate child. She therefore refuses to marry Lincoln when he returns. The young officer and his sweetheart, however, are married.

Preparations are made by the rancher and his family to leave for their home but before this has become necessary, the Yaqui guides Lincoln to the lost lode of gold which the two prospectors had staked and of which the Yaqui tribe had known. The Yaqui tells Lincoln that he is giving the gold mine to the girl.

In coming back from the trip, the Yaqui also shows Lincoln the source of the river whose waters are to be denied the rancher and therefore by right of discovery Lincoln is able to claim a water right above the place where the newcomer has legally proven a title. He also found the marriage certificate left by the miner as discoverer of the lode of gold and as it is proven that the ranchman's adopted daughter is the prospector's child and that he was legally married to the girl's mother, she therefore becomes the owner of the claim. The finding of the marriage certificate also removes the barrier which she had chosen to raise against marrying Lincoln and the film closes with a happy ending.

COMPARISONS AND OPINIONS

COMPARED to the other Zane Grey stories this ranks rather better than the most of them, especially so far as the production goes. It certainly has been well acted and the individual action registers in every scene. There is that rush and tempo to the action scenes which used to characterize the old Kay Be Westerns and in fact this picture is constructed a good deal along the same lines.

We would say that the pictures ranks along with "The Westerners," and much better than "The Border Legion" and if you made money with these productions and your people liked them, there is no reason why this story shouldn't go over quite as well.

Concerning the story, there isn't the slightest doubt in your mind as to its outcome from the time that you first see the two girls, although at first you will be in doubt as to which of the two, Margery Wilson or Eileen Percy is to turn out to be the prospector's long lost daughter. There is also little suspense except that which is secured in the individual sequences but the interest in these comes quick and fast and you are rushed from one bit of action to the next so quickly that the lack of this element will hardly be felt.

ADVERTISING ANGLES

THE first thing that you want to keep in mind in advertising this picture is the title and the author, with all other matters coming in for smaller mention. We should say for third, the cast as a whole rather than the singling of E. K. Lincoln as he really has a rather tame role compared to some of the others and smiles his way through it for lack of something better to do.

We would use all the cast in billing this picture with Lincoln, Miss Wilson, Miss Percy and Russell Simpson given a little extra attention.

This is another picture for big paper and a twenty-four sheet whose merits you may judge has been reproduced for your inspection, will be available when you are ready for it.

The publishers of the novel, Grosset and Dunlap, have been induced to cooperate in advertising both film and book and advantageous tie-ups can without doubt be arranged through them and your local book stores. You will also have no trouble if you go about it right to getting drug stores and other mercantile emporiums to work with you on a display. Especially is this true of the department stores which are always looking for something to bring their book departments into prominence.

A song has been written and is being marketed through Watterson, Berlin and Snyder and Co., titled "Desert Gold," and you can tie up your presentation of Desert Gold with this nationally advertised piece of music.

If we could get the material, meaning enough copies of the novel, or dummies we think that a lobby display made of books similar to that which the book stores will be using would be a mighty fine piece of exploitation.

For instance, suppose you were to place the books on sale for a week before your opening date, at a price less than regular and work with some of the stores on a selling campaign for the whole Zane Grey series. Not only would it attract attention for you but no doubt quite a neat sum could be realized in profits. Or if you don't want to bother with it, turn your lobby over to a book store and let them build a display and do the selling. The publicity is what you want and this would get it.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAY ADVICE

FOR catch lines for your newspaper advertising we would suggest something like this: "A romantic story of the great American Desert, visualizing Zane Grey's great novel in its entirety and with no additions to plot or action. One of the real Western stories which thrills and warms the blood."

"A story of love that endured enacted in the heart of the great American Desert. A film which is filled with dramatic action with brave men doing great deeds; with wonderful scenery and great mountain heights as a background."

"A tale of the desert, thrilling and romantic, with action and heart interest in every single sequence. A picture which visualizes Zane Grey's great dramatic novel as it should be presented. Enacted by a cast of unequaled prominence."

For selling talk, something like thi would be suitable:

"Into the desert of ever shifting sands walked two men to their death yet they did not give their lives in vain. From the result of their journey many who still lived were made happy, one near and dear to those who had found life dreary. It is a tale of strange destinies that Zane Grey has woven about his unusual characters in "Desert Gold," types who lived a generation past but whose exploits still thrill and enthrall. The story is ripe with action typical of the sort American audiences enjoy. It builds ever to its happy finale and you view it with the satisfaction of having lived through an experience of an ancestor, from whom you hope to have enherited the fighting blood and love for fair play which he displayed."

"Men lived and loved in a more primitive way a generation past in the country where the characters of Zane Grey's great novel, "Desert Gold," enact the scenes which sees the happy ending to a double romance and the defeat of the unworthy in the rough struggle for life in this far western country of ever shifting sand where death lurked always in the shadow. Wealth and happiness came to those who survived the unequal struggle with nature. Those who died, however, lived not in vain."

"Soldiers of Fortune" Cast Announced

TWO players who have been stars and one who has been prominent in dramatic art for a quarter-century are included in the cast of "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production, which is now being completed at Hollywood. The picture is based on the Richard Harding Davis story which Augustus Thomas dramatized and is being made by Mr. Dwan for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, which will release it through Realart.

"In this production and the ones to follow, there will be no one player starred," said Mr. Dana. "I will devote my entire energies to presenting big stories in a big way and in engaging players, I will employ the best available actors who are fitted to interpret the various roles."

Norman Kerry will play "Clay." This was the part originated on the stage by Robert Edeson. Mr. Kerry was prominent in the support of Mary Pickford in several of her most successful productions, among them "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley" and "The Little Princess."

In the part of the Wall Street financier, "Mr. Langham," will be seen Melbourne MacDowell, who has a record of twenty-five years on the American stage and who has been a popular favorite with several generations of playgoers. Since transferring his art from the stage to the screen, Mr. MacDowell has been in a number of photoplays produced by the leading companies. He is well remembered for his delineation of "Black Jack" in "The Flame of the Yukon," in which Dorothy Dalton was starred.

Pauline Starke, star and leading lady in a number of Triangle pictures, plays "Hope Langham." Miss Starke was a member of the cast of "The Fall of Babylon," D. W. Griffith's production, which recently finshed a long run at George M. Cohan's theatre in New York. "Alice Langham" will be portrayed by Anna Q. Nilsson, one of the beautiful women of the screen and very popular with photoplay followers.

Wilfred Lucas, Wallace Beery, Ward Crane, Frank Wally, Fred Kohler, and others are also in the cast.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces the forthcoming release of the newest Ford Educational Weekly, "Going South," tor Sept. 14. The picture is a travelogue, which reveals some of the oldest spots in the oldest cities of the United States.

Leading Houses Book All Metros

Crandall Chain Takes Entire Output and Circuits Also

FURTHER confirmation of the soundness of Metro's policy and productions is contained in announcements issued last week of the wide bookings being given the service.

The Loew Circuit of theatres in New York and other cities has booked the whole Metro supply of releases. The new Capitol theatre on Broadway at Fifty-first street has booked "The Brat" and also the first three of the new Screen Classics, Inc., productions.

Besides the Capitol and the Loew Circuit, the other theatres which have taken all Nazimova Productions and all Screen Classics, Inc., specials, are the Merrill and Strand theatres, in Milwaukee, Wis., under the managership of E. O. Bostick; the Rialto, in Des Moines, Ia.; the California theatre, in Los Angeles; the Ziegfeld theatre, the Balaban and Katz houses, and Asher Brothers' Circuit, in Chicago; and Crandall's circuit of seven houses in Washington, D. C., including Crandall's theatre, the Metropolitan, the Avenue Grand, in Pennsylvania avenue; the Knickerbocker, the Savoy, the Apollo and the Meaders.

Houses which already have booked "The Brat" and have practically given assurance that they will fall in line with the foregoing theatres and contract for the entire Metro output are John H. Kunsky's houses in Detroit; Finkelstein and Ruben's theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul; the Regent and Piccadilly, in Rochester, operated by the Rogerson Co., with William Callahan as manager; Shea's Hippodrome, in Buffalo, managed by Harold Franklin; the Colonial, in Indianapolis, Ind.; the Strand, in New Orleans, La., operated by the Sanger Amusement Company; the Stanley, in Philadelphia; the Grand Central, in St. Louis, Mo.; the Liberty, Kansas City, Mo.; the Queen, Dallas, Tex.; the Zoe theatre, Houston, Tex.; the Strand, Portland, Ore.; the Stillman and the Alhambra, Cleveland, O.; the Liberty, Pittsburgh; Loew's Dayton, in Dayton, O.; the Sun, Omaha, Neb.; the Forsythe, Atlanta, Ga.; the Wells Amusement Co. houses, including the Norfolk Circuit and the Richmond Circuit; the Rivoli and the Isis in Denver, Colo.; and James Clemmer's theatre, in Seattle, Wash.

The length of time of these bookings is not for a short run, but on the average for a week or more.

The entire output of the Metro service for 1919-20 has been booked by Harry M. Crandall, proprietor of the seven large and beautiful Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C. The contract will insure to the patrons of the Crandall theatres a continuous succession of Metro first-run productions.

This sweeping business deal, negotiated direct with Mr. Crandall by George W. Fuller, manager of the Metro Exchange in the national capital, means that for the coming season the Crandall theatres will show all of the thirty-six new Screen Classics, Inc., "fewer and better" productions, made from the works of celebrated authors and successful stage plays, as well as the Nazimova productions as they appear.

Mr. Crandall is the biggest exhibitor in Washington. His seven theatres are the best in their respective neighborhoods, and his Metropolitan, with a seating capacity of 1750, is the finest theatre in the capital city. It is there that Mr. Crandall makes his office, and it was there that Mr. Fuller, Metro's Washington representative, found him when he put through the transaction.

An Unusual List of Short Subjects

F. P.-Lasky Offer Varied Entertaining Productions

A PRETENTIOUS list of short subjects is scheduled for release on August 31 by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, including two comedies, a travel picture, a magazine reel, and a nature picture. In the case of two of the subjects the releases of this date mark their initial appearance on the Famous Players-Lasky schedule. These are "New Folks in Town," the first Paramount-Briggs comedy, and "Come Watch With Me the Passing Night," the first Paramount-Post Nature Picture.

"New Folks in Town," of one-reel length, carries an appeal, it is claimed, to people of all ages and should be welcomed with eagerness by the millions who have come to know and appreciate the quaint humor of Clare Briggs, the New York Tribune cartoonist. It should again be emphasized that these are not animated cartoons, but comedies based upon the Briggs cartoons. Here are "Skinny," "Buck," "Her," and all the other kid characters, interpreted by a splendid company of juvenile actors, including Stephen, John and Rosemary Carr. "New Folks in Town" is a little story of the desperate rivalry which springs up between two youngsters for the affections of a pretty little new arrival in the town. How "Buck" gets the best of "Skinny," even though he doesn't get the girl, forms an episode of delicious kid humor, it is said.

Ora Carew and Danell Loss in "Loot," a Universal attraction

"Come Watch With Me the Passing Night," the first Paramount-Post Nature Picture, marks the beginning of a series of one-reelers which are said to be, in subject and photography, of unexampled beauty. This particular picture, photographed by W. H. Van Scoy and H. C. Schimeld, won unusual commendation when shown at a special engagement some time ago at the Rivoli theatre, New York. It was made in the West, the scenes having been taken in Washington, California, Oregon, and British Columbia.

The same day is released a two-reel Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin," a burlesque on a barnstorming performance of "Uncle Tom." As such it is claimed to be just about the funniest thing Mack Sennett ever put across. Ben Turpin, Charlie Conklin, Marie Prevost, Ford Sterling, and Jim Finlayson are the leading funmakers.

The subject of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture is "Ayudhya, the Siamese Venice." This is a little floating town in Siam, on the Menam River above Bangkok.

The Paramount-Bray Pictograph presents in "Angling for the Chinook," the excitement of a battle with big fish in the Columbia River, and not only should it appeal to sportsmen, but every lover of the outdoors is sure to enjoy its scenic views. "A People Without a History" picturizes the Hopi Indians of New Mexico in their primitive cave dwellings.

Seitz's New Serial Is Released Oct. 26

"Bound and Gagged," the ten episode serial now being produced by George B. Seitz Productions, Inc., of which Mr. Seitz is both director and co-star, will be released on October 26th, according to announcement yesterday by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

This serial is a novelty, in that it marks Mr. Seitz's first appearance as a screen actor.

Supporting Mr. Seitz is an excellent cast. Marguerite Courtot, his co-star, is well known in pictures and has a following all her own. Nellie Burt plays the second lead and Harry Senels the heavy. "Bound and Gagged" is by Frank Leon Smith.

Alice Joyce has completed "The Winchester Woman," work on which was interrupted by both rain and the vacation season, and has started work on a new feature.

An old-fashioned country school, such as most of the adults in the country attended, forms the setting for the second of the Paramount-Briggs comedies, "Skinny, School and Scandal," which is released September 7 by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Brady Makes a Serial Record

CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY, an author of international repute, is another American writer who has had his energies converted to the motion picture screen.

Dr. Brady, after making fame with many novels and short stories, associated himself with the Vitagraph Film Company, and in collaboration with Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has written every one of the nine thrilling serials produced by that company.

He has also turned out several five-reel features during breathing spells between serial scripts.

JOHN P. McCARTHY, who was associated with D. W. Griffith in that producer's activities from the time of the old Biograph and Reliance days, is engaged as supervising director of McCarthy Picture Productions, an independent organization financed by a group of Los Angeles capitalists. First of the series of special features to be produced under McCarthy's direction in the coming year is "Out of the Dust," which, it is declared, contains much of the scenic beauty of the West such as Frederick Remington put on canvas, while the picture itself is said to be unusually effective with its story of early Western life.

Dorcas Matthews, who in private life is the wife of Robert McKim, screen "heavy," had the pleasure of playing opposite her husband in the recent production of "Out of the Dust," by McCarthy Picture Productions. Also prominent in the cast were Russell Simpson and Master Pat Moore, the youngster whose work in the Lasky picture, "The Squaw Man," received wide favorable comment.

Al Jennings, once noted bandit, has begun production of the first of the series of short subjects being made by the Capital Film Company depicting incidents in the association of Jennings and O. Henry, the author, in Central America. The first picture has the title, "Fugitives Who Came Back," and tells the story of the meeting of the bandit with the celebrated writer.

An unrehearsed cattle stampede which occurred at Hahn's Peak Basin, Colorado, while Otis B. Thayer, director, and Will E. Smith, cameraman, were filming scenes for "The Last of the Open Range," being produced by the Art-O-Graf Film Company of Denver, was incorporated into the picture when the producer happened by good fortune to be near the scene of the stampede. Several thousand head of cattle were caught by the lens and according to Mr. Thayer, the resulting film shows one of the biggest stampedes ever filmed. The company was at Steamboat Springs, Colorado, making exteriors of a bank robbery.

Two score members of the staff of the Francis Ford Studio were guests at a birthday anniversary banquet given in honor of Francis Ford, at Christophers, the night of August 23rd, with Louis Burston, president of the Burston Film Company, acting as toastmaster. The evening was devoted to felicities extended to Mr. Ford on the completion of his latest serial, "The Mystery of 13," and the whole affair was in the matter of a surprise to the director and star. Among those who took part in the festivities were Rosemary Theby, King Baggot, Harry Ellis Dean, Jack Ford, Pete Gerald, Phil Ford, Nigel de Brullier, Mark Fenton, Mark Thwaites, Scotty Young, and Pat O'Brian.

William Parke is to direct Pauline Frederick in her next Goldwyn picture, the story of which is by Edgar Saltus, the noted satirist. Parke's direction of previous Goldwyn starring vehicles has been so highly satisfactory that his latest task is expected to show keen insight into subtle irony contained in the author's story.

Hazel Daly, who in private life is the wife of Harry Beaumont, Goldwyn director, returns to the screen in Tom Moore's newly completed picture at the Goldwyn studio. In it Miss Daly plays one of the finest roles, it is said, ever written by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero. She is remembered for her capital work with Tom Moore in "Brown of Harvard."

John Bowers, Goldwyn leading man, is temporarily incapacitated for screen work as the result of the necessity of wearing a "rube" make-up in everyday life. Bowers is wearing what at first glance appears to be a snow-white beard, but in reality is a bandage placed there to protect a painful carbuncle on his chin.

Director Clarence Badger is in Randsburg with his cowboy-humorist-star, Will Rogers, where they are making some wild and woolly exterior scenes for Roger's third Goldwyn picture.

Harvey F. Thew, whose scenarios have proved exceptionally fine vehicles for the work of many motion picture stars during the last two years under the Lasky, Paralto, Universal and other trade marks, is deep in the task of preparing continuity for the first of the forthcoming Eminent Authors Productions of the Goldwyn studio, in which the material of Basil King, the noted author, is being used as a foundation.

William Duncan, together with his supporting players and production staff, at last has returned to civilization again, after a sojourn of more than two months at Lake Huntington, where most of the episodes of the Duncan serial, "Smashing Barriers," practically have been completed. All that remain to be made are a few studio scenes.

When barefoot dancing was first introduced back in the stone age, and when jazz orchestras made music with rude instruments of stone and wood, motion picture comedies were not known, but Montgomery and Rock, Vitagraph comedians, have succeeded in reverting into the prehistoric period. In their newest comedy just begun, they are making a burlesque of the high life that existed in the days of our remote ancestors, and in consequence, most of the members of their company are going barefoot and tenderly nursing stone bruises on their feet unaccustomed to exposure to the weather.

Back alley life in a New York East Side tenement district with its quota of the atmosphere familiar to the Bowery before that thoroughfare was reformed, has been visualized by Noel Smith in his direction of his latest Vitagraph comedy, featuring Jimmy Aubrey, which has just been completed. Conspicuous in the picture is an old-fashioned horsecar with its dilapidated vehicle and run-down motive power—something which has not been seen since Charlie Edison was a boy.

Marguerite Courtot Soon Back on Screen : : : :

"WHAT'S become of Marguerite Courtot? We haven't seen her for ages, and she used to be one of our most favorite stars."

Never mind, all ye movie fans, the little brown-haired, black-eyed girl will soon be very much in evidence, for she has been working overtime and has finished three feature pictures since the first of the year, and is now well on towards the end of the Pathe serial in which she is co-starring with George Seitz.

"It's my first experience as a serial actress," she explained, after we had been kept waiting over half an hour by a doorman who insisted that, although Miss Courtot was in the building, it was quite useless to look for her, and that she would turn up sooner or later. We felt, disgustedly, that we could discover her whereabouts if he would give us a chance, and sat, raging inwardly, resolving each moment that we wouldn't wait another second, while realizing that if we did go, she would immediately choose that moment in which to "turn up." Then she appeared, and we learned incidentally that she had been watching some film run off in the projection room. No wonder she couldn't have been found!

"I didn't think I was going to like playing in a serial," Miss Courtot went on, "and I never could be a 'stunt' actress, but there's very little melodrama in this story, and each episode is like a separate little feature. I like it immensely, also my part. I'm a Spanish princess, and so far this is the only costume I've worn," patting the smart riding coat that reached almost to the top of her leather boots.

"Do Spanish girls wear riding suits just like ours?" we questioned in surprise.

"Surely. The upper classes get their fashions from Paris just as we do."

We sighed. Mantillas, it seems, and black lace veils have been relegated to by-gone movies, and we'll no longer be able to glance carelessly at clicking castanets and affirm, without fear of contradiction, that their possessor has an immediate connection with the land of the Alhambra. Why must these things be?

"And what have you been doing all these months that the screen has missed you?" asked the interviewer.

"War work," came the quick response, "that's old stuff, I know, but I really would like to let the public know just why I've been out of pictures for over a year. The war 'got me,' somehow, and I couldn't take an interest in anything else while it was going on. I'm sure I shouldn't have been successful if I had tried to keep on acting when my thoughts were so far away. I started recruiting for the marines, and then they used some of the boys in the First Division, who were stationed at Camp Merritt, in a picture I did, 'The Unbeliever,' and the men asked me to be their godmother while they were on the other side. Of course I adopted them on the spot, and then what do you think happened?"

"What?"

"The Government wouldn't accept any more parcels in the overseas mail. And how can one be the right sort of a godmother, I should like to know, if one can't send parcels? But I wrote letters, by the hundred, and did canteen work in the stations and talked to the boys on their way through, and tried to cheer them up. I did so want to go across, but I simply couldn't get around that twenty-five years of age rule."

Just here a member of the company joined us, and began talking to Miss Courtot in his native language, French, forgetful of everything in his evident delight at knowing someone who could understand him and make him feel at home, and his listener replied with a truly Parisian accent.

"No, I'm not a French girl," she told us. "I was born right over in Jersey, near where I'm living now, but my parents are French, and I went to school for two years in Lucerne. My hobbies? Oh, everything a normal girl likes—tennis and driving and all the rest. And I love to bake. They don't believe I can, here at the studio, so I'm going to make them a big cake for our luncheon some day soon, and prove that I'm not boasting without reason. Yes, coming——"

And she hastened away to watch Mr. Seitz, with terror-stricken eyes, leap from a twenty-foot wall on to the villain's neck just in time to rescue her.—Marguerite Jones.

Stunt Lure Led Helen Holmes to Serials : : :

HELEN HOLMES, who is starring in "The Fatal Fortune" for the S. L. K. Serial Corporation, was lounging between scenes in the Grantwood studios, when she was asked how she happened to start making serials—rather hazardous work for a woman.

"Well," she replied to the question, "I don't exactly know, except that when I was a kid, I was always doing stunts. I was called the Tom Boy of our town. No boy could stump me. If anyone did a certain dangerous stunt, or jump or anything like that, I was always going him one better. I was always athletic from the first I can remember. As I grew older, I found a world of health in athletics and out-of-door exercise, and I followed it. As I came into young womanhood, I still continued to do so. When I decided to go into pictures I figured that the serial work would give me the best scope for my talents in athletics."

"But have you never had any fear of being injured or perhaps killed while doing these death-defying things?" asked the interviewer. "Not in the least," replied the young woman with a careless smile. "You see, I am a fatalist. I figure that what will happen will happen, and you cannot avoid it. The next minute ahead is a blank to us all. For instance, one man walks down the street and as he is about to turn a certain corner something attracts his attention, someone calls him across the street. Directly behind him is another man, and as he passes the same corner a brick falls on his head and kills him. So there you are. How did the first man come to miss the brick? That's the way I look at things. But athletic stunts are not all that I can do," continued the star, sitting up straight in the chair. "I can cook; and when I say cook, I mean cook. I don't mean boil an egg, or fry a piece of steak. I can make pastry, and biscuits and pies, and cakes and all sorts of goodies. I love to knit and sew, and I am really quite human when I get away from the atmosphere of the studio and into my home. I can milk a cow, ride a horse, and chop down a tree if necessary. I just love the country. That is why I have a farm in California and why I spend my time off there. It gives me the greatest pleasure of my life and I always look forward to it when my work gets exceptionally hard while working in a picture."

Miss Holmes is fond of children. She has adopted a little Belgium orphan whose father, mother and a brother and two sisters lost their lives in that ill fated country.

"I love kiddies," she said smiling, "and when I went to an orphans' home and saw all the wide little wondering eyes staring up at me, I wanted to take the whole bunch home with me. It took me a long time to decide on which one to take, but I finally took the little one I have adopted. She looked so lonely and forlorn, and those big, brown eyes just won me over, so I took her. I am going to give her the finest education in the country. At present I consider her my mascot and often bring her to the studio with me. I tried to do a small part during the war to help. It wasn't much, but what I did, I did with my whole heart."

There are two things in the line of sports in which Miss Holmes is exceptionally interested. One is golf and the other is motoring.

Only a Working Title

J. Stuart Blackton announces that "Sunset" is simply the working title of the third production of his new organization which is now under way. This film which is an original story from the pen of Stanley Olmsted who also wrote the continuity, features Sylvia Breamer, to whom it is said to give a particularly good emotional role, and Robert Gordon.

ANN LUTHER, who proved herself such a very "good bet" in "The Great Gamble," the Pathe serial, is now about to begin work on "The Lurking Peril" for Wisteria Productions. Burton King is to be director, coming straight from Houdini's superhuman feats, and George Larkin will be leading man. Serials are certainly in vogue these days.

Jean Paige is having the most beautiful time this summer. When she isn't vacationing herself in the North or the West or the South, her director decides that new locations are essential to the forthcoming production, and away go Miss Paige and company to other climes. At present her destination is South Carolina, where she is to play lead for Harry Morey in Vitagraph's "The Man Who Might Have Been" Edwin L. Hollywood will direct.

Lillian Hall finished her second comedy with John Dooley, under William Haigh's direction, in record time, and has gone home for a real vacation. Miss Hall has a family, and from local newspaper reports, an entire home town, who have been impatiently waiting to welcome her with open arms, as one of the greatest living American actresses. They knew she was going to be a success, and its very nice to go home feeling that you have completely justified other people's faith in you.

Rumors are quite sure that Kay Laurel is soon to commence work on her first starring vehicle at the Reliance studio in Yonkers. Jack O'Brien, who has directed Mary Pickford, and more recently Virginia Pearson in her two latest pictures, will be responsible for Miss Laurel's success.

Thomas F. Fallon claims no credit for his histronic ability. It's all inherited, he says, to prove which he reminded us that his father appeared in the original production of "Mazzepa" at the old Bowery theatre, the east of which included the late Mrs. W. G. Jones, J. B. Davenport, Eddy, Whalley, and the late Fannie Herring. "So you see," he added, "there's nothing recent about my connection with the profession," and we had to admit that there was not.

Speaking of scenario writers, Crane Wilbur is about to join the ranks. A former picture star, now a successful author, he has been commissioned by Joseph M. Schenck to write an original story for Normal Talmadge. Mr. Wilbur has been so prolific and so successful as a writer for the stage that Mr. Schenck became interested and arranged for him to write something for Miss Talmadge. It will be his first attempt at writing for the screen.

Baby Ivy Ward has returned from Toronto and Trenton, where she has spent the last seven weeks with Director Harley Knowles and company at work on a special Canadian production. She brought with her a little black Cocker spaniel, aged three months, who has become her adoring slave along with the rest of her acquaintances.

A well known Chicago firm have started the production of some new Norma Talmadge toilet preparations which they claim to be the finest line of toilet preparations ever placed on the market. Samples are now on the way to our office, they write us, and if they are anything like Norma's pictures, we'll volunteer our testimonial.

J. Robert Pauline has a remedy to suggest to the managers of the various motion picture theatres if the actors projected on the screen suddenly hear the call to strike and walk off the silver sheet. "Undoubtedly," Mr. Pauline states, "the most effective method of protection the exhibitors could take would be to see that no walking delegate slipped into the metal containers wherein the shadow thespians recline in celluloid ease."

The Beck Serial, "The Isle of Jewels," now in course of production at the Crystal studio, required the use of several scorpions for one specially thrilling scene. Director Perry Vekroff sent to Wyoming for the dangerous little reptiles, and then was quite annoyed to find that they were delayed in transit, and only three of them reached their destination alive. The survivors, however, will be quite enough, Wilfred Lytell declares, to provide the necessary torture for him.

Bert Lytell recently entertained sailors at the Metro studios on the Coast, during the making of "Lombardi, Ltd."

Gladys Brockwell in the Fox picture, "Broken Commandments"

Richard Bathelmess and Olga Petrova assisted in the film test production in which appeared several score of beautiful girls from all parts of the country who came here as entries in a contest conducted by Motion Picture magazine, Classic and Shadowland. D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. de Mille, Mary Pickford and other expert judges of screen ability and pulchritude will act as judges. The film test was made at the country place of Eugene V. Brewster, owner of the publications, at Rosyln, L. I. The film will be shipped West for review by the judges, after which announcement will be made of the chosen winner.

Betty Blythe and Myrtle Stedman, playing the leads in Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde" have been assigned a beautiful country place on Puget Sound as their residence while the exteriors of the picture are being filmed. Later they will return to the Goldwyn studios in Culver City for interiors. Miss Blythe, who by special arrangement with Samuel Goldwyn agreed to appear in this production, is so attracted by the beauties of the West Coast that she may remain there instead of returning to the East as she had planned. It has not been announced whether or not she will remain with Goldwyn, as another company is known to have made a strong bid for her services.

Katterjohn—from the State of Indiana : :

IT is said that when a baby is born in the literary State of Indiana, the first words it learns to lisp are: "Please pass the dictionary."

Then the census taker adds another figure to the ever-increasing number of authors that the Hoosier State has given the world.

Indiana, which produced James Whitcomb Riley and Gen. Lew Wallace, as well as hundreds of others whose handiwork is emblazoned as the beacon lights of literary history, is the birthplace of Monte M. Katterjohn, creator of plays for the land of the silver-sheet.

Mr. Katterjohn, to be exact, was born in the little city of Boonville, his home being immediately opposite to the city library.

While still in high school Katterjohn became Boonville correspondent for all the big town papers. He had all the news in the town sewed up. In other words, he never scooped himself, nor was he ever scooped in return, being the only correspondent.

During this period Mr. Katterjohn wrote stories and articles for "Collier's," "Cosmopolitan," "Blue Book," "Green Book," and other well-known publications.

But the call of the land of make-believe was more potent than that of the book or magazine, and he began writing for the screen. His maiden efforts were successful, and his first play was produced by Vitagraph.

Soon after reaching New York he became editor and publisher of a motor magazine. Later he edited a magazine for aspiring photoplay authors. (Securing this data from Katterjohn is not the easiest task in the world. He prefers to talk about what the great future of the motion picture holds forth as an educator. What it will do for humanity, rather than what his individual efforts have been in the past.)

When poverty and want strike a man of letters, as it always appears to do at some period in his life, it likewise seems to fan into a brighter flame, the spark of genius that is but extinguished. Dame Fortune first frowns upon those she has chosen for her smiles, and one day Mr. Katterjohn was chosen as manuscript editor for the Eastern Universal Company.

It was while with the Universal that he wrote the screen play, "The Toll of War," in which the character of President Lincoln appeared on the screen for the first time in any motion picture. "The Toll of War" was produced in three reels approximately two years prior to the showing of "The Birth of a Nation."

During the San Francisco World's Fair in 1915, Katterjohn went out to the Pacific Coast to forget films and enjoy the historical festival. Instead he met Thomas H. Ince, and became a member of the original Kay-Bee scenario organization which at that time was considered to be the most efficient in filmdom.

There he wrote, among many other screen dramas, "The Clodhopper," "The Flame of the Yukon," and "The Apostle of Vengeance," which served as vehicles for Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, and William S. Hart when they were just coming into prominence. He later created stories for the Paralta including "Carmen of the Klondike and was next associated with Jesse Lasky.

He has written more than one hundred stories for the shadow drama and is now launched forth as an independent creator-producer with his own organization filming Katterjohn plays. These are to be arranged wholly by Mr. Katterjohn, and presented by Harry Garson through the distribution channels of the Equity Pictures Corporation. They will be made at the new Garson studio in Edendale, Cal., a suburb of Los Angeles.

Although Mr. Katterjohn has barely reached his twenty-sixth birthday, he has a wonderful vision as to the future of the photographic art in the pantomime. He claims that the screen plays of to-morrow will be shown in amphitheatres seating a hundred thousand persons.

A Glimpse of Sennett and His Methods : :

LOOK over the sorrowful faces of any crowd in any street car and it would seem to be a precarous job to try to make a living selling laughs; for the faces of an American crowd are not merry faces.

Mack Sennett has probably succeeded in bringing as many grins and snickers to these faces as any other man. After all, the wits and jesters of the past only had to make one king laugh; Sennett has a billion that must be tickled. His task is to make high brows and low brows, giggly girls and college professors all laugh at the same joke. No small task!

No doubt every one has wondered what sort of man it must be to turn out laughs for the public in wholesale quantities as other men have turned out automobiles. What sort of a man who can send out laughs in one glittering never-ending stream, week after week, year after year. Is he funny to talk to? Is he a cut-up or a grouch in private life.

So here is a close-up of Mack Sennett, the laugh king.

Mr. Sennett is still a young man on the right side of forty. He is a successful actor, but he never acts any more. The growth of the business of making laughs has turned him into a big executive. The Sennett studio in Los Angeles is like a young city.

Among other things it includes a planing mill, a zoo that any city park would be glad to have, a big art department, a wardrobe department that employs more dressmakers than the average famous modist, counting rooms, lumber yards, not to mention a young forest and a big automobile repair garage.

The management of this big institution requires executive ability; and first of all Mr. Sennett is an executive.

Every department knows his personal touch. One minute you will see him discussing the climax of a new comedy with a scenario writer; the next minute he will be instructing the superintendent of construction about building a bowling alley for a comedy set.

The man who has probably created more laughs than any other—and who rivals Ziegfeld in his eye for beauty—Mack Sennett

As is the case with most successful men, his memory is amazing. And, with most extraordinary memories, his grasp of details is due to an unusual power of instantly concentrating his attention. When the stage carpenter interrupts a discussion of a comedy gag to ask how many pictures should be hung in an artist's studio set, he gets the boss's instant and absolute undivided attention.

Mr. Sennett personally follows every detail of every comedy and usually about four are constantly in the course of production. Out of a very fertile imagination he builds most of the plots himself. He closely follows the rehearsals which precede the scenes and often directs many of the difficult scenes himself. Lastly he gets together with the scenario department in writing subtitles.

Every Sennett comedy is literally hand-picked.

Scheduled for release on World program at an early date is "Arizona Cat Claw," five-reel Western drama starring Edyth Sterling. The scenes of this picture are laid in Arizona.

The third of the series of accidents was more slight than the others, and consisted of the cameraman for the Lytell company dropping the hood of an automobile on his hand and fracturing the bones of several fingers of his right or camera hand.

Alice Lake is to be starred in a screen version of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," by Thomas Hardy, for which the working title has been chosen, "Should a Girl Tell"? The direction is to be by John Ince, who has just completed "Please Get Married," featuring Viola Dana, and the continuity is by Finis Fox.

Ray C. Smallwood has begun production of "The Best of Luck," the first of the Drury Lane melodramas which Metro is to produce.

Fox Studio Doings

THE casting department at the Fox studio has been busy the week of August 25th engaging several actors and actresses of prominence for newly started productions. Three of these are under way as stellar vehicles.

Frank R. Deal is directing Gladys Brockwell in "The Devil's Riddle," a western picture with an ending in New York City's Bohemia. In support of Miss Brockwell are William Scott, Richard Cummings, Claire McDowell, Easter Walters, Nicholas Duncan and Kate Price.

Jack Rollens, John Cossar, William Rynor and Lloyd Bacon have been engaged by Scott Dunlap for his new production, "A Little Prayer for Rain," starring Albert Ray and Elinor Fair.

Edmund Lawrence began production of "The Heritage of Eden," with Madlaine Traverse as his star and George McDaniel, Henry Hebert and Edwin Booth Tilton in support.

Peggy Hyland will begin work the first week of September on a society and Bohemian feature, the title of which has not been chosen, under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell.

Universal Newsettes

UNIVERSAL CITY is much like a deserted village at the present time because of the absence of most of the producing units from the studio to work on location. Three of these producing units are at San Francisco. Allen Holubar, with Dorothy Phillips and a company that includes Robert Anderson, George Hackathorn, Frank Elliot, Elinor Fields, Margaret Mann and a number of others, are at work on exterior scenes for "Ambition" at Pleasanton, a small town suburb of San Francisco, which still maintains its wild west gold mining atmosphere and appearance.

The company filming "The Beach Comber," which has Elmo Lincoln as star, in the role of ship captain, is working in Golden Gate harbor taking sea scenes under the direction of Rex Ingraham. Players who went north with this company are Mabel Ballin, Harry Van Meter, Ethelyn Irving, Frank Brownlee, Dick La Reno and Paul Weigel.

Rollin Sturgeon is in charge of the third unit making "The Breath of the Gods," with Tsuru Aoki. This is an adaptation from the Sidney McCall novel of the same name and the principals in this cast are Stanhope Wheatcroft, Pat O'Malley, Barney Sherry, Arthur Carewe and Ethel Shannon.

Jacques Jaccard is continuing on the melodrama, "Cassidy of the Air Lanes," with Lieut. O. L. Locklear. Francelia Billington, Carmen Phillips, Ray Ripley and Alan Forrest have the principal roles in support. Many scenes in this photodrama require spectacular stunts in the air, and one of the players has changed from one machine to another airplane below him, while three or four thousand feet above de Mille field, where the flying scenes have been made. Several narrow accidents have been narrowly averted, and the aviators taking part have had miraculous escapes. In one instance two machines came to the ground together, but fortunately no one was hurt, while the airplanes were badly damaged.

The many convict uniforms being worn at Universal City this week for "The Gift of the Desert," which stars Harry Carey, under the direction of Jack Ford, gives the place the appearance of a California prison. This film is adapted from the Peter B. Kyne story titled "The Three Godfathers." Continuity was prepared by H. Tipton Steck.

Two other five-reel subjects in the making, "No Experience Required," starring Mary MacLaren, and "Lasca," co-starring Frank Mayo and Edith Roberts. Ed Morrissey is directing the former under the supervision of Tod Browning, and Norman Dawn is the director of "Lasca."

An all-star cast production which will have as principals Una Trevelyn, Lilie Leslie, Sam de Grasse and Clyde Fillmore, is shortly to be made under the title of "Clothes and Treachery." Eric Von Stroheim is to direct this Parisian life picture adapted from a foreign story.

Harvey Gates has written "Shameless Salverson," a two-reel western melodrama which is now being made under Eddie Kull's direction and featuring Hoot Gibson and Joephine Hill.

Another two-reel western just being finished is "Tempest Cody, Kidnapper," being filmed by Henry McRae, with Marie Walcamp as the featured player.

Jack Wells, who is making the serial, "The Strange Case of Cavendish," with Kathleen O'Conner and Jack Perrin, is at work on the second episode.

Three comedy companies are now at work at Universal City. Lyons and Moran are continuing with their one-reel Star Comedies, and Al Santell is making a one-reel picture with Chris Rub and Margaret Allen as principals. This comedy is entitled "Thirty Minutes in Havana." The Florence Turner company has just finished "Old Dials for New," which was written by Phil Hubbard.

Vitagraph News Bits

ANTONIO MORENO has arrived at the West Coast Vitagraph studio and is working night and day on his stellar role of the new serial called "Secret Service." Preceding scenes had been made of this serial and Moreno is engaged in filling in the action to dovetail with those scenes already made.

Studio production has been started of the remaining five episodes of "Smashing Barriers," in which William Duncan is starred. Duncan and his company have returned from location at Lake Huntington, where the first ten episodes of the serial were made.

Another comedy company has been added to Vitagraph forces, which already number the Montgomery and Rock, Noel Smith and Larry Semon units. Harry Mann is to be the new star under the direction of Ben Cohen.

At the Ince Plant

FIFTEEN HUNDRED extra people were used this week on the beach near Inceville for scenes in the Thomas H. Ince special production, "Americanism vs. Bolshevism," being directed by Fred Niblo. The great number of extras required for these scenes caused many to recall the days when the mob and military review scenes were staged at this big ranch for "Civilization."

Director Irvin Willat is home from San Francisco with a company which has Hobart Bosworth as the featured player, and Jane Novak as his leading woman. In this northern city many submarine, battleship and merchant marine scenes were filmed for this picture of the sea which is another of the Ince special productions.

Charles Ray is at work under the direction of Jerome Storm on what is termed a stuttering story, written by Agnes Johnson, and the filming of "Mary's Ankle" has been started by Director Lloyd Ingraham, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May as co-stars.

The J. Parker Reid producing organization working at the Ince studio has completed the filming of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," starring Louise Glaum, from the Louis Joseph Vance novel, "The Daughter of the Wolf." William P. S. Earle was the director of this subject.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

THE Famous Players-Lasky Studio at present have more producing activity than at any time for the past several months, it so happening that practically all organizations are at work, or at least this is the case with respect to the technical organization.

William C. de Mille this week filmed the prologue for his coming production, "The Tree of Knowledge." The prologue is based on the fable of "Adam and Lilih," with Theodore Kosloff taking the role of the first man and Yvonne Gardelle appearing as the first evil woman.

Singer's midget elephants, who were held in Los Angeles this week because of discontinuance of trains as the result of strike, were pressed into service by Director Donald Crisp, who is filming "It Pays to Advertise," starring Bryant Washburn. The animals were used in a parade advertising "Thirteen Soap, Unlucky for Dirt." Practically all members of the producing organization took part in the parade in one way or another, and the event made a holiday for Hollywood firms whose people insisted upon seeing the celebration.

The Federal mint at San Francisco was called upon this week to furnish props for scenes for "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," starring Wallace Reid, which is now in the making under the direction of James Cruze. The scenes taken were those showing Monte Carlo and 2000 heretofore untouched half dollars from the San Francisco mint were the important props. Lila Lee is Reid's leading woman for this picture, and the principals in the cast are Edwin Stevens, Charles Ogle and Tully Marshall.

Robert G. Vignola took Ethel Clayton and company to Big Bear Valley this week for scenes in the melodrama "More Deadly Than the Male." Edward Coxen is the leading man, and the others in the cast are Herbert Hayes, Hallin Cooley and Miss Peggy Pearce.

Houdini returned this week from his trip in the east, where he went after the completing of "The Grim Game," and with the scenario staff is working on the next picture, which will be started by Director James Cruze about September 22nd.

The film version of "Everywoman," now completed by Director George H. Melford, and in the hands of the editing department, is considered at the Lasky studio as the most spectacular production ever made at this big plant, which is indeed a very high compliment to the technical staff of the studio, the cast which has Violet Heming as star; Will M. Ritchey, author of the screen version, and especially so to Director Melford. Miss Heming is returning to New York to resume her work on the speaking stage, and Director Melford is supervising the preparation of work for the filming of the revised version of "The Sea Wolf," for which no cast has been selected.

Marguerite Clark, accompanied by her husband, Lieutenant Williams, is leaving this week for New York, where future productions are to be made for the present. Because of the success of Director Walter Edwards in the filming of Miss Clark's several pictures in Los Angeles, he will go to New York to direct future productions there. Director Edwards will take with him his assistant, Fred J. Robinson.

Sets are being erected for C. B. de Mille's coming production, "Why Change Your Wife," and work on filming this production will be started in a few days. Elliot Dexter, who has been very ill, is now almost totally recovered, and it is understood he will play an important part in this de Mille picture.

Harry Garson News

THE Clara Kimball Young production unit is nearing completion of "The Eyes of Youth," and all scenes will be made within the next week. This picture has required the use many sets, but one of exceptio beauty is the reproduction of the fr of a San Francisco millionaire's ho The reason for its reproduction that many of the exteriors were m in San Francisco, but the script quired others that could not be m in the Bay City because several of members of the cast were not th When these scenes are shown on screen they will very emphatic point out the efficiency of the tech cal organization General Mana Harry Garson has perfected for stu work.

In the filming of the first Katterjo picture it became known this week t Mary Alden is to play opposite Ho Peters in the initial release of t brand through the Equity Pictu Corporation, which is titled "Lo Honor and Obey." Actual product of this picture started a few days a with Director Al Green in char The filming of all scenes is being pervised by Mr. Katterjohn.

Marah Alice Ryan, the author whose best known works perhaps "Told in the Hills" and "The S of Rafael," has been engaged by M ager Harry Garson to write a st for Clara Kimball Young, and authoress is now in Los Angeles work on this story. It will not produced for several months.

SOCIAL NOTE

Forty Francis Ford filmsters gave the chief a birthday party in celebration of the completion of "The Mystery of Thirteen," at a down town cafe. Louis Burston was the toast master and everybody made speeches. "The Wearing of the Green" was played by the band as Ford was led into the room blindfolded. Everybody danced, and a good time was had by all.

EXTRA!

As we ramble off to press the report reaches HOKUM office that Pauline Frederick bobbed her hair. Investigation brought out the fact that this was but a report, and that many society women of Los Angeles had followed Miss Frederick's supposed example and bobbed their hair. Pauline wore a wig in the picture she just finished, and a lot of society folks who worked in scenes with her thought they'd look fetching and had the scissors applied. What will they think when they see Miss Frederick with all her hair.

Editorial Announcement: In view of the fact that the entire editorial staff of Hollywood HOKUM is preparing to make a most important migration, notice is hereby served to subscribers that this news journal will discontinue publication temporarily until all the sights of Broadway have been viewed, and a more definite understanding of the film world in general is ascertained by a walk through the Pennsylvania station, the lobby of the Astor, and Mrs. Rector's place.

National Campaign for Facts and Follies

When the Facts and Follies series of short photo-plays are released to the public early in October, by the Pioneer, the pictures will have had the benefit of one of the most extensive publicity and advertising campaign that has ever been given to the one-reel productions.

These pictures are little stories of the facts and follies of life, are being produced by the Physical Culture Photo-plays, under the personal supervision of Bernarr MacFadden and a large staff of production experts. Mr. MacFadden is editor of the Physical Culture Magazine and also the True Story Magazine, the combined circulation of these two publications totaling over half a million copies a month.

Beginning in the next issues of these magazines, publicity articles dealing with the Fact and Follies series will be featured monthly. As a preliminary to the magazine publicity, the Pioneer-MacFadden staff are placing large adds in fifty-two of the leading daily newspapers in United States and Canada, which will bring these productions directly before the public. At the same time that these large advertisements appear, the first installments of the Pioneer publicity will be published in the reading columns of the newspapers running the ads.

Story by Scott Next Eminent Author

The fourth production for Eminent Authors Pictures—"Partners of the Night," by Leroy Scott—will be made in New York as soon as the Goldwyn organization completes arrangements for an eastern studio. The scenario prepared by Charles S. Whittaker is now in the hands of Mr. Scott, who is now writing his own titles. It is said that so much material was available in his novel that another picture will be made from a second set of scenes. A new kind of detective story is promised in which New York figures prominently.

Leroy Scott points out that Rex Beach has made the back ground a very interesting part of all his pictures, and taking his cue from that he has played up New York scenes for his first picture.

Pioneer's New Season Prospects

Policy for Year Will Continue Co-operative Exchanges

THE Pioneer Film Corporation, through its general manager, M. H. Hoffman, has issued the following announcement to the trade at large, in which is outlined the policy of that concern for the season of 1919-20.

The announcement reads in part as follows: "After a period of careful study and consideration of the film market for the past six months, the executives of the Pioneer Film Corporation have arrived at definite decisions, which will govern the policy of their concern for the season of 1919-20."

"We have learned with great satisfaction that our attractions have met with the unqualified approval of the exhibitor; that they have been pictures which have met favor with the public, and have made money for the exchange and theatre manager. It shall continue to be our practice to secure the best pictures produced, and to offer them to the independent exchangemen throughout the country at a price which will insure him a big return for his investment."

"We shall continue to extend our chain of co-operative Pioneer exchanges, which will handle all of our releases in their given territory. This policy will cut down our exploitation expenses on each picture, and the saving will be deducted from the price of our releases to the exchanges handling them."

"Our entire purchasing committee which views every independent production of merit placed upon the market reports that we will be able to maintain a schedule of one production a month or twelve a year, and will add to this four to six big special productions. This is a conservative estimate, and in making it, we feel that our actual performance for the next year will greatly exceed it.

"In addition to the big productions which we will handle, we will offer, beginning early in October, the Facts and Follies series of one-reel photo-plays which are now being produced by the Physical Culture Photo-plays, Inc., under the supervision of Bernarr MacFadden. These are to be smart and snappy satires, dealing as their title suggests, with the lighter side of life, in a delightfully humorous and human manner.

"Our long established practice of prompt and efficient service will be continued, and it is our intention to enlarge our special service departments, so that the work of the exhibitor playing our productions will be reduced to a minimum."

Advance Bookings Are Heavy on "The Wolf"

It is only a short time now before Vitagraph releases "The Wolf," the screen version of the drama by Eugene Walter, which has been made into picture form for Earle Williams. The picture was finished some time ago. Confident that it had something that would interest and thrill every lover of good pictures, and bring resulting financial returns to exhibitors. Vitagraph took time to get out special twenty-four sheet stands, and unusually elaborate special printed matter, and its action is said to have brought the desired results. Seldom has a picture brought them many advance bookings.

Houdini on Broadway

Houdini has again conquered Broadway—this time in his five-reel Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Grim Game," which is packing in audiences daily during a special engagement at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, which opened Monday, August 25.

Dooley Exchange Now Broadens Activities

Dooley Exchange Inc. has purchased through the Victor Kremer Film Co. a series of five five-part features starring Shorty Hamilton. In addition they have secured from the Arrow Film Corporation "The Profiteer" with Alma Hanlon, "When the Desert Smiled" featuring Neil Hart and "Miss Arizona" with Gertrude Bondhill.

Two features have also been purchased from the Aywon Film Corporation through Nathan Hirsch.

The Dooley Exchange has also established and will open one of the best equipped exchanges in the state at 338 Pearl street, Buffalo, and will be ready for business not later than Sept. 1.

The business of the Dooley Exchange has increased to such an extent during the past year that they are compelled to handle more prints, and in order to render the exhibitors in the western part of the state 100 per cent. service, are opening the above exchange. Plans and preparations are being rapidly worked out for the establishing and opening of various other exchanges in other states.

"Everybody's Business" Offered to Buyers

Although "Everybody's Business" touches on the subject of Americanism and Bolshevism, primarily it is said to be an interesting melodrama with a love story that will appeal to motion picture fans. Many angles of exploitation have been devised for the State Rights buyer and exhibitor by W. H. Productions Company and in addition, H. C. Witwer, the prominent author, has written a novelization of the story which will be published both serially and in supplement magazine form in all of the leading newspapers in the country. Requests for territorial rights are now being considered by W. H. Productions Company.

The Paramount-Artcraft Girl

Mystery of Identity Disclosed; She Is a Composite of Many Noted Beauties

NOW that National Paramount-Artcraft Week has arrived, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has disclosed the identity of "The Paramount-Artcraft Girl." For this girl, whose picture has been used in advertising the big week in newspapers all over the country for the past few weeks, with the caption, "Who Is She?" really has an identity, and Henry Hutt, the artist who drew her likeness, carefully executed the portrait not simply as a picture of a pretty girl, but with detailed regard for her every feature.

Now the solution of the puzzle: Take, as the doctor would say, in preparing a prescription—take the aristocratic nose of Elsie Ferguson, the dancing eyes of Ethel Clayton, the symmetrical teeth of Gloria Swanson, the peach-bloom cheeks of Wanda Hawley, the waving hair of Irene Castle, the beautiful neck and shoulders of Marguerite Clark, the expressive eyebrows of Vivian Martin, and the winsome mouth of Billie Burke—and you have "The Paramount-Artcraft Girl."

This girl has done a remarkably fine piece of work for exhibitors of Paramount-Artcraft pictures, especially in connection with the advertising of National Paramount-Artcraft Week. She has set the people talking about her and about the pictures she represents. She has aroused their interest and their curiosity, and consequently the pictures and the week have been advertised by word of mouth—the kind of advertising that gets the biggest results.

Universal Companies Active

Dorothy Phillips, Harry Carey and Elmo Lincoln Work on New Features

THE starting of production on "Ambition," Allen Holubar's next super-feature to follow "The Right to Happiness," the beginning of a serial and a program feature were the biggest events of the current week's activities at Universal. Holubar wrote the story himself and Dorothy Phillips is to be the star, surrounded by a notable cast. The story concerns a small town girl's ambition to become a great opera singer.

Harry Carey has started work on a new six-reel feature entitled "The Gift of the Desert." Jack Ford directing. The story was written by Peter B. Kyne and appeared in the Saturday Evening Post under the title "The Three Godfathers."

The first episode of "The Strange Case of Cavendish," the new Universal serial, has been completed under Jack Well's direction. Jack Perrin and Kathleen O'Connor are playing the featured roles, with a large supporting cast including Barney Sherry, Robert Walker, Henry Barrows, Gertrude Astor and Phil Gastrock.

"Betty Reforms," a six-reel special feature, starring Ora Carew, Forrest Stanley and Charles Clary, is well under way under William C. Dowlan's direction. Other players in the cast are Frank MacQuarrie, Blanche Rose, Frank Thompson, Burwell Hamrick, Andrew Waldron and Cora Drew.

Dircetor Rex Ingram has taken his company of players, headed by Elmo Lincoln, to San Francisco, where they will film scenes for "The Beach Comber." Mabel Ballin is playing opposite Lincoln, while other important roles are in the hands of Frank Brownlee, Paul Weigel, Dick La Reno and Ethelyn Irving Director Norman Dawn and his company have left Universal City for Victorville, Calif., where they will shoot the round-up and stampede scenes for "Lasca," a six-reel feature starring Frank Mayo and Edith Roberts.

Stevenson's "Treasure Island" for Screen

With all the motley crew of characters evolved by the imaginative mind of that beloved and lamented author Robert Louis Stevenson, "Treasure Island" will shortly be produced by one of the masters of the screen world—none other, in fact, than Maurice Tourner, whose work has brought him into the very foreground of motion picture producers and stamped him as one of the most artistic of those who devote their time to the creation of entertainment for the screen.

As Mr. Tourner himself describes it, this production of "Treasure Island," which will be a Paramount Artcraft special, will be characterized by a combination of realism and beauty. Mr. Tourneur hopes to make it as artistic in one sense as "The Bluebird," yet with all the bigness and romantic thrill of days which were characterized by their freedom from all that in modern times we regard as conventional.

A Social Theory is Basis of Feature

"Dangerous Waters," the Robertson-Cole feature distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, in which Jesse L. Hampton presents William Desmond offers a combination of mythology and modern society. The characters are all modern, people of high social position and to test out the belief that it is not what people do but what is said about it, they assume the roles of characters of the Pantheon. In order to prove the theory, one of the members gives a Baccahanalian revel at the Ritz.

In the guise of various mythological gods the guests assume the freedom and license that was supposed to have been their privilege.

Events that follow the revel prove to the girl and to others that society commandment "Thou shalt not be found out" is not all that is demanded for happiness.

"The Photoplay Jazz"

"Jazzland," an animated cartoon in which the characters in a jazz band and the dancers synchronize their movements with the time of the theatre's orchestra, is one of the novel subjects to be seen in a forthcoming number of Paramount Magazine.

Type of window card prepared for "The Midnight Girl," Adolf Philipp Film Corporation production

Adolf Philipp Names Three Pictures

The Adolf Philipp Film Corporation under direction of Adolf Philipp announces the first three musical film comedies.

The comedies which have been adapted of Adolf Philipp's Broadway successes are: "My Girl Suzanne," "The Midnight Girl" and "Oh, Louise," which is an adaption of Adolf Philipp's success, "Auction Pinochle." Mr. Adolf Philipp, who is appearing himself in these comedies, is supported by an excellent cast of players, as Patsy De Forrest, George Henry, Marie Fagano, Joseph P. Marquis, Gladys King MacClure, Pauline de Palla, Edward Elkas, Will. H. Sloane, Harold Peel, Anita Brown, Philip Sanford, Marie Louise Buckley, Lucia B. Segar, Louise Marceau, and other well known players, as well as a lot of pretty Bathing and Dancing Girls.

"Sahara" Continues to Be Drawing Card

The W. W. Hodkinson organization reports, with steadfast regularity, the sustained and increasing popularity of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, big Louise Glaum production, "Sahara." This Allan Dwan production, first released in June, has since that date entered into virtually every big theatre in the larger cities of the country till now there are but few big cities left in which it has not been booked.

Following the success of "Sahara" in William Sievers' new Grand Central theatre, St. Louis, Harry Koplar has booked this production for the entire Koplar circuit of theatres.

George Walsh Has New Leading Woman

When "From Now On," the new George Walsh starring vehicle, is released by William Fox on September 8th, the picture audience will behold opposite the heroic figure of Mr. Walsh the diminutive person of Miss Regina Quinn, an actress of decided charm and talents.

Farrar Opens New Goldwyn Year

In "The World and Its Woman," Diva Scores with Critics

ENTHUSIASTIC reviews in all the Philadelphoa daily newspapers followed the premier showing of Geraldine Farrar in "The World and Its Woman," the Goldwyn production presented to the public for the first time at the Chestnut Street Opera House. This pre-release display of Miss Farrar's latest picture, directed by Frank Lloyd, marks the launching of Goldwyn's fall series productions, which are being handled according to the new "see them before you book them" policy. The demand for "The World and Its Woman" has been so urgent that Goldwyn decided to permit a number of showings a few days in advance of the release date, starting with Philadelphia and following with Brooklyn, where the picture opened last Friday night at the Strand theatre.

How well the drama of modern Russia was received at the Chestnut Street Opera House is indicated by the enthusiasm of the Philadelphia critics who reviewed the production at length. Some of the headlines in large type read: "Geraldine Farrar in Striking Film—Wartime Chaos in Russia Portrayed in 'The World and Its Woman,'" Evening Public Ledger; "New Farrar Picture is Thrilling Drama—Stirring Scenes in Russia Depicted in Film at Chestnut Street Opera House," Philadelphia Inquirer; "Strife and Kisses in Russian Film—Fights and Love Affairs of Miss Farrar Make Chestnut Feature Brisk," Philadelphia Press; "'The World and Its Woman' Pretentious Russian Film Presented," Philadelphia North American.

In addition to marking the opening of Goldwyn's new year, the Philadelphia presentation of the Farrar production is significant in that it introduces a season of motion pictures at the Chestnut Street Opera House, where the management made every effort to secure the strongest possible attraction as the premier feature. S. L. Rothapfel, famed for his success in arranging artistic presentations, visited Philadelphia to superintend the opening performance.

After praising the picture as a whole, the critic of the North American contributes the following tribute to Miss Farrar: "The star's acting is a delight. She fulfills all the requirements of her role and looks the part to perfection. She engages in a fight at one time with another woman that rivals the most famous male scrappers of the screen and recalls her performance of 'Carmen,' and she acts throughout in a spontaneous and artistic way that pleases thoroughly."

The critic of the Philadelphia Press writes: "The presentation of the feature has been marked by careful attention to decorative detail in the theatre proper, in the assembling of a very good orchestra and lighting effects. But it is safe to venture that the average spectator goes to a photoplay for its sake first. 'The World and Its Woman' would not disappoint him if it were displayed on a sheet with a piano for accompaniment."

Another Universal Group Abroad

Marie Walcamp Is Head of Fifth Foreign Expedition

ONE of the most interesting trade announcements of the week is contained in the statement from the Universal Company which tells of the sending of the fifth of its foreign producing units abroad, and the fact that four new serial productions are under way with stars of the first magnitude in the leading roles.

The Universal Company has at the present time four separate producing units out of this country. They are: the Eddie Polo company now in Scotland making the serial, "The Thirteenth Hour," the Smithsonian African Expedition in conjunction with the Universal Film Co., the Alder-Laemmle expedition into the Orient, and the industrial expedition headed by Roswell B. Johnson.

The fifth producing company is to sail from San Francisco for Japan on September 16, according to the present plans. The company will be headed by Marie Walcamp, serial star. The production or serial which will be made in Japan is titled "The Petals of Lao-Tze," taken from a story by J. Allen Dunn. The production will be directed by Henry McRae.

This is the second company Universal will have sent abroad to produce a serial. It is a fact worthy of note that the Universal company is keeping abreast of the demands of the public and the exhibitor for some new and novel productions of the better class. It is through such procedure that the Universal company expects to lead in the upbuilding of the screen art.

Robert Anderson is star in the Universal Special "Common Property"

Marie Walcamp, the star of the serial, is known as a fearless actress. Her latest serial success is "The Red Glove," and she has recently completed a series of special short Western subjects under the title of "The Spur and Saddle Series."

Thomas Gubbins, will be assistant director and interpreter, and Joe Waddell, formerly an American aviator who accounted for two German planes overseas in the recent war, will be chief cameraman. Waddell will not only enoy the trip as cameraman but will make a honeymoon of it, his bride of a few weeks accompanying him.

Supporting Miss Walcamp will be Harlan Tucker, former leading man for the Morosco stock company. Wadsworth Harris will have the villianous role, and Otto Lederer will have the character roles to portray. Others in the group of twelve who will make the trip to the island of Japan are George Hively, a well known scenarist, who will act as continuity writer; Miss Elinor Fried, business manager and film editor; Earl R. Hinds, developer; Charles Monroe, electrician, and Stockton Quincy, technical director and property chief.

Some idea of the size of this producing unit may be obtained from the fact that it will be equipped with a complete portable film laboratory, including film tanks, drying drums, and a printing machine. Besides several hundred trunks of costumes and clothes, the ship on which the company will sail will carry 225,000 feet of film for the use of the producing company.

Seen in Many Serials

Fictionized Version of Pathe Serials Wanted

A gradual return to the serial exploitation methods of a few years ago is evidenced by the recent demand from exhibitors for novelized forms of Pathe serials to be run in local newspapers in connection with the first run of the serials in the various theatres throughout the country.

Thirty or forty newspapers ran the fictionized version of Ruth Roland's latest Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," and the exhibitors through whose influence this was brought about have reported vastly increased attendances which they trace directly to this method of bringing the story before readers.

Within the last three days the Serial Publicity Department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has received a request from the Manchester Mirror of Manchester, N. H., for the fictionization of the Western Photoplays-Pathe serial, "The Great Gamble," co-starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison.

The Serial Publicity Department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that fictionized versions of all Pathe serials are always available to such exhibitors or newspapers as care to write for them.

Big Names Feature a Dwan Production

Allan Dwan—Richard Harding Davis—Augustus Thomas — Ferdinand Phinney Earle—these are some of the names which Realart Pictures Corporation announces will be strongly featured in its advertising of the special features, "Soldiers of Fortune."

A special exploitation department has just been organized under the direction of Bert Adler, a well-known publicity and advertising man, and his first work will be in connection with "Soldiers of Fortune."

This production has just been completed at the Pacific Coast studios of Allan Dwan. Mr. Dwan made the picture for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation which will release it through Realart. The story is based on a popular novel of Richard Harding Davis and there has been a nationally known dramatization, that made by Augustus Thomas for the stage.

Schomer-Ross Productions announce that Emily Stevens will star in "The Sacred Flame"

Interviewing "The Red Viper"

Linking Title of a Picture with Its Theme Appeals to Tom Hamlin

IN some restaurants the bill of fare plainly states "Roast Beef," but in all the higher-priced places they insert many superfluous sub-titles. This is now generally recognized as camouflage.

And in the motion picture industry many pictures are running amuck throughout the country bearing titles entirely foreign to their theme. Undoubtedly these have not intentionally been camouflaged, but simply get by through downright carelessness.

The opinion of the writer is that a short title which embraces the exact theme of the picture is a great asset for any exhibitor in his exploitation. Such a title for instance as "The Red Viper."

On previous assignments emanating from the editorial chair we were ordered to interview a star or review a picture. But this is the first time in our young-old life we were assigned to interview a title. And "The Red Viper" was the title.

When I first saw the title I mused; "Well, here's a film that is not a western, nor a comedy, and certainly is not a society drama. I must see the film first and actually see whether its striking title is in keeping with the theme."

And I found that it was a timely drama picturing the present day unrest, and still without a mention of Bolshevism or I. W. W.'s. A sort of propaganda that should give pleasure to members of the American Federation of Labor instead of offense.

A purely American story set in the working men's section of Manhattan, and with all the natural human elements at work, embracing love, hate, dissatisfaction and contentment.

"The Red Viper" was symbolized by certain radical agitators of foreign birth who urged a war of violence instead of the free use of the peaceful ballot box, which still remains every citizen's perquisite.

This is certainly one notable example of linking a striking title to the topical theme of a picture. Every person whose eyes are caught by this unusually striking title will immediately know the theme and know that it is a timely one.

Thus fully half the value of the exploitation is realized in the mere title alone. And you will consequently have an audience that is sympathetic to the theme and prepared to applaud the simon pure Americanism displayed and quick to appreciate the dramatic action and entertaining values injected by the director and his cast.

Of course an exhibitor wants to get them coming into the theatre in great and overwhelming numbers without the necessity of his spending a barrel of money in exploitation.

After getting them in it is generally acknowledged that a picture does not have to be a knockout. But it must satisfy and not send them away disappointed.

In regards to the pulling possibilities of "The Red Viper," the title and theme so snugly linked and so self-explanatory would naturally insure a big audience on so topical a theme,and as to the pleasing qualities it should entirely satisfy the exact sort of audience it draws.

Before the interview with a title is concluded it may be well to insert a declaration from a live exhibitor; Joseph La Rose, production manager of Rialto-Rivoli Theatres, New York City.

"I am glad to say that 'The Red Viper' is a good wholesome photoplay," said Mr. La Rose. "The cast selected did remarkable work, the scenes were very realistic, well directed and true to life. It has a tremendously big thought and big business possibilities. The timeliness of the subject will especially appeal to all. There can be no mistake for any exhibitor to book this picture."

The short snappy title that links up with the actual theme of any photoplay is much to be desired by the exhibitor in preference to the long title that happens to be entirely foreign to the real theme.—Tom Hamlin.

"The Gamblers" Soon Offered

Vitagraph About Ready to Release Screen Version of Chas. Klein Play

"THE GAMBLERS," Vitagraph's screen version of the drama by the late Charles Klein, is soon to be released. This play of love and jealousy, high finance and political ambition, bids fair to be one of the most popular ever offered with Harry T. Morey as the star. Entirely different from the two other of the Klein plays presented by Vitagraph on the screen, "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Third Degree," it is said to be just as virile, and even more timely in its theme than its predecessors.

"The Gamblers" was adapted for the screen by Sam Taylor and Lucien Hubbard, who adhered closely to the story but injected several situations that were only hinted at in the original play. It offers a splendid example of how the screen play easily may be made better than the spoken drama in that strong scenes that are only intimated in the stage production are visualized on the screen.

Then, too, the adapters have changed the motif of the play. An originally produced it was political ambition that led the Assistant Attorney General to prosecute, if not persecute, the alleged gamblers with bank funds. In the present production jealousy of his wife brings about this result. Vitagraph believes that this change is a great improvement as it offers a more logical way of showing love interest.

Paul Scardon directed "The Gamblers" and Vitagraph provided an excellent cast and beautiful settings. Among the well known players in the cast are Charles Kent, Agnes Ayres, Helen Ferguson, Erie Mayne, George Majeroni and George Backus.

Semon's Comedies Are Hits in Canada

The popularity of the Larry Semon comedies is further evidenced by a frank and somewhat humorous letter just received by Vitagraph from M. R. Humble, proprietor of the Family Theatre at Walkerville, Canada. Walkerville is a pretty big town and Mr. Humble should know whereof he speaks. He wrote to the manager of Vitagraph's Toronto branch as follows:

"In my time I have written a great many letters to exchanges kicking about service, and they were usually justified, too. About the only time I write a letter is when I have something to 'holler' about. When the service is satisfactory, everything is as it should be, and there is no necessity of wasting good letter heads.

"This letter is one grand exception, though. After the way your Larry Semon comedies have gone over with my patrons, I feel that it is my duty to let you know that they have got it over the rest of them like a tent."

Production Started on Kay Laurel's Vehicle

J. M. Shear, executive head of the newly formed J. M. Shear Company, producing a series of special features, starring Kay Laurel, former Ziegfeld Follies beauty and recently seen in Rex Beach's "The Brand," announces that Jack O'Brien, director general of the new Laurel company started the first production last week at the Reliance Studio, Yonkers. The story deals with the Texas-Oklahoma oil fields.

The three principal members of Miss Laurel's supporting cast are Robert Elliott, leading man; E. Fernandez, who will portray the role of an Indian chief, and Olive West, who has the part of the Indian squaw. Mr. Shear announces that he expects to have the first picture ready for a review showing in October.

A Continued Success

"Oh, Boy!" the Albert Capellani special being distributed by Pathe, which had the distinction of being the first musical comedy ever filmed, continues to meet with the whole-hearted applause approval of exhibitors in every section of the country, according to reports from Pathe.

Racing Drama Scores a Solid Hit

Crowded houses greeted William ox's production of Henry Blossom's amous story of the turf, "Checkers," ith an all-star cast, at Teller's Shu-rt Theatre in Brooklyn, August 30, hen that production, which is pack-g also the Central Theatre on roadway, Manhattan, opened for an definite run.

The management of Teller's Shu-rt had followed the plan of exploita-on suggested by the producer, and e well advertised opening attracted he of the largest audiences that ever acked the popular house. Many men f race track fame were on hand. hey had come down from Saratoga or the opening of the fall season at elmont Park, and the motion pic-re dealing with the sport which they ad made a life study was just the ort of tonic they needed.

Many Aids for Pearl White's Serial

Exhibitors booking Pearl White's test and greatest Pathe serial, "The lack Secret," which will be released n November 9, will find that Pathe xchange, Inc., has gone to unusual ngths to help them exploit it on a cale equal to its importance.

One of the big exploitation helps rranged by Pathe is the series of pecial window displays in every big ity in which local book dealers and xhibitors will be brought into co-peration with the publishers of Mr. hambers' novel, the George H. oran Co., Inc., of New York.

Another exploitation scheme that ill be put into operation is the issu-ng by Pathe of a high art booklet, ght pages and cover, carrying en-ravings of the star and players, cenes from the serial and appropriate ading matter.

ack Lait to Write for Selznick Films

Jack Lait, Chicago newspaper man, hort story writer and dramatist, has gned his name to a contract which ill give to the Selznick Pictures Cor-oration for one year the exclusive ght to all his stories and plays and riginal contributions to the screen, ccording to an announcement by lyron Selznick.

THE month of September will see the release for the new year of presentative assortment of William Fox screen productions, including a wide range of stories having an appeal for all classes of theatres and all classes of audiences.

These pictures are forerunners in the greatly expanded program announced by Fox for the season 1919-20—which include among the stars William Farnum, Pearl White, Tom Mix, Theda Bara, Gladys Brockwell, George Walsh, William Russell, Madlaine Traverse, Albert Ray, Elinor Fair and Peggy Hyland. Besides the stellar vehicles of these favorites, the program for the forthcoming season comprises a generous sprinkling of the humorous Fox Sunshine Comedies and the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons by "Bud" Fisher.

In the order of September releases Madlaine Traverse heads the long list of productions in an Excel picture entitled "The Splendid Sin." This story, according to trade journal reviewers who have seen it, is a forceful dramatic tale.

On the same date, the first of the September, "Mutt and Jeff" series will be released. It is entitled "Mutt and Jeff" in Switzerland."

"Evangeline" Is Among the Bigger Films Offered

September 14 is the release date for three Fox productions. Among them is one of Gladys Brockwell's best vehicles, a story of a woman's love and her code of honor. This picture is "Broken Commandments." It is one of the Victory series and typical of the standard set by Fox for this brand.

Another September 14 release—one of the new series of Sunshine Comedies—is a two-reel picture, "Dabbling in Society."

The third of the releases for this date is a "Mutt and Jeff" entitled, "All That Glitters is Not."

September 21 is a date of especial importance in the Fox schedule. This is the day set for the release of the William Fox special production—"Evangeline," Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's immortal poem adapted to the silent drama by R. A. Walsh. Miriam Cooper is featured.

The second of the releases for September 21 is one of the Theda Bara series, an adaptation of David Belasco's stage story play, "La Belle Russe." Miss Bara in this enacts a dual role.

The piquant and popular Peggy Hyland plays the part in the third Fox release for the twenty-first, a comedy-drama felicitously named "The Merry-Go-Round," in which she appears an an enchanting gypsy maiden

"Everybody's Doing It" is the name of the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon for the week of September 21.

The last three releases from Fox Film Corporation for the month of September are scheduled for the twenty-eighth, and comprise one Excel picture, one Sunshine comedy and one "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon.

The Excel is a vehicle for George Walsh. It is classed as a melodrama dealing with the half-world, and is called "From Now On."

"His Naughty Wife" suggests many humorous possibilities contained in the Fox Sunshine Comedy listed for the twenty-eighth. A "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon, "In Spain," completes the releases of Fox Film Corporation for September.

Pictures Fit Best as Educationals

Such Is Expressed Belief of Samuel Goldwyn

EDUCATORS and social service experts, as well as motion picture producers themselves, have still to realize the educational opportunity provided by the motion picture, according to a recent statement by Samuel Goldwyn. The affiliation of the Bray Pictograph with the Goldwyn Company was the occasion for a statement by Mr. Goldwyn upon the function of a motion picture film which explains complicated technical processes by picturizing them.

"It is bromadic, of course, to say that this is an age of pictures," writes Mr. Goldwyn from the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City, "but it is one of those obvious truisms that are unrecognized because they are so obvious. We do not have any illusions or dreams about the future of the educational film and we are not claiming that it will immediately surplant the newspaper, but any observer who watches audiences when pictures such as the Bray Company presents are shown on the screen, does not have to be convinced that a picture is the speediest method for introducing knowledge into a man's brain.

"In some ways this is actually the field for which the motion picture is best suited, and I often think how amazing it is that we should have developed the dramatic side of the screen so intensively before a thought was given to its informational and educational side.

"The war was an eye-opener in this regard, in the instant need for training great groups of men in new technics and new ways of action, and the great necessity for teaching them uniformity of action. The value of the screen as an instrument for producing this result was seen at once. The great armies that we threw into Europe would never have been trained without the aid of the motion picture. But that is only half the story.

"Consider if you can the tremendous auxiliary organization which accompanied our fighting men, the need for feeding, housing, clothing, training, entertaining and transporting millions of men in a brief time, and maintaining their health. Human knowledge alone would never have been adequate to such a task if it had not had at its command a means of simply and quickly conveying information as to methods for producing these results.

"Factory executives, organizers, leaders of men of every kind have returned from the ranks to the various activities which make up modern civilization and have carried back with them the lesson of the motion picture. Predictions are dangerous, and yet I venture to say that in ten years there will not be a great commercial institution anywhere in any of our large cities as well as any great educational institution that will not have facilities for enlarging the scope and the horizon of its workers by means of the educational film.

"It is for these reasons that the Goldwyn Company has put some of this energy into the distribution of such educational features as the Ford Weekly and the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph. Motion picture exhibitors are beginning to learn everywhere that people find amusement as often in knowledge as they do in dramatic art. This is a field which has been hardly touched and I fully anticipate great developments in it in the future."

W. F. Griffing, vice-president and general manager of Independent Prod. Co.

Hallmark Serials Follow One on Another

Hallmark Picture Corporation's serial production, "The Trail of the Octopus," produced under the personal supervision of and starring Ben Wilson, had its premiere the first week in September, when Episode 1 was released throughout the country by Hallmark exchanges, excepting the Southern territory which is covered for Hallmark product by S. A. Lynch, Enterprises, Inc.

"The Trail of the Octopus" is in fifteen episodes of two reels each.

Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Picture Corporation, in announcing the initial release of this episodic drama, states that following close upon the showing of the first episodes, Hallmark will release the first episode of a second serial, now under production and scheduled for completion in the late fall.

Helen Weer, one of the leads in "The House Without Children," distributed through the Film Market, Inc.

Animated Cartoons in the Making Shown

The place of feature importance in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph scheduled for release the week of September 21st, is given to answering a question that photoplay fans have been asking ever since J. R. Bray began issuing his animated cartoons several years ago. The mystery surrounding the making of the cartoons has aroused no end of speculation, and now, for the first time, the intricacies of the process by which the countless drawings are given the movement of life, are to be revealed to the public under the title, "How Animated Cartoons Are Made."

This film, following the development of the drawings in every detail, and affording an idea of the tremendous amount of work involved in producing even a few hundred feet of negative, has an educational as well as an entertainment value of the highest order.

Will Oversee Production of "Determination"

Captain F. F. Stoll, president of the United States Photoplay Corporation, and author of the photoplay "Determination," has appointed J. J. Livingston his personal representative to take entire charge of all production details.

Captain Stoll has just returned from England, where he spent six months photographing types of the White Chapel district, assisted by the Scotland Yard detective force. While abroad, he spent some time in Paris, making a careful study of high society and underworld life over there.

It is estimated that the production of "Determination" will cost in the neighborhood of half a million dollars. The story, taken from life, covers all phases, from royal society down to the lowest dives of London, Paris and New York.

Intrepid Cameraman on Big Venture

Word has been received from Jack R. Young, one of the youngest cameramen in the business, that he has reached the Grand Falls, Labrador, being the seventh white person known to reach there. He is returning to New York with scenes of Eskimo life.

D. Farnum Again at Work

Gasnier Studios Scene of Production of Newest for United Picture Theatres

PRODUCTION is to start immediately upon Dustin Farnum's next United Picture Theatres feature drama at the Gasnier studios, Glendale Cal., president J. A. Berst announces. It is stated that the new Farnum offering is to be the most pretentious production that star has as yet been starred in, both as regards story, cast and magnitude and magnificence of settings, included in which last are to be some remarkable street sets already in course of construction and in which five hundred "extra" people are called for.

The news that Louis J. Gasnier will superintend the production of the forthcoming United feature carries more than ordinary interest in that Mr. Berst and Mr. Gasnier have long been identified together in a number of remarkable and pretentious productions. Both were for a considerable time associated with Pathe of which organization Mr. Berst was for eighteen years vice-president and general manager and was succeeded by Mr. Gasnier as the guiding head of the organization on the former's resigning to become vice-president and general manager of the Selig company. Later when Mr. Berst resumed his office with Pathe Mr. Gasnier headed the serial production department for that concern.

When Mr. Berst became president of United Picture Theatres Mr. Gasnier branched out from serial production into feature offerings starring Lew Cody and other well known artists. With the present arrangement whereby United productions are to be made under the Gasnier direction the long time association of the two executives is thus resumed.

This initial Astra studio United production is from the pen of a noted author, whose name, however, is temporarily withheld. The continuity was written by Catherine Carr, well known as a Los Angeles scenario writer and successful magazine contributor. Winifred Kingston is to be seen in Mr. Farnum's leading support.

To Change Cuckoo Titles

Mr. Dintenfass Announces Variations; Producer Has Had Wealth of Experience

TO differentiate his two-reel comedy offerings from a recently announced feature drama by another producer, Mark M. Dintenfass announces a slight change of title in the second of his series of Cuckoo Comedies, the first three of which are now named "All Out of Luck," "Starting Out In Life," and "Ball-Bearing But Hard Running," featuring Bobby Burns with a cast including Jobyna Ralston, May Louis, "Fatty" Filbert, "Skinneh" Renfro, Will Louis, and others.

Recognizing the important place the two-reel comedy is accorded in the program of exhibitors today Mr. Dintenfass is bringing to the production of the Cuckoo Comedies, it is reported, large fund of experience and technical skill which that pioneer of the industry has been wont to devote to the feature productions made under his direction, of which "My Four Years In Germany" was a typical example.

Mr. Dintenfass is well known as ranking among those producers whose efficiency and technical skill have been gained by actual experience in the many departments of the industry. The producer of the Cuckoo Comedies takes pride in the fact that he has graduated through the various grades of moving picture knowledge, including those of licensed operator, exhibitor, owner and producer. To his present activity Mr. Dintenfass brings, too, experience gained as organizer of the Champion Film Corporation, the Vim Corporation, and other producing companies, in association with whom he gained the confidence and appreciation of a large body of exhibitors throughout the country.

"The Lost Battalion" In Cities

Larger Centers to See It Prior to Sale of State Rights on Subject

ARRANGEMENTS are now being made by W. H. Productions Company to give "The Lost Battalion" a showing in some of the principal cities of the United States as preliminary exploitation to selling state rights.

In this connection it is to be noted that "The Lost Battalion" is the first moving picture ever produced with a subject that made history and will be historical as long as libraries last, and which has been re-enacted for posterity with all of the original characters that participated in the events, picturized by the heroes themselves. It is the greatest achievement in the history of American battles, if not among the battles of the world. None was fought in history where the endurance of men was put to such a test as that which the heroic Whittlesey contingent endured during the five days and nights they were hemmed in by an entire German army corps in a ravine through which no body of men ever penetrated before, and which was declared impossible by Roman generals in the time of Julius caesar's invasion of Gaul; by Attila, and later by Napoleon.

A great achievement, which has been recorded in letters of blood and accomplished by men of whom it has been said that if the Great Wa proved anything, it is that men of al races who made up this wonderfu battalion of American heroes ar brave to a fault, for the place wher they carried the Stars and Stripes t victory was a place where death be came almost too familiar to th American soldier.

Producing Speedily an at Low Cost

The speed with which Aubrey M Kennedy is making pictures and th low cost at which he is turning the out is said to strike new levels i film-craft. During the past seve months he has made sixty-two reels c finished production. He has writte the original story in each and ever instance, made the respective continu ities, directed the pictures, cut an titled them. And all this he accomp lished without the aid of a workin staff or even an assistant. It is a outdoor work. The average cost pe foot has been one dollar.

During the past winter William Steiner, of the Jester Comedy Company and Aubrey M. Kennedy formed a co partnership, the former bringing hi salesmanship into conjunction with th rapid, economical picture-making o the latter. And these Kennedy produc tions have all been sold at a profit o over one hundred per cent.

"The Masked Rider" serial, "Sk Eye," or "Pirates of the Air" an twelve two-reel dramas are among th subjects quickly and economically pro duced and successfully marketed b the men.

"Her Game" Features Florence Reed

A forthcoming United Picture The atres release will be Florence Reed' new feature drama, "Her Game, which will mark the third of tha star's United series. The story, whic is reported to be of unusual calibre deals with the experiences of a reso lute young Southern girl on whon devolves the difficult task of restorin her aristocratic family's fortune whic has been sadly impaired by inroad made upon it through litigation an "the law's delay." The adventure and experiences of the courageou girl in New York are said to be o thrilling, not to say startling, nature and to give Miss Reed's histrioni ability full scope. Frank Crane di rected.

Ebony Film Resuming Its Activities

Bob Horner, writing from Chicago, announces that the Ebony Film Corporation, whose comedy subjects, enacted by an all-Negro cast, formerly released through the General Film Company, has resumed regular production. Their producing policy, however, has undergone a radical change, for, instead of featuring an all-Negro cast as hitherto, they are starring only their two black-faced comedians, Sam Jacks and E. G. Tatum, supported by a white cast.

They will produce a two-reel comedy every other week, the first subject having already been started. L. J. Pollard, who will personally supervise the making of these new laugh-makers, announces that an advertising and exploitation campaign will soon be started.

Arbuckle in an Old Time Slap-Sticker

In response, he says, to hundreds of letters asking him to make a good old slap-stick picture, "Fatty" Arbuckle has come through with "Back Stage," which is scheduled for release as a Paramount-Arbuckle comedy September 7th.

"I'm not apologizing for 'Back Stage'—I'm proud of it," writes "Fatty" in an open letter to exhibitors. "I used to think there wasn't anything new in roughhouse comedy, but when I started to make this picture I came across idea after idea, all perfectly new and screamingly funny. What's the result? I've got a brand new nonsense picture that is a riot and just what your patrons have been longing for."

Two Writers Added to Goldwyn Staff

Two well known writers, Charles Kenyon and Harry F. Thew, have been added to the editorial staff of the Goldwyn Studios. Mr. Thew, after graduating from the University of Minnesota had a varied experience as a newspaper man.

Charles Kenyon is a graduate of Stanford University. Since his student days he has become a well known playwright.

State Right and Foreign Sales

"BROWN of Harvard" has been sold by Film Specials, Inc., for New York and Northern New Jersey, Southern Illinois, Eastern Missouri, and Florida and Alabama.

Samuel Ludwig has bought from Jules Burnstein "Broken Barriers" for Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri.

Tyrad Pictures have disposed of Indiana, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota for "And the Children Pay." "Your Wife and Mine" has been sold by the same firm to Samuel Ludwig for North and South Dakota, Nebraska and Iowa.

R. C. Cropper, President and General Manager of the Bee Hive Film Exchange Company, has just secured "The Mysterious Mr. Browning," featuring Paul Panzer and Walter Miller as the second five-reel feature to be released through his Exchanges in Indianapolis and Milwaukee.

New England rights for "Colonel Bridau" have been bought from the Entente Film Corporation by the Eastern Feature Film Co. of Boston.

Elk photoplays, Inc., has secured the selling rights for the United States and Canada to the 15 two-reel Western Dramas featuring Shorty Hamilton.

The Photo Products Export Co., through their General Manager, Harry S. Stone, reports having done a record business during the month of August.

Among the sales made were 44 features and 65 comedies for the United Kingdom; 32 features for Norway; the entire series of Flagg Comedies and the Ebony Comedies for Argentine; 7 features, the Ebony Comedies and 3 two-reel comedies for Spain and Portugal; 20 comedies for Japan and 3 two-reel comedies and 2 features for Mexico.

The foreign department of the Arrow Film Corporation, which was recently installed, has concluded sales for twelve features for entire Continental Europe. This department has also concluded a deal, whereby thirty 1-reel comedies have been sold for entire Continental Europe. In addition to these sales a number of features have been sold for the United Kingdom.

Hallmark Releases Scheduled

Campaign Opened with Two New Films, "Wit Wins" and "Love, Honor and (?)"

HALLMARK PICTURE CORPORATION announces two new feature productions ready for fall release, "Wit Wins," a Burton King production with Florence Billings, Hugh Thompson, John Nichols, E. J. Ratcliffe, Eugene Strong and Joseph Smiley in the principal roles, and "Love, Honor and (?)," a Charles Miller production with Stuart Holmes and Ellen Cassidy in the featured roles.

"Wit Wins" is a screen version of Leander De Cordova's story and "Love, Honor and (?)" is from a story by Julia Burnham. The first is a mystery story with love and romance running through the plot. The Miller production is a domestic drama dealing with the unhappiness that comes to a young couple when the wife is carried away with the attentions of an unprincipled suitor and her mania for society.

Frank G. Hall, president of the Hallmark Picture Corporation, announces that he has prints of these two features in the Hallmark exchanges and with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., handling the distribution of the Hallmark product in the South.

In addition to these two new features, Hallmark opened its first serial campaign this month with the release of the first episode of the Ben Wilson serial. "The Trail of the Octopus," with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in the featured roles. "The Devil's Trademark" is the title of the first episode, released the first week in September. In support of Mr. Wilson and Miss Gerber are Marie Pavis, who has the vampire role; William Carroll, character man; Howard Crampton and Allen Garcia. The story tells of the adventures of a noted criminologist in solving a mystery that has defied the greatest detectives of the world.

With the recent merger of the Frank G. Hall interests in Hallmark Picture Corporation, the releases of Independent Sales Corporation, Film Clearing House, Rothapfel Picture Corporation, Charles Miller Productions, Inc., Hobart Henley Productions, Inc., and British-American Picture Finance Corporation, will come under the one head—Hallmark Picture Corporation.

Now a Cigar Tie-Up

A tie-up has been arranged with the United Cigar Stores Co., whereby a cigar will be introduced named "Bennison Smiles," after the Goldwyn star, Louis Bennison.

William Russell, featured in the American picture, "Six Feet Four"

Exchange System for Church and School

Exchanges handling features, comedies and educationals solely for Churches, Schools, Community Centers and other institutions will be established in the principal cities of the United States by the recently organized Screen Entertainment Distributors, Inc., of 67 West 90th street, New York, of which John McAleer, formerly of Universal and other companies, is president.

The constantly increasing demand for programs for churches and other institutions outside of theatres has prompted the organization of this new company and it is managed with the belief born of actual knowledge and experience that the church and institutional field, to be successful, must be handled entirely independent and separate from the theatre field. Screen Entertainment Distributors, Inc., Exchanges will consequently have no business dealings with theatres, or regular exhibitors, but will contract for regular service to churches, schools and similar institutions handling only new prints of specially selected and approved films.

Branch managers in principal cities of the country are now being appointed by President McAleer.

Paramount Week March Scores in New York

"The Paramount-Artcraft March," written by George W. Beynon as an added means for exhibitors to celebrate Paramount-Artcraft Week, and published by Waterson, Berlin & Snyder, is said to have proven a great success in the various houses where it has already been played, notably in the Rivoli and Strand theatres in New York City. Both Dr. Hugo Rosenfeld of the Rivoli and Carl Edouarde of the Strand thought so highly of it that it was given a prominent position in the medley of music arranged to accompany the animated weekly during the week of August 17th.

Keenan Back at Studio

Following a ten weeks' tour of the United States, during which he visited every large city between New York and the coast, for the purpose of addressing labor organizations, Frank Keenan has returned to his studios in Los Angeles, Calif., where he has started production on his latest picture, "The Life Test."

Named District Head in South for Fox

George R. Allison, the man who is said to have brought the first five-reel photoplay to the Southern exhibitors six years ago, has been appointed Southern District Manager of Fox Film Corporation, with main offices in Atlanta, known throughout the South as the "dean of filmdom." Mr. Allison long since has established with the Southern exhibitor a reputation for integrity, and he holds the confidence of his clients wherever the given word is necessary.

The selection of Atlanta as the headquarters of the Southern district was made at the earnest solicitation of Mr. Allison. While he will be in charge of the offices in New Orleans, Washington and other Southern cities, he will make Atlanta his home office and will personally conduct the management of that branch.

Great Setting Wrecked

At the Fischer studios in New Rochelle, N. Y., workmen are removing from the stage the wreckage of a magnificent representation of the main room of the Sagamore Club, the setting of a large number of interior scenes in "The Amazing Lovers," B. A. Rolfe's first production to be presented through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc. The setting, which entirely covered the area of the largest stage at the plant, was deliberately demolished for the fight scenes between the "Shining Band" and the members of the club.

Star Is to Appear in Person

Helen Holmes Will Be Seen in Bigger Cities at Showing of "Fatal Fortune"

S. S. KRELLBERG, president and general manager of the S. L. K. Serial Corporation, announces that Helen Holmes will appear in person in all the big cities of the United States, during the run of the new S. L. K. Serial, "The Fatal Fortune." It has been the custom of one or two of the big exhibitors in the larger cities to have serial stars make a personal appearance while the serial, in which they are starring, is being run. But, no producer or star, it is said, has attempted to make personal appearances all over the United States and Canada.

At present Mr. Krellberg is working out the itenary of the trip. Miss Holmes will first appear in New York City. She will then go to Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, Atlanta and other large Southern cities. She will also take in Detroit, Cleveland, Toledo and Chicago, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Kansas City, Dallas, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Portland and Denver. On her return she will then go to Canada, appearing in the first run houses in Montreal, Toronto, and Quebec.

It will be a big undertaking, but Miss Holmes says after the trying work of twenty weeks in the studios, it will be a great relief and that she enjoys travelling immensely. It is expected that several song "boosters" will accompany her and that the song "Pretty Helen," written for her, will become famous before she has returned to her home in New York again. While millions have seen Miss Holmes in her daring and breath taking stunts on the screen, few, except her personal friends have ever seen her in person. She says that she will enjoy meeting her legion of followers throughout the United States, and that it will be a great treat to her.

South American Sale on Griffith Film

Following closely upon the announcement made last week by Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., of the purchase of the foreign rights of D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," came many offers from the American representatives of European films eager to secure the Griffith piece for their territory. The first negotiation closed was for South America.

The countries involved in the deal included Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chili, Peru, Bolivia and Equador. The price received by Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., for this territory is said to be the largest figure ever paid for a motion picture production in South America—greatly exceeding the figures of the previous Griffith subjects, "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," which have held the record.

Another Morey Subje for Early Release

One of Vitagraph's early relea will be "In Honor's Web," a play life in high society, with Harry Morey in the leading role. Writt by Perry Vekroff. Mr. Morey's n feature is heralded as one of the fin in which he has yet appeared and c which will strengthen his already a sured position as one of the very lea ers of screen artists.

The cast selected by Vitagraph f "In Honor's Web" includes Agr Ayres, Myrtle Stedman, Geor Backus, Gladden James, George M jeroni, Bernard Seigel and Rob Gaillard. The play was directed Paul Scardon.

Progress on Selznick's "Country Cousin"

Elaine Hammerstein, her leadi man, Walter McGrail and Direct Alan Crosland of the Selznick forc have returned from Cooperstow N. Y., where they went to get t proper atmosphere and settings for t picture version of Booth Tarkingt and Julian Street's stage play, "T Country Cousin," in which Miss Ha merstein will make her debut as Selznick star.

Myron Selznick announces that has signed Director Crosland on long term contract to direct Selzni Pictures. Mr. Crosland, though co paratively young, has already carv an enviable record for himself in t motion picture business.

Three Dubuque Managers Comply with Demands of Musicians

THREE Dubuque, Ia., motion picture man- agers have complied with the demands of ie musicians made on them early in August for ncreased wages, larger orchestras and shorter ours. These theatres are the Family, the Star nd the Liberty. The management of the Star omplied with the demands when presented by ie musicians and the Family and Liberty the- res conceded to them at a conference on Sun- ay, August 24.

The Grand, the Strand and the Princess have efused to give in and the Dreamland and the Majestic remain to be heard from. Just what ction these theatres will take is uncertain, but ie fact remains that the attendance is as good before the musicians walked out. There is current rumor that the Strand is to install a pe organ.

Balaban & Katz Will Invade the Loop

BALABAN & KATZ, the well known photo-play impresarios, will build a new theatre in the center of Chicago's downtown district, which it is claimed will eclipse any house devoted to the silent drama in this country.

Chicago's newest photoplay palace will be located on the southeast corner of Lake & State streets and will have a seating capacity of 5,000 people.

The building will be erected at a cost of $1,300,000 and will be devoted in its entirety to theatre purposes. There will be no stores or offices in the building to mar the artistic effect. The ground on which it will stand represents an outlay of $1,500,000 making a grand total of $2,800,000.

A. W. and G. L. Rapp are the architects. The old buildings now on the site will be torn down for the beginning of construction May the 1st, 1920.

Gathered in Green Bay

"THE END OF THE ROAD," a feature film, showing the physical ravages of ignorant unfortunates of both sexes, drew capacity houses to the Orpheum theatre when presented August 25-26-27.

BILLIE RHODES was seen in an Exhibitors' Mutual film, "Love Call," at the Colonial theatre August 27-28.

THE Paramount picture, "Vicky Van," featuring Ethel Clayton, was screened August 29-30 in the Colonial theatre.

WILLIAM S. HART was presented August 25-26-27 in the Artcraft film, "Money Corral," in the Grand theatre.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN played in the Royal theatre in "Sunnyside," August 25-26. Despite the fact that the picture had been shown a few months ago here, it drew well.

LOUIS GLAUM appeared in the Pathe picture, "Godess of Lost Lake," August 24 in the Colonial theatre.

CHARLOTTE WALKER played in the William Fox picture, "Every Mother's Son," in the Royal theatre August 27-28.

"INNOCENT ADVENTURESS," with Vivian Martin in the leading role, was produced in the Colonial theatre August 25-26. The film is a Paramount.

ELSIE FERGUSON played in the Paramount film, "The Danger Mark," for four days, starting August 28, in the Orpheum theatre.

Detroit News and Views

GRAVE possibilities of an operators' strike faced Detroit managers on Labor Day. At this time the year's agreement expired and at this writing no possibility of settlement was seen. The operators ask for a straight 25 per cent increase in wages and have refused to compromise. The managers have completed arrangements for a new scale with the musicians and stage hands, giving each a slight increase. The operators, however, want more money than the musicians and this the managers refuse to grant.

THE MAJESTIC management has decided to hold off on its projected vaudeville policy for three weeks. The first two, Douglas Fairbanks will be presented in his first Big Four release and then will come "Sahara" for a week. After that vaudeville and pictures will comprise the program.

COMING attractions at the Broadway Strand consist of W. S. Hart in "Wagon Tracks," "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" with Bothwell Browne and the Sennett Girls, "The Eyes of the World," and Charles Ray in "The Egg-Crate Wallop."

DAVE BLYTHE, former booking director for cantonment theatres in the South, has joined the Metro sales force.

SIX first-run Detroit houses participated in Paramount-Artcraft week as well as about 100 neighborhood theatres.

ROBERT PERRY has taken charge of the Strand exchange for Dave Mundstock.

JOE HORWITZ, owner of the stage rights on "Mickey," and other pictures, has returned from a two months' vacation in the East.

HENRY SANTREY, formerly soloist at the Majestic theatre for three years, returned to Detroit several days ago. This week he is at the Detroit Opera House on the Campus and next week at the Ferry Field theatre. Then, under the management of Arthur S. Hyman, he will tour the state with a jazz band.

HELMAR GEORGE, formerly of Pontiac, has leased the Moore theatre in Monroe and will open it as the Central. It will be redecorated.

THE ADAMS theatre, Detroit, has a new manager in the person of Clyde Wixon, formerly of the Orpheum theatre.

GEORGE SPAETH, formerly of Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, and the Fuller theatre, Kalamazoo, has leased the Temple theatre in Grand Rapids as a picture house.

News of Springfield Theatres

HEDDA NOVA in "The Spitfire of Seville," Mae MacLaren in "A Petal on the Current," and Bryant Washburn in "Love Insurance," were the attractions scheduled for the Vaudette for the week of August 24-30.

PATRONS thought Elsie Ferguson in "A Society Exile" was one of the best pictures that the Gaiety has ever shown. For the last half of the same week the attractions were Tom Moore in "Heartease," and a Goldwyn comedy.

PRISCILLA DEAN in "Pretty Smooth," enjoyed two days of prosperity at the Lyric on August 24 and 25. Emmy Wehlen followed for two more in "A Favor to a Friend," and Constance Talmadge and Harrison Ford finished out the week in "Happiness a la Mode."

THE PALACE and Pekin theatres are enjoying fine patronage.

"THE MAN WHO TURNED WHITE," featuring Henry B. Warner, is a coming attraction at the Princess.

KINOGRAMS are making a big hit at the Majestic.

THE GAIETY has booked the Carter De Haven comedies.

"HIDING IN HOLLAND," featuring the former Crown Prince, was an added attraction at the Vaudette on August 26 and 27.

MARY PICKFORD in "The Hoodlum," Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American," and Mrs. Charlie Chaplin Harris in "Home," are booked for early showing at the Gaiety.

FRANK KEENAN pleased Princess crowds for three days in "The Master Man," August 24, 25 and 26. Bryant Washburn followed for two days in "All Wrong," a Pathe production.

THE PROGRAM for the Capitol the week of August 24-30 was: Sunday, Louise Huff and Jack Pickford in "Sandy," and Fatty Arbuckle in "Love"; Monday, Tom Moore in "A Man and His Money"; Tuesday, Charles Ray in "The Hired Man"; Wednesday, Billie Burke in "Peggy"; Thursday, Mary Pickford in "Hulda from Holland"; Friday, Triangle special, "Root of Evil," also Fatty Arbuckle in "Fickle Fatty's Fall"; Saturday, Enid Bennett in "The Biggest Show on Earth."

PICTURES which played to big business at Ben Rovin's Amuse-U lately, are: Douglas Fairbanks in "A Modern Musketeer"; Dustin Farnum in "Captain Courtesy" and William Farnum in "The Rainbow Trail."

SOME of the attractions at the Savoy for the week of August 23-30 were: Chapter 10 of "The Perils of Thunder Mountain," a two-reel L-Ko comedy and "Fighting Hearts"; Frank Keenan in "The Silver Girl," and Hale Hamilton in "After His Own."

"OH, BOY!" had a great week at the Princess, August 16-23, breaking all records for big business.

LOUIS KERASOTES made a ten strike with "The Heart of Humanity." Louis had the great picture on August 20 and 21.

E. H. SNYDER, former treasurer of the Orpheum theatre, Champaign, Ill., is the new treasurer of the Majestic here, succeeding Warren Harrison. The latter gentleman goes to Champaign.

W. W. WATTS, owner of the Gaiety and Vaudette theatres, is spending some time in Chicago looking after the new contracts for the season of 1919-1920.

MAJOR H. T. LOPER, owner of the Kimbark theatre, Chicago, and Lyric theatre of this city, is visiting his son, Harry Loper, who operates the local playhouse. Major Loper reports business as being very good in Chicago, and there certainly is no complaint to be made on things here.

MRS. DUER, who manages the cosy Empress theatre on South Grand Avenue is installing a balcony, which will help out greatly. Sometimes the lady is not able to accommodate the crowds, but will be better prepared when the balcony goes in. Gladys Brockwell in "The Forbidden Room" was the attraction for Sunday, August 24, and did very well.

LIEUTENANT ORMER LOCKLEAR was very much pleased to receive a clipping from Motion Picture News on "The Winged Trail," the picture he made for Universal. Locklear thrilled 60,000 people here on August 23, and did the same thing a week previous. None of the movie stars are stealing his stuff, you can bank on that.

THE ROYAL is making a great start with "Elmo the Mighty." The third chapter was shown on August 24, along with another feature, "The Captive Guide." The remaining attractions for the week were: Monday, E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli in "La Fayette, We Come"; Tuesday, Margarita Fischer in "The Mantle of Charity"; Wednesday, "An Amateur Widow"; Thursday, "Fighting Destiny," with Harry Morey; Friday, Madlaine Traverse in "Rose of the West"; Saturday, Mary Miles Minter in "Up the Road with Sallie."

MOTION picture exhibitors of Springfield are pleased with the repeal of the Daylight Saving Bill. They figure that the measure was harmful to the show business, and that it lost them money while it was in force.

SEVERAL of the news weeklies had cameramen here taking shots of Locklear and his aerial circus, at the State Fair, August 23.

ONE OF THE cleverest operators in the city is Earl Skaggs, employed at the Gaiety. The young man is a born mechanic, electrician and photographer. Watch for his name among the big boys one of these days.

Booth Travels in Indiana

E. M. BOOTH, assistant manager of the Lenwood Amusement company has resigned and is travelling in Indiana for the Fox Film Corporation. C. H. Hughes, formerly with the Opera House at Bedford, Ind., takes Mr. Booth's position.

Here and There in Fond du L

ALICE BRADY in one of Fond du Lac's favorites, won new honors at the Idea We day and Thursday, August 27 and 28 whe was seen in one of her best pictures, ' World to Live In." Notwithstanding st counter attractions the Idea drew pa house on this picture. The program at Idea for Friday and Saturday, August 29 30 was also an attractive one—Bessie Barri Barriscale in "Josselyn's Wife."

THE Davidson theatre Waupun presente attractive program for the week ending Au 27. It included the following: Saturday Au 23, Norma Talmadge in "The Safety Curt supplemented by the Sunshine comedy, " Fatal Marriage;" Sunday August 24, Pa Frederick in "Out of the Shadows;" Wed day, August 27, Wm. S. Hart in "Bran Broadway."

ANITA STEWART in "A Midnight mance" has been booked for an early da the Davidson theatre, Waupun. The Dav theatre at Waupun has engaged Miss Lo Johnson as violinist, who will play at e performance until September 18.

THE Scenic theatre, Waupun, gave its pat a strong program for the week ending Wed day August 27. It included Edith Store "As the Sun Went Down" for Satu August 23; J. Walter Kerrigan in "Thre Gordon" for Sunday August 24; Bessie L in "The Yankee Princess" for Tuesday, Au 26 and Peggy Hyland in "The Rebel Bride" for Wednesday August 17.

They Say in Chicago That—

R. C. CROPPER, president and general manager of the Beehive Exchange is rapidly getting his organization whipped into line to handle a number of five reel features, the rights for which he has just acquired. The first release will be September 15th, of Texas Guinan's five reel western feature "THE SHE WOLF." The Beehive exchange now has enough bookings on this picture in Chicago alone to keep five prints busy for one solid month.

SOL BLOOM of Philadelphia, who acquired the rights for that section to all of the Capital Film Company's productions, featuring Neal Hart and Al Jennings, has been in Chicago and closed with the Capital for all of the Helen Gibson railroad pictures, 24 in number.

L. M. BELLFIELD, P. A. for the American Film Company, is one of the busiest little ladies in the city of Chicago, working on the forthcoming releases of their picture, "SIX FOOT FOUR."

SAMUEL LUDWIG is now handling the Capital Film Company's releases in this territory from his new office located in the Film Exchange building, 207 Wabash Avenue.

C. N. KEPPLER, who recently returned from over seas, has been appointed in the sales department of the Triangle, Chicago office. Keppler carries wounds received at Soissons, July 19th for which he was decorated the 22nd of last December by General Petain, with the Croix de Guerre which carries a palm with seven citations.

REX LAWHEAD, manager of the Lincoln Square theatre, Decatur, Illinois, has been a Chicago visitor several different times recently. Rex is getting ready for a good splash of business for the coming season.

LUBLINER & TRINZ have just taken over the Crawford theatre and the Madison Square theatre, two of the largest west side picture houses, both of which are well established paying houses.

M. J. MINTZ for a number of years manager of the Unity Photoplay Company, of which Frank Zambreno is president, has just been appointed manager of Exhibitors' Mutual Chicago Office. The great number of beautiful floral pieces which decorated Mr. Mintz's new office, bore a silent testimony to the esteem in which he is held by exhibitors in Chicago and adjacent territory.

THE many friends of Frank Rogers, who has just been appointed district manager for Pathe, covering the central west territory, are keeping the wires busy with congratulations. Edward Eschmann was made manager of the Pathe, Chicago Exchange.

THERE was a time when Cress Smith would not have a picture taken—O, Well, time works wonders, only he is a better looking man than his latest picture shows him to be.

THE annual rumor is afloat that a new motion picture theatre will be located in the old Inter-Ocean building. The last report involved Ascher Brothers; now it's someone else. When this one goes to sleep someone will wake it up with a bottle of smelling salts.

ANOTHER dash into Chicago by Rex Lawhead culminated in his pulling down a contract to play the Jack Dempsey Company at his theatre, the Lincoln Square, Decatur, Illinois. Rex showed his sportmanship by paying them $5,000 outright for labor day in his town—Some red hot boy, and the little old town only has 40,000 inhabitants. This little trick will stand as a monument to game sportmanship.

C. W. STROH, president of the Arc Amusement Company, though absent from the theatre, located in Crawfordsville, Indiana due to illness, writes the Motion Picture News, Chicago office, that with the help of the News he is enabled to conduct the affairs of the house from a distance without trouble. Some distance between Crawfordsville, Indiana and Rochester, Minnesota and conclusive proof of the News value.

IKE VAN RONKEL, the genial manager of the Goldwyn Chicago Office, still dwells on the good old days of the film game—Right you are friend Van; those were the happy days. There are others who ruminate as well as you—but what's the use.

W. F. WARNEFAR, Gem theatre, Lawrenceberg, Indiana, who is accredited with being one of the oldest exhibitors in the state, is also making a reputation for the clever way he exploits the picture he plays.

SPRAGUE GREEN of the Beehive Exchange, who travels Indiana, has a penchant for writing stories about the dead ones among exhibitors—Never mind old top, there are quite a few live ones in Indiana and you seem to get them.

LINICK & JACOBY, who have just closed their most successful run of "YANKEE DOODLE IN BERLIN" report that the business at their Ziegfield theatre on Michigan Boulevard was the largest ever enjoyed by that house during any engagement, and that they are closing contracts rapidly throughout the territory controled by them on this picture.

IN spite of the excessive heat, Orchestra Hall has been showing Paramount Artcraft pictures to capacity houses at all performances.

HAS anyone noticed that white flannel suit that Joe Koppel, manager of the Balaban & Katz Riviera, has been wearing? Well, it is in thorough keeping with the beauty of that sumptuous theatre—Classy house, classy manager.

EDWARD B. GRAVES well known to Chicago exhibitors, is now with Lubliner & Trinz Pantheon theatre.

CHARLES BASS, president of the Bass Camera Company, Chicago, has just made a picture for the Summer Boys Camp at Crystal Lake, Illinois, for the social service department of the Independent Order of Bnai Brith. Mr. Bass turned the crank himself which undoubtedly means that the picture will be a success.

B. A. LUCAS, who will be remembered as the Illinois salesman for the Metro, under Cresson E. Smith and for the past two months manager of Realart, Omaha Office, has just been appointed assistant sales manager of the Chicago Office of The Big Four.

A. J. ABRAMS, the up-to-the-minute manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, Chicago Office, is all aglow over their recent sale of the $25,000 Barton ball room organ, which is now being installed in the ball room of Dreamland, Chicago's select dancing pavilion. The instrument was made by the Bartola Musical Instrument Company and bears the name of the inventor, Mr. Dan Barton.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

WILLIAM RUSSELL was presented at the Liberty theatre, August 20, in an American feature, "All the World to Nothing." This pleasing picture attracted good-sized audiences.

MANAGER BOYLE of the Dreamland theatre secured a Mitchell Lewis play, "Life's Greatest Problem," for showing on Wednesday, August 20. Lewis is getting to be a big drawing card.

HAZEL DALY made her debut at the Star theatre on August 20 in "The Little Rowdy." Besides this feature a Tom Mix western play was shown.

THE PRINCESS theatre presented Anita Stewart in "Two Women" on the August 20 and 21 program. This picture had been shown in Dubuque some years ago, but the drawing power of Anita Stewart is so great that the picture drew as large houses as a first-run play.

THE DREAMLAND had Kathleen Clifford for the Thursday, August 21, star. Her play, "The Law that Divides," attracted fair-sized audiences.

"TWO MEN OF TINTED BUTTE" with Jack Perrin, and "The Farmerette" with Gale Henry, comprised the August 21 program at the Star theatre.

THE FIRST showing of the Screen Supplement proved to be a winner at the Dreamland theatre where it was shown on August 22 and 23.

THEDA BARA made a big hit in "Camille" at the Family theatre on August 21 and 22.

A WILLIAM S. HART picture, "The Primal Lure," was shown at the Star theatre on August 23, to extra large houses.

"FUSS AND FEATHERS," with Enid Bennett, was the August 23 feature at the Family theatre.

ANNA NILLSON and Franklyn Farnum were starred at the Liberty theatre on August 23, in "In Judgment of."

THE August 22 and 23 program at the Princess theatre drew record audiences both days. It consisted of "A Man and His Money," Tom Moore, and a Harold Lloyd comedy, "Billy Blazes, Esq."

"PERILS OF THUNDER MOUNTAIN," the Vitagraph serial starring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, drew good houses at the Grand Saturday.

A FANNIE WARD production, "The Cry of the Weak," was shown at the Princess theatre on August 24.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA appeared at the Grand on August 24 in "The Courageous Coward."

THE August 24 program at the Star theatre drew the people out in fine shape. The feature, a western play starring G. M. Anderson, entitled "Shooting Mad," was very well received, but the comedy, "Fatty and the Bathing Beauties," with Fatty Arbuckle, elicited the most applause.

ALICE BRADY appeared at the Family theatre on August 24 in a Select feature, "Her Better Half." Miss Brady was well liked in this play.

THE LIBERTY theatre had two stars on its August 24 program—Bessie Barriscale and Tom Mix. Miss Barriscale was presented in "All of a Sudden Norma" and Tom Mix in a western, "The Sheriff's Blunder." This bill drew large houses.

"THE REBELLIOUS BRIDE" with Peggy Hyland, was shown at the Grand theatre at Galena, Ill., on August 22.

In Indianapolis and Indiana

THE Indiana State Fair opened Monday and Indianapolis movie houses secured extra attractions to draw their share of the crowds during the week.

COMPETITION in the theatrical field of Indianapolis became keener than ever this week with the opening of the rebuilt Lyric, vaudeville house, and Smith's new photoplay theatre.

THE Lyric was rebuilt completely at a cost of $250,000. It seats 2,000.

SMITH'S, which was built by Dan Smith, on the site of the restaurant which has borne his name for a quarter of a century, seats approximately 800. It is an artistic addition to Indianapolis' complement of amusement centers. It enjoys one of the best locations in the city, being one-half block from Illinois and Washington streets, the busiest corner in town. Illinois and Washington streets is the site of the Lincoln and Claypool hotels. Half a block in the other direction from Smith's is the largest interurban terminal station in the world and across the street from Smith's is the biggest department store in Indiana.

SMITH'S is the eighth first-class downtown photoplay house for Indianapolis, its predecessors being the Circle, Alhambra, Colonial, Isis, Crystal, Regent and Keystone. A ninth big house is to be completed in a few weeks when the new Ohio is completed.

UNDER the management of W. E. Kerns of New York City the policy of the Majestic was changed from burlesque to feature photoplays, Labor Day. The government play, "Fit to Win," was the initial attraction.

UNIVERSAL was represented in nearly every downtown house in Indianapolis during the week of August 25-30. Dorothy Phillips was seen in "Destiny" at the Crystal during the entire week; Hedda Nova was seen in "The Spitfire of Seville" at the Rialto the first four days of the week; "Riders of Vengeance," featuring Harry Carey, was shown at the Regent the first half of the week; a Lyons-Moran comedy was shown at the Isis; the Circle used a news reel; and an episode from the serial, "Elmo, the Mighty," was shown at the Palms.

"THE HEART OF HUMANITY," the Universal production featuring Dorothy Phillips, has been booked to play at the Washington theatre, Richmond, Ind., on September 17, 18, 19 and 20. Martin Gruenwald, manager of the theatre, is planning some novel exploitation stunts.

THE Universal Film Exchange of Indianapolis, will hold its first "get together" meeting sometime in September. H. M. Berman, of New York, general manager of Universal exchanges, will be the guest of honor and other New York representatives of the company may also attend the meeting, which will probably be held on September 12.

San Francisco News

JOHN D. HOWARD, exploitation expert for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has arrived in San Francisco to co-operate with exhibitors, newspapers and producers in making Paramount-Artcraft week a success here. It is understood that Howard is to be in the city permanently, and that he will study the picture situation from both exhibitors' and the public's standpoint. "These days a person wouldn't go across the street to see the kind of photoplay that was all the rage three or four years ago," states Howard. "As the public is educated we must give them better pictures. Many super productions are now in the studios and will be released shortly. 'The Miracle Man,' which is to be shown at the Imperial, will be the first of these super-pictures." Howard has had a wide experience in showmanship, and the eastern magnates considered him just the man to put San Francisco on the map as one of the leading motion picture centers of the United States.

WELLINGTON WALES, business manager of the Marshall Nielan pictures, has gone to Los Angeles after a brief stay in San Francisco. Before leaving he said: "My visit here has shown conclusively that San Francisco is far better fitted in many ways than Los Angeles to provide the requirements of the motion picture producers. We are not considering what the other concerns plan to do, but are going right ahead with our own proposition. Mr. Nielan some weeks ago definitely made up his mind that he would move to San Francisco, provided proper location could be secured. As soon as I make my report to him he intends to return here and open actual negotiations." This is the most definite piece of information that has been made public since the project of starting studios in this city was first broached.

"THE WORLD AFLAME" has been booked at the Strand theatre, for a run beginning September 7. A second preview of the picture was held at Photo Player hall during the week for the supervisors, officials and representatives of various labor unions, and the picture has been generally commended. Letters of endorsement have been received by the Pathe from Mayor James Rolph, Annette Adams, U. S. District Attorney, Wm. W. Morrow, U. S. Circuit Judge, and William T. Bonsor, president of the local Labor Trades Council.

THE Goldwyn has booked "The Girl from Outside" for a two weeks' run at the Tivoli. In order to make the two weeks' booking Mr. Parsons personally took a small projecting machine and the film to San Jose, where Mr. Dahnken, president of T. & D., is confined to his bed with rheumatism, and at the close of the private run the two weeks' booking was confirmed. The Tivoli has also booked "Lord and Lady Algy" and "Strictly Confidential," to be released later by Goldwyn.

THE Exhibitors' Mutual has signed with the Strand for the new Hayakawa, the H. B. Warner and Bessie Barriscale series of productions, the service starting in September. The Mutual has closed the same series of productions with every key city in the territory.

UNDER the able management of Martin Kurtzig, the "Frolic," formerly Alhambra, is making the best record in its history. Mr. Kurtzig is a pioneer in the film game in San Francisco. It is said he was the first man to use an orchestra here, the first to use "cut outs" and the first to use lithographs.

HARRY CARNEY, who recently resigned from assistant management of the Universal, now occupies a similar position with the Pathe. Pending the arrival of C. A. Nathan, who is to become assistant manager of the Universal, the position is being held down by D. S. Markowitz.

"THE ECHO OF YOUTH" is booked for September 21 at the Frolic. Some special advertisements are being prepared for its run.

"WIVES OF MEN," featuring Florence Reed, will be released through the Universal at the Strand theatre September 21. This is the first of the Pioneer releases.

In Butte and Vicinity

THE Peoples theatre, which was built a couple of years ago and which has since been run by Ackerman & Harris, playing Hippodrome vaudeville, will be operated as a moving picture house in the future. The playhouse has been taken over by the Jensen & Von Herberg interests, managers of the Rialto theatre. The house will be under the supervision of Ed. Myrick, manager of the Rialto, with Dan Kalen, assistant at the Rialto, as house manager. The Peoples is really one of the classiest little playhouses in the state. It was closed last spring when it failed to draw any considerable patronage. It will be entirely renovated and redecorated before the opening. The opening picture will be James Oliver Curwood's "Paid in Advance."

A. A. BRUCE, formerly assistant to the manager of the Rialto theatre, has been made manager of the Victoria theatre in Tacoma, according to word received here. Mr. Bruce left here about a month ago for San Francisco to be assistant to Ralph Ruffner, former manager of the Rialto in Butte.

FILMING of animated scenes at the state fair grounds at Helena, September 8 to 13, will be made, with special attention in the movies contest to decide the most perfect feminine movie type in attendance. A Spokane, Wash., firm will take the pictures. No part of the fair, including races and parades, will be overlooked.

THE Empress Stock Company, which played a successful season at the Empress, which closed last June, will reopen for business next Sunday. "Broadway Jones" will be the opening bill. Manager W. H. Belmont has announced that there will be some new faces in the company this fall, but that most of the old favorites will be on hand. Miss Mary Newton, who was very popular here last year, will again take the lead, while the leading man's part will be taken by Albert Patterson, of the Keith Stock Company of Washington, D. C. Rehearsals have been under way for the past week.

"THE WOMAN UNDER COVER" had a great run at the American theatre here this week. Changes recently made in the American orchestra make it one of the finest in the state.

THE new moving picture house which is being built at Bozeman, at a cost of $100,000, will be ready for business about October 1, Manager O. E. Schmidt has announced. The Pantages vaudeville will play there one night each week.

BUTTE moving picture operators and employees are out after more pay. The managers of the various theatres have been served with the new scale of wages, which is to take effect September 15. The new scale calls for an increase in all lines of work and will greatly increase the expense of operating theatres in Butte, the managers state. Class A theatres must pay operators 50 cents per half hour or fraction, for running a machine, with $1 for Sunday and holiday work. Maintenance and repair work will cost 75 cents per half hour. All time between 2 A. M. and 9 A. M. will be $2 per hour or fractions. Theatres running eight hours or less will pay $8. Theatres running five days or less are asked to pay $44 a week. The present rate is $36. Class A theatres are vaudeville, stock, and moving picture houses in the city. Class B theatres in the suburbs are asked to pay $6 a day with six hours to constitute a day's work. Overtime is $1 an hour.

What They Say in Seattle

HARRY LUSTIG, general representative for Metro was a welcome guest in Seattle for about a week. He was pleased to be in a community that was full of life and one where the climate was just right. Mr. Lustig inspected the Seattle office and the Northwest territory.

GEORGE COLLADAY, formerly representing Vitagraph in Montana is now representing Fox there.

AL BLOOM, formerly assistant manager of the Northwest office for Metro and recently starting "The Western Poseter Company," with offices in Portland, Ore., and in Seattle at 2005 First avenue, has been required to add help.

DEAN COLLINS of Portland, Ore., manager publicity and service departments of the Portland and Seattle offices of the Universal Film Exchange was a recent visitor in Seattle, and a guest of Mgr. Potter.

C. M. HILL of Portland was also a Seattle visitor from Portland last week.

"HARRY CAREY" Degler of the Mission, was in heaven again during the week the Mission was playing Harry Carey in "Riders of Vengence."

LEO POTTER, brother of Manager Potter of the Seattle office of Universal has been made Eastern Washington and part of Idaho and Montana manager for Universal, working out of the Seattle office. He has made an extraordinary success with the "Woman Thou Gavest Me."

LAURA WYKOFF, from the Butte office of Universal took her vacation trip to Seattle.

LAURA LAMBERT, secretary of the Stillwell Amusement Co., Spokane, Wash., was a recent visitor in Seattle on account of the death of her father.

EDDIE MILNE, having learned to know good things when he sees them, because he is good natured, advised that the Pantages theatres in Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, Ore., should book the Spir and Saddle series with Marie Walcany, and so of course they did.

THE Liberty theatre, Seattle made a hit when it showed "A Romance of Seattle" together with Charles Ray in "Bill Henry." "A Romance of Seattle" showed some of the big institutions and factories of Seattle as well as some of the larger parks.

HERMAN WABER, Western manager for The Famous-Player's Lasky Corporation was in Seattle a short time ago looking over the Northwest field and visiting district manager George Endert. Mr. Waber went away happy and smiling.

WEST COAST manager Aronson of the Goldwyn Company was in Seattle to investigate conditions in the Seattle house. He also came up with a crew of film stars who will act in a Rex Beach thriller, part of which will be acted on Seattle's booming harbor.

HERBERT BOSWORTH who is making a big special Thomas H. Ince production under the direction of Irvin Willatt, had a narrow escape from drowning in the Pacific Ocean during the filming of some of the startling submarine scenes. The action of the story called for Bosworth, as the hero, to be madly fighting for entrance to the conning tower as the ship submerged. The sea was unusually rough and as the submarine went under the suction drew Bosworth with it to a considerable distance. When he arose to the surface it was several minutes before boats could reach him and he was almost exhausted when they did. Only his remarkable physical condition saved him. Bosworth is turning the laugh on director Willatt. During the fight scene in which Bosworth was to whip a half a dozen men with his bare fists the director ordered his cameraman to set his gears to take the picture slower than projection speed. When the scene was taken Bosworth proved so active and fought so fast that the scene had to be retaken with the gears set at neutral. In making the submarine scenes a regular U. S. boat was used.

MANAGER COBBS of the Northwest Vitagraph system has sent W. Drummond to Portland.

With West Coast Exhibitors

WITH all inbound and outbound railroad movement in Southern California at a standstill, the motion picture industry of that section of the West Coast, with the exception of the production end, found itself at the beginning of the week of August 25, facing a temporary disorganization which made necessary unusual efforts to avert serious business losses, both for distributors and exhibitors.

PROMPT ACTION, however, on the part of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade, made it possible for those exhibitors in Southern California, at least, to keep up with their programme of booking, and an auto delivery service of trucks was pressed into service by the Board of Trade, and daily deliveries were made throughout the territory of releases on schedule.

IN ARIZONA, however, many exhibitors found it necessary to close their houses for the time being, especially those in cities remote from other centers who could not exchange pictures informally among themselves in order to present new subjects to their audiences. Several who found it possible to do so managed to obtain runs for a period by making long distance auto trips across the desert to Los Angeles, returning with their automobiles loaded down with films. Among these were Johan Johansen, proprietor of the Casino theatre of Yuma, Arizona, and P. Muretti of the Liberty theatre of the same place, who made the grilling run without a mishap.

THE STRIKE of railroad switchmen which brought about the tie-up, caused many emergency shifts to be made. The booking schedules were maintained on the whole, satisfactorily. Efforts to ship films by parcel post were only partly successful for the reason that mail trains, even, were included in the railroad tie-up.

ROAD SALESMEN working out of the various Los Angeles exchanges, find themselves with time hanging heavily on their hands. As a result of the railroad tie-up, those working through Southern California are unable to leave the city until the situation clears.

FIELD CARMICHAEL, manager of the Los Angeles Pathe Exchange, has booked the new feature, "Oh, Boy" for two weeks' run at the Garrick theatre, a prominent Los Angeles first-run house, for the period beginning September 17.

L. D. PURDY has severed his connection with the Metro exchange to join the Fox forces, as road man.

INCREASED activity in the purchase of musical instruments is reported by H. F. Charles, manager of the Los Angeles office of the American Photoplayer Co. Instruments were sold to John Young, Hollywood theatre; Fred Green of Miami, Arizona; J. D. Johnson, Jerome, Arizona; Phil Pecharich, Jerome; H. C. Sturgis, and B. D. Loper, Jr., of theatres in Corona and Elsimore.

H. E. LOTZ, district manager of Select exchanges, has arranged for the transfer to the Los Angeles office of W. T. Wall, former salesman with Select forces, at Salt Lake.

SELECT first-run pictures have been booked in their entirety by Division Manager Lotz at the California theatre in Los Angeles. The first to be shown is "Upstairs and Down," the Olive Thomas version of the stage success, the week of September 22, and "The Perfect Lover" will be run the week of October 6. Special exploitation has been arranged by David Swing Ricker of Select forces.

ANNOUNCEMENT that "The Stage Woman's War Relief" series of twelve two-reel subjects in which the most prominent theatrical people in America have taken parts, has been booked by the Kinema theatre, was announced by David Bershon, Los Angeles manager of the Universal Film Company's office. The Plaza theatre, in San Diego, also has signed for the entire series according to Mr. Bershon.

MRS. OLIVE GROGG, wife of the president of the Grogg Amusement Company, broke ground at Bakersfield the week of August 25 for a new theatre, which is expected to open on January 1 with a seating capacity of about 1,200.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA exhibitors in Los Angeles to meet the emergency caused by the railroad strike, and to arrange for coming bookings, include C. Welstead, Garden theatre, La Jolla; S. Pourus, Rex theatre, Bakersfield; James Cooke, Palace theatre, El Centro; George Mauk, Columbia theatre, Phoenix; James Monahan, Liberty theatre. Brawley, and John Busch, son of G. E. Busch of the Broadway Amusement Company, San Diego.

JOE QUINN, salesman, working out of the Los Angeles office, has returned from a trip to the North as assistant to H. J. Roberts, Los Angeles manager, in a special drive to book "The Trail of the Octopus," the Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber serial, throughout Southern California. First release is scheduled for September 7, and a novel advertising stunt is said to have been arranged.

CHARLES GILMORE, formerly of United Theaters Exchange at Denver, is the new manager of the office of the W. W. Hodkinson corporation, in Los Angeles.

Salt Lake and Vicinity

B. W. SIMPSON, who was formerly on the road for Vitagraph pictures, has purchased the Orpheum and Isis theatres in Blackfoot, Idaho. The price paid for the two was $15,000.

LOCAL exchanges have almost universally received instructions from headquarters to the effect that all bookings must be made direct. Mr. Clemmer, president of the Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit, with headquarters in Seattle, and H. Wright, general manager of the company, were in Salt Lake last week and addressed the local film board of trade. They outlined plans concerning the method which they proposed in handling pictures for the number of theatres which they control. Their views did not seem to meet with the approval of the film board of trade.

N. B. GROSSMAN, owner and manager of the Rex and American theatres in Pocatello, was in Salt Lake last week making bookings for the winter season. He secured "Elmo the Mighty" and "The Midnight Man" among other Universal pictures. He has purchased the Montpelier theatre in Montpelier, Idaho, for $15,000. He is planning on spending $5,000 in doubling the seating capacity and enlarging and improving the showhouse.

"THE OUTCASTS OF POKER FLAT," the picture taken from Bret Harte's story, proved a wonderful attraction at the American theatre in Salt Lake during the week commencing August 18. A western picture must be well staged to meet with the approval of westerners. This picture met with much praise.

W. A. CALKINS is the new manager of the First National Exhibitors' exchange. He has just returned from Denver where he met in conference with the exchange officials regarding the coming releases of the Mary Pickford, Chaplin, Stewart, and other coming releases. "The Hoodlum," a Mary Pickford picture, will be shown at the American theatre September 9-10-11-12.

THERE have been more exhibitors in Salt Lake during the past week than during the past year. The coming winter season may explain in part the unusual number of moving picture men who are visiting the local exchanges and pictures houses.

JOE GOSS, manager of the Orpheum theatre in Ogden, Utah, has bought "Paid in Advance." It will be shown the first week in October. Joe Madsen, formerly on the road for Universal exchange, is to manage the Elk's theatre in Rexberg, Idaho, which was recently purchased by the Swanson theatre circuit.

J. T. MORAN, faithful booker at the Universal office, has returned from a two weeks' vacation, spent in Yellowstone Park. L. E. Stallings, who controls the Richfield, Mt. Pleasant, Elsinore and Monroe theatres was in Salt Lake for several days recently and secured several bookings of Universal pictures.

J. H. VON HERBERG, of the Jensen & Von Herberg Company of Seattle and Portland, visited Salt Lake last week while on his way home from New York where he attended a meeting of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

IT IS strongly rumored that the Fox corporation is negotiating toward the purchase of the Swanson theatres in Salt Lake.

THE Paramount-Empress theatre is soon to announce a raise in prices of five cents on all tickets. It is understood that other leading picture houses of the city will increase their prices for the winter season. The Paramount-Empress orchestra has been increased by five pieces.

THE new Rialto theatre is progressing rapidly in construction and will open sometime between November 1 and 15.

They all Book 'Em

EVERY first run theatre but one and every large downtown Portland motion picture house has booked a Paramount-Artcraft release for the week of August 31. C. M. Hill, branch manager for Famous Players-Lasky is jubilant. The one exception is the Star theatre which had already arranged to show "Open Your Eyes," the film supervised by the United States Health bureau, for its second week of continuous run. The state outside of Portland lined up equally well according to Mr. Hill.

In Portland Film Circles

V. M. SCHUBACH, representative of the Universal Film company, returned to Portland Monday from a trip into Eastern Oregon.

C. H. SLACK, of the Marcola theatre, Marcola, Oregon, Ross Nelson of the Isis theatre, Independence, and C. C. Ferguson, of the Baker theatre, Newberg, were visitors in Portland on film row Monday and Tuesday.

TED JOHNSON, manager of the Mutual film exchange, left Portland this week for Amery, Wisconsin, for a visit of several weeks with his parents. Mr. Johnson was in the theatrical business in Boise for several years before coming to Portland, and has represented most of the leading film exchanges in the past few years.

JESS TALBERT, formerly bookkeeper in t Universal film exchange in Portland, returr Monday from two years' service in the na during which he was stationed on ships bo on the Pacific Coast and in the war zone. is a brother of Frank Talbert, formerly with t Star theatre in this city and now travelling au tor for Universal.

C. D. BEALE, formerly with the film cleari house in Seattle, has joined the sales force the Universal office in Portland and came this city this week to take up his work. M Beale was in Salt Lake City and went to Seat with Kleine and afterward with Fox exchan He went with the clearing house the first this year finally leaving that work to come his present position.

Last Week We Met—Dr. W. E. Story

IN a large, well-lighted room on the fifth floor of the Research Laboratory at Schenectady, Dr. Story holds forth, surrounded by a display of instruments of all kinds together with various experimental set-ups. Here it is that many radical improvements in the optical system of the projector are liable to get their start, for let it be said Dr. Story has been assigned by the General Electric Company to the study of projection optics.

All of those who were fortunate enough to be present at the Philadelphia meeting of the S. M. P. E. will remember Dr. Story as the quiet, unassuming gentleman who arose after several optical questions had been fervently discussed and proceeded to analyze many of the troublesome points in a businesslike and clearcut manner. He is the same way when engaged in conversation. I am of the opinion that he would have been a wonder at the art of teaching intricate theories to slow-going sophomores and freshmen, so sure is he of his explanations and analyses.

Dr. Story came from the South. His first meal was in Baltimore in 1883. After the usual more or less grade schooling he entered Harvard and graduated from there with a degree of A.B. Following that he entered Clark University in Worcester, Mass., and emerged with three more letters after his name, those of a Ph.D.

Unlike most of us he bade Old Man Business wait awhile after graduation and instead of going out into the world to show older and wiser men how little they knew he decided to remain at Clark University for awhile as research assistant to Dr. Webster, the world renowned physicist. Those who know of Dr. Webster are acquainted with the fact that he surrounds himself with those only who show aptitude in the line of work he carries on. For this reason Dr. Story must have felt considerable pride in thus being selected to act as an assistant to the head of the Research Department.

Having carried on at Clark for a period of time, Dr. Story left in 1911 and entered the employ of the General Electric Company in their Research Laboratory at Shenectady. Shortly after his arrival there Mr. J. A. Orange, who had been performing the experimental work on projection optics, resigned and went to England. Dr. Story was immediately assigned to the work left vacant by the departure of Mr. Orange.

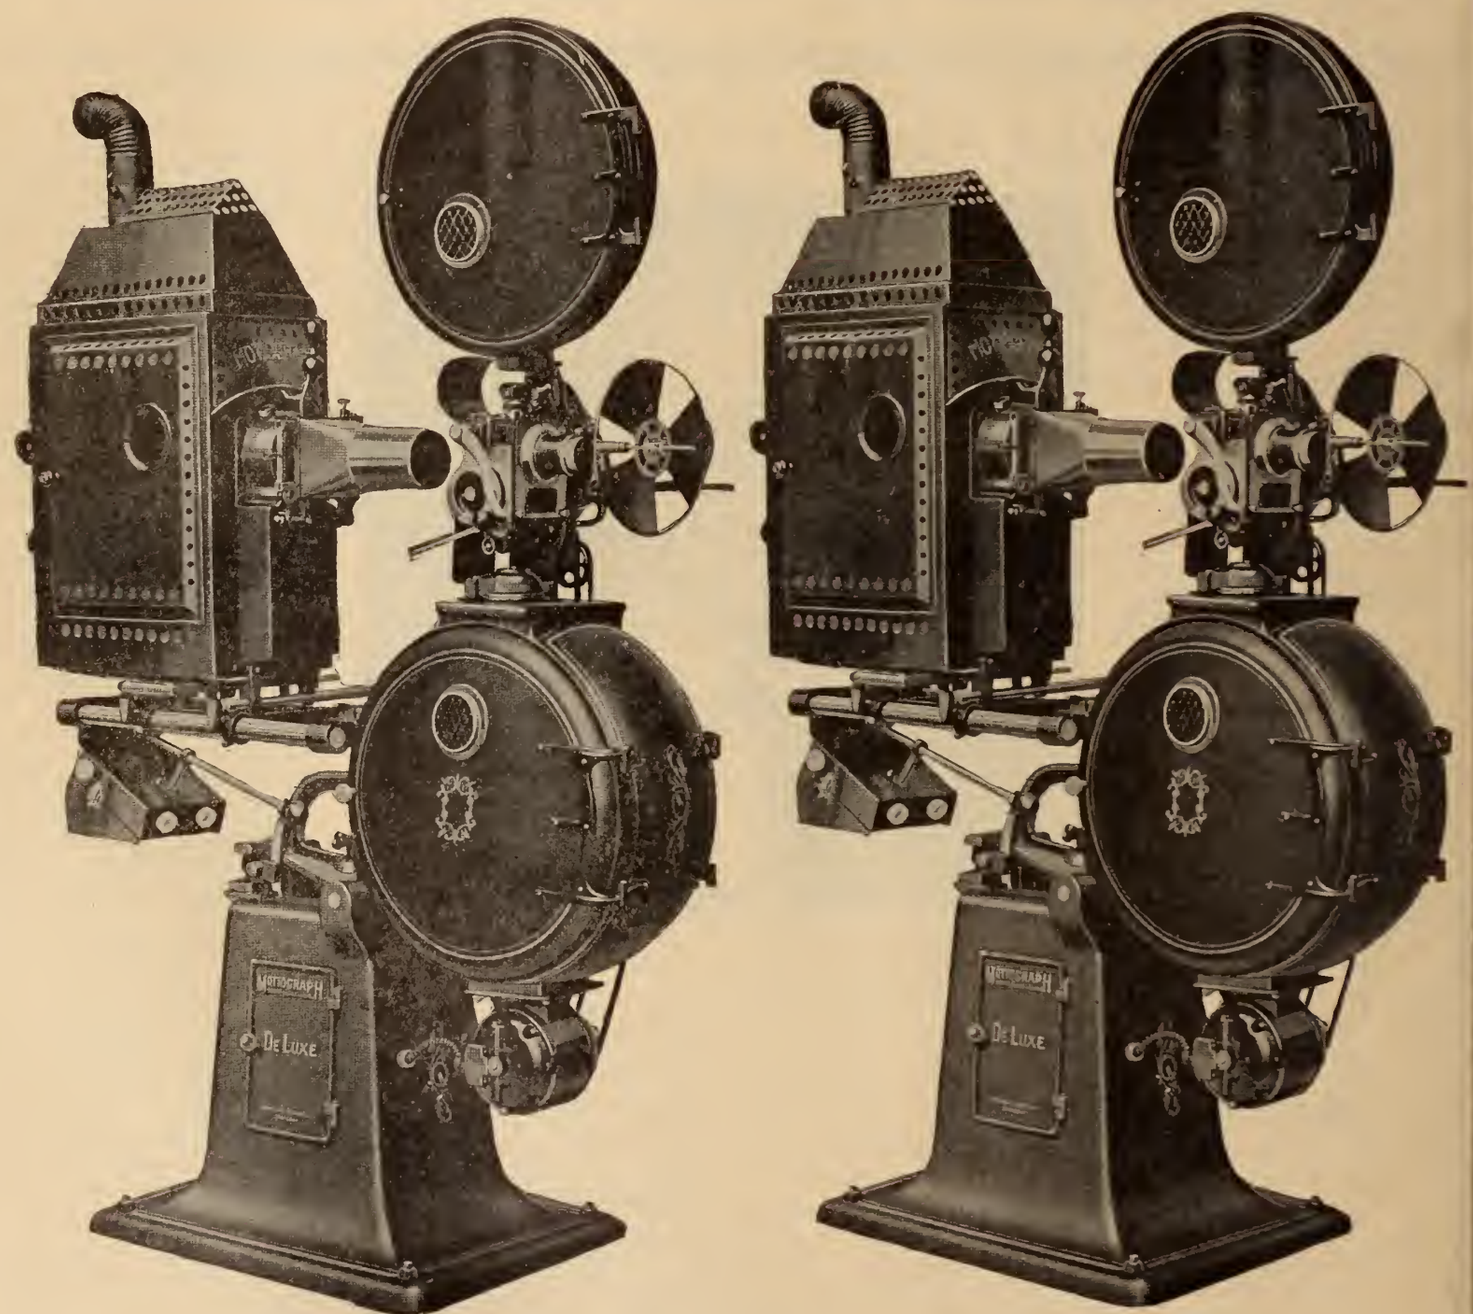
In my talk with him he told of a number of very interesting problems on which he is now working, the results of which will most certainly be of the greatest interest to the motion picture industry. Dr. Story understands thoroughly the practical side of projection and his results will therefore be more than mere theories.

When he isn't chasing little rays and pencils of light through one lens after another, Dr. Story takes advantage of the country around Shenectady and goes camping. Photography is another side line with him and with his knowledge of the behavior of light and the characteristics of lenses it is to be assumed that his photographic results are considerably above the amateur class. But, being well versed in everything except that of "blowing his own horn," it is difficult to get him to talk about himself. However, the projection world is duty bound to hear more of the man before projection is 100 per cent. perfect.

Intimate Items About People You Know

Did you get one of those little engraved cards with the "Open Sesame" to the new Brooklyn Strand on its opening night? Most everybody who is anybody in the world of projection was there. We saw the Porters, both B. F. and Edwin S.—the latter designed and the former installed the two Simplex's in the projection room. Then there was J. E. Robin, who knows the "how" and "why" of good projection. From the Broadway Strand came Frank Hammond and John Richardson, sitting in judgement on the optical results achieved by their former brother projectionist, Lou Hammond, who has been made "chief" at the Brooklyn Strand. And, of course, there were others, many of them, too many to mention here.

After a rather satisfactory stay in New York, H. F. O'Brien, of the Westinghouse Co., has returned to his station on the Coast.



MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE
Are All Alike

All are made in our factory, everyone gets a severe test before shipping.
You can get the same good results as others do.

Harry E. Waleron Bruce, S. Dak., Says—
I use the Motiograph; it's easy on film and your fire hazard is reduced to the minimum—I have had experience with several other makes.

Charles Storch Casino Theatre, Republic, Wash. Says—
I use the Motiograph and it has proven itself to be a wonder, practically no upkeep and easy to operate.

A Cleveland, Ohio, Exhibitor Says—I installed four-projectors three weeks ago. I have had trouble ever since, I made a big mistake, I should have bought Motiographs. We want speed at a steady picture.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

May I Smoke in Projection Rooms?

"A CONSCIENTIOUS projectionist who wishes his name withheld has written to the NEWS for our views on smoking in projection rooms. Somehow we have an idea the rank and file of men are with us in our stand on the subject. What do the rest of you think? Your letters of agreement or disagreement will be published in these columns.

"I am an operator and always get your magazine and several times I have seen in it where you think an operator should not smoke in the booth.

"Now I know of many union operators who do smoke in the booth, but am not saying that makes it safe for one to do so.

"I myself have smoked in the booth, but at the same time my port holes were always fixed so they would inclose the booth in case of fire, leaving no danger to the audience.

"Also I have had a bucket of water to throw my stubs into which would put them out right away.

"In smoking I sat or stood behind the lamphouse away from all films, and if I had a break or was to rewind I always stood over the bucket of water so I could drop the cigarette into it without any delay whatever, if I should happen to have to go to the machine on a second's notice.

"I have seen operators thread up and rewind while smoking, but anyone could see the danger in that, but I would like to have you publish some of the dangers of an operator smoking five feet from any film."

Comment: No man, projectionist or spectator, should smoke in the projection room. It is being done, to be sure, but those who are guilty of the practice should be educated to know better. Altogether too many times when visiting projection rooms, the projectionist is seen to lay the butt of a cigarette or cigar behind the machine or else he quickly drops it on the floor and steps on it with a sort of "Gee, you almost caught me that time" expression on his face. This action is proof enough that he realizes his guilt in smoking while on duty.

Even though a man shows the greatest care when smoking in the room, having at hand such appliances as you have mentioned—fireproof automatic shutters, convenient water buckets, etc.—his behaviour should still be severely criticised. A man's memory is far from perfect. He might keep in mind what he was doing 99 per cent of the time, but when that last 1 per cent comes around and finds him wanting is just when his offense will lead to a catastrophe.

There are any number of suppositions which could be pictured, any one of which might lead to the destruction of your room and possibly terribly injuring yourself. Because there is this possibility of trouble no matter how careful the individual projectionist may be, smoking in any projection room should never be allowed or practiced.

In addition to the above reason there is to be considered the effect of your action on other and younger projectionists who happened to see you smoking. Especially would this apply if you were a man well up in the estimation of your brother projectionists in your vicinity. The apprentice or the projectionist visiting your room from some other small town could easily draw the conclusions from seeing you smoking which later would lead to a conflagration in his smaller and less well protected theatre. Think of that when you light up your next "cig." Remember you have others to consider besides yourself, your room and your theatre.

Just one other point and then the sermon closes. While you are thinking about the answer to your letter and probably disagreeing with the NEWS, give a thought to this possibility: Suppose a man came to your projection room, a man who knew little about pictures, and he should see you smoking. Wouldn't he assume that he as well as you could smoke there, and would he be as careful where he snapped his ashes or laid his butt as you are. And if he laid it or dropped it on an open reel while you were occupied elsewhere, where would he be? Where would you be? And where would the room be?

Turn these suggestions over in your mind and tell us what your decision will be.

Sends Bill for Film Repair to Exchange

EDITOR, PROJECTION DEPARTMENT:

While taking my daily rest at home tonight I picked up an "old" NEWS and after reading Brother "Operator Mitchell's" letter of July 19th issue of the NEWS on more trouble with exchanges, I just had to send you enclosed pieces of film taken from Pathe's "The Mantle of Charity"—just to show you what we get in Texas. Now don't you think we have a right to make a kick?

I have been spending the biggest part of my time getting into the I. A., but now that I am there (I have been since March), I shall proceed, viz.: I quite agree with Brother Mitchell when he says: "The 'operator' (projectionist) should spend his 'pool-room' time in reading over the projectionist hints. I have only been in the projection game seven years, but I keep on learning every week (or rather day).

We are up against a rather bad opposition here, as you will notice by inclosed clipping taken from local papers. Isn't there some way we can stop this? In a short time it will be where we (three of us, all I .A. men) can't have our way at all with the managers—if we say something he does not like then all he will have to do is to go to this "four-year-old teacher" and get him a $10 operator and boost us out (we have no local here). Kindly let me hear something on this matter. Thanks.

I am already a member of the N. A. M. L. and have been for two years. (By the way, I would like to have a few labels, if possible to get them, and kindly look up my number as I lost all my credentials in moving from here last year.) I was working for the Saenger Amusement Company in Shreveport, La., at the time Bro. Smith of Houston, Texas, sent out the request for brother "operators" (projectionists) to join the N. A. M. L. and was sorry I could not join at his request (but I was already there).

I believe Brother Mitchell's statement about every state making it a violation of its laws to send out film that is liable to cause a fire by breaking or defective sprocket holes and sides.

I have sent in a number of complaints to the Southwestern Film Exchange of Dallas, Texas, warning them of bad film shipped to me to run, also saying that if it continued I would send them a bill for inspection and repairs on same, but I have never heard from them—"yes or no," but only last Tuesday I received film from them that could not be run without taking approximately 300 feet out of it, so I sent a great part of the film to them along with a bill for $2.25. Don't you think I was justified in doing so? Or do you? Have never heard from them yet, though.

Well, I am not going to take any more space, but hope you will find some way to get rid of this "College stuff." Would like to hear others' views on this "college student operator" bull by a "four-year-old teacher" (four years an operator).

Sincerely yours for better projection,

F. L. McKIEL.

I. A. T. S. E. Local 222.

P. S.—The college has one old style Powers 6A. Tell me how in h—— is this "four-year-old" going to prepare an operator to handle any equipment by teaching him on a Powers 6A. Puzzled? But of course a new one is born every day.

Operating Has Become a Recognized Profession

Practically every town in the states of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma has a picture show, where the services of a skilled operator is required. There are over fifteen hundred shows in the states mentioned. It would require the entire enrollment of the Blank Commercial College for one year if it prepared nothing but moving picture operators to take care of the number of shows because each of the fifteen hundred shows would require at least two operators. Therefore, you can readily see the opportunities awaiting the persons who can see it and grasp it. With the field as above mentioned offering such a demand, the Blank Commercial College has inaugurated a course in the operating and handling of the moving picture machine as well as the best methods of securing films, keeping the necessary records, in fact everything that pertains not only to the caring for and manipulating of the machine itself, but the entire management of a moving picture show. We have found from experience that it requires from four to six weeks' time to thoroughly qualify a person for this work. We find from investigation that the salaries paid professional moving picture operators are from twenty-five to thirty-five dollars per week. We are giving this course at a cost of $3000, which includes all material necessary for the completion of the course. We have in charge of this department an instructor of four years' experience in picture show business who will thoroughly prepare the student in all branches above outlined. One feature that should appeal to the young man who has been unfortunate by not getting a good literary education is that no literary experience or knowledge is required to take this course, in fact, no literary work is given in connection with it, and one's time will be devoted entirely to the moving picture work.

If you are interested in this work write us and state about when you can enroll.

Comment: Allowing for the possible fact that the man in charge of this course is a "wonder," how many four-year-projectionists who read this department think themselves qualified to take charge of a course in "motion picture operating."

The advertisement needs no comment or criticism. Every reader will form his opinion as he reads it. Theatre managers might hire a "graduate" in a crisis, but it is probable that they would be more than glad to get back their real projectionist as quickly as possible.

As for that bill of $2.25 sent to the exchange, we do feel that you were justified in sending it. We do not know what defects you found that caused you $2.25 of trouble, but it is assumed they were the kind that ought to be eliminated by exchange inspection. It is probable that you will never hear from them. It is a new sensation for the exchange to be charged for inspection and repair by outsiders, and we imagine the surprise will be so great the exchange manager will forget to remit the money.

Bad Travel Ghost

JOHN ROSECRANS of Sioux City, Iowa, writes: We have a De Luxe Model Motiograph which has been in use about four months. We use a Number One Manhattan-Gundalach lens of 5" front and 5" back E. F. combination, with an 8½ inch and a 6½ inch condenser with the 6½ nearest the arc. The condensers are 21 inches from the aperture plate. We project the picture 86 feet and upon a screen 12 x 14 feet and get a good clear picture when the machine is run moderately fast. We use direct current, 110 volts, through a rheostat with about 40 amps. at the arc.

Now when running rather slowly without De Luxe Motiograph (say about 40 per) the picture is not steady but appears to quiver up and down especially the titles and subtitles. When running still slower (say about 35 per) the picture is blurry and small objects seem to jump up and down enough to appear as two objects. But when running from 50 to 90 per the picture is perfectly clear and the titles are steady. The lenses are tight in their tube and the tube fits snugly in the jacket. The set screws in the cam shaft disc, the balance wheel and fly wheel are all tight. The shutter shaft is not sprung. There is no noticeable vibration of the machine. There is no more tension than is positively necessary. The machine rests level on a concrete floor. We are using the Motiograph shutters (aluminum 3 bladed) furnished by the factory but the metal hoop which connected the blades together became bent and was removed. The intermittent sprocket is not undercut and the cam is not too tight against the Geneva Star nor is there any too much play.

There are times when we have to run very slow stretching out a time schedule between vaudeville acts and as the projection is poor when running slow with our Motiograph I would like to learn how to meet the trouble and how to overcome it.

Reply: The above letter was received a good many weeks ago and should have been answered at that time but in some manner it was mislaid and has just come to light. Not having heard from the NEWS perhaps Mr. Rosecrans has solved his troubles from information obtained from another source. That is what we would have done had a letter of ours been apparently ignored as this one was. However, we will apologize here for the delay and answer the letter as if nothing had happened. Next time we hope to have much better luck with Rosecran's letters.

It looks is if his shutter was incorrectly designed. By his own statements Rosecrans has eliminated practically every other possibility of trouble so that the diagnosis points to a bad shutter. Of course there is a chance that when the metal hoop was removed the cut-off blade was displaced in some manner but this seems extremely doubtful. It is more probable that the width of the cut-off blade is slightly narrower than should have been supplied for that installation or that someone has been experimenting with the shutter and have trimmed the blades until travel ghost is appearing when the speed is considerably reduced.

We would advise Rosecrans to make a temporary shutter blade from thick pasteboard, making it wider than is necessary and then gradually cut it down until he reaches the point of minimum width without getting travel ghosts. From what he learns in this experiment he can have a regular shutter made and placed on his machine.

New Luminous Screen

THE Motion Picture Producing Company of America has secured control of the American output of a new motion picture screen made by the Vivilite Products Corporation, which is expected to bring about revolutionary improvements in the projection of films.

The new screen, which is luminous, and is said to contain ultra-violet ray principles in its construction, is reported able to give a three-dimensional perspective to any picture thrown upon it. Another heralded virtue of the screen is its ability to do away with the annoying distortions noticeable by motion picture audiences if they are not sitting approximately in front of the screen. A third property accredited to it is an ability to "absorb" the flicker of the projection machine to such an extent that the flicker is hardly distinguishable.

The screen was perfected in 1914, but its manufacture was held up during the war because of the British government's need of various materials entering into its composition. The production is now being started through the release of the control of these materials.

Write, sketch, or draw directly onto glass as if it were paper. Won't smear, blur or run. Dries at once.

Outfit contains 4 oz. Bottles, different colors, glasses, mats, binders, special pen and penholder.

Wilson Projectionist at Simplex Factory

ALLEN M. THOMAS, electrician at the White House in Washington, D. C., paid a visit to the Simplex factory last week and incidentally got first-hand knowledge regarding some of the remarkable improvements which are in the making at this most interesting plant.

Mr. Thomas, accompanied by his young son and Mrs. Thomas, spent several days in New York City and also had Atlantic City listed upon their itinerary. A visit to the New York Projectionists' Union headquarters was also included in the New York City trip, Mr. Thomas being an active member of the Washington, D. C., local of projectionists.

It is not generally known that President Wilson, his family and guests are entertained through the medium of motion pictures at the White House, but the fact is that an up-to-date Simplex projector forms a part of the White House equipment. This machine is mounted upon a specially designed truck and is usually held in readiness for immediate use in the storeroom.

When pictures are to be shown the truck containing the projector is wheeled onto an elevator and brought directly into the East Room, where convenient switchboard connections are quickly made through the use of pin plugs and cable. It is in the East Room where the Presidential shows are usually given. It might be remarked here that all of the pictures shown the Presidential party on the several voyages aboard the U. S. S. George Washington were also shown on the Simplex.

Mr. Thomas, besides being the electrician and projectionist at the White House, presides over the projection room of the Princess theatre at Washington, D. C., where the quality of his projection is repeatedly remarked.

From Rufus Leighty of Washington, Ind., comes the following letter: Enclosed please find my application to the N. A. M. L. which I know is doing good work. I work at the Theato theatre which is owned by the same company that owns the Grand and which has Ernest Stellings as the man in charge of projection at both houses; he by the way is member No. 1060. I have noticed several N. A. M. L. labels on the film cases and upon finding that my "chief" was a member I decided to "enlist." I get the NEWS from him after he is through reading it and I find it of much interest in all ways—it's hard to beat.

Stage Equipment — Theatres Worth While — Auditorium Lobby

Evolution of Architectural and Other Features of Moving Pictute Theatres

By Edwin H. Flagg

NOWADAYS if the drummer in one of our forty-piece cinema temple orchestras would so much as hit his bass drum when our favorite slap stick comedian did a hard fall—he would be severely criticised.

A couple of years ago they also used to have impossible niches or boxes at each side of the "stage," and in one of these, between pictures, a singer would appear and render a selection accompanied by the stunt organ, which same organ was also, when properly approached, qualified to imitate any of the sounds that would be supposed to emanate from the action on the screen. In the past two or three years all this has changed.

Recently great auditoriums have been built with large commodious stages and every conceivable accommodation for comfort and the witnessing, in addition to the best moving pictures, either the highest type of dramatic and operatic tabloid productions or spectacular scenic exhibitions not surpassed by the regular production theatres.

And they are meeting with such success that the old type of cinema theatre cannot be located anywhere near them and survive the competition. Many such competitors where conditions admit it, remodelled their buildings to meet the modern requirements and they reaped much greater returns than they had ever thought possible.

Leaving out the matter of auditorium and the comfort and operation phases, which are subjects worthy of fuller and detailed mention, the stage and orchestra pit is the really vital element in the success of these nearest to perfection theatres.

While the building of regular theatre stages and pits is along the lines of accepted rules, to be successful, each cinema theatre stage arrangement must be treated by itself—particularly if it is a remodelling job. So many overlapping problems must be worked out—the one possibly the most muleish being the location of different parts of the pipe organ apparatus to get the best results without sacrificing valuable space when other space is available. Another the necessity for precautions to keep rats away from the parts of the organ which are made from goat's skin and of which the rodents can destroy hundreds of dollars' worth in a short time, aside from the loss of the organ till the parts are replaced.

The reason the pretentious moving picture theatre stage is so sensitive and intricate of arrangement compared to the regulation theatre stage, is that with the latter the ever evident proscenium arch was the abrupt dividing line between the audience and the stage. Now what is striven for is to retain the intimacy of the small no-stage picture theatre in a big capacity theatre containing a commodious stage and full symphony orchestra pit.

This has been attained in the new California Theatre which was opened in Los Angeles the first of the year.

While there is in this theatre a proscenium arch, it is, through the ingenuity of the designers so cleverly arranged that, instead of the heretofore abrupt division between stage and auditorium, the spectator in the audience has the feeling of actually being in and a part of the stage portrayals. This feeling of cosiness and intimacy with the entertainment features of orchestra, pictures and productions, is accomplished by many innovations of which this proscenium arch is but a part, and its curtain on raising has the same relation to this theatre, that throwing open a curtain between two parts of a large drawing room would have in a home entertainment.

But instead of its being a silken portiere brushed aside, this is a thick curtain, thirty-six feet high and fifty feet wide, of pure asbestos fiber woven onto steel wires, reinforced with iron pipes, and it is lifted bodily thirty-six feet straight up into a specially provided loft of steel and concrete. It is so evenly counterbalanced that it can be operated by a child. It is suspended by five steel cables operating over ten 14-inch ball-bearing sheaves, and for a case of emergency five additional quarter-inch steel link chains allow it to descend only to the level of the orchestra floor. It slides in two 72-foot slots, each four by eight inches deep made of quarter-inch boiler plate.

Back of this curtain is the setting for the screen and the mechanical and scenic appliances with which the atmospheric, operatic, dramatic and spectacular productions will be staged.

A large orchestra pit is essential, elevated as high as possible just so as not to obstruct the picture, preferably back of the wide proscenium arch.

While this theatre incorporates most of the accepted meritorious innovations, it must be kept in mind, which same applies to all of even the latest theatres, that each of the advisers thereon had their own hobbies, that the size of the lot established; and that some things were started, which are later acknowledged incorrect, that it is impractical to change, but which the same people would not do over again.

The modern stage, semi-elliptical in shape, should be inverted back from one proscenium side to the other, instead of the oppositely converted old style stage apron.

Divide the stage some way, by either columns or drapery, into three parts—the central part a little larger for the picture screen and the right and left sections either for singing, dramatic or scenic effects, or as is now usually done, have it masked at the back entirely around the stage and back of the picture sheet with a cyclorama drop, painted decoratively and transparent for lighting effects.

The picture screen should "fly" straight up out of sight, and the stage should have a loft high enough to make this possible.

This is imperative to the owner, unless it is a very small community, or later someone will properly equip a new house and make worthless the first investment. With an adequate theatre satisfying a community, a newcomer would think twice before he would try to divide the patronage.

The underside of the roof over the stage should be equipped with a rigging loft sufficient to fulfill whatever demands it might be called upon to meet.

A little stock scenery should be installed—bu particularly the arrangement of the stage shoul be such that little atmospheric settings could b supplied practically and economically when desire

A front drop curtain fabricated to represen some heavy simple material with an elusive desig if any, worked upon it.

This is inexpensive, if properly executed, an correct. Three draperies of some other simple ma terial, mysterious of defining if possible, shoul curtain each of the large openings on the stage an they should be equipped to operate either separatel or altogether. The more different ways that the can be instantly draped the more chic the effect.

In laying out this entire stage and furnishing it the keynote of the whole is proper lighting. Al the auditorium and stage lights should be on dim mers.

An expert on stage lighting experienced in th latest effects should be engaged to install and ex plain the system and operation of same. Al though many and changeable colored rays ar necessary, in the latest theatres no colored lamp are now used. Instead, gelatine mediums are ar ranged that not only give better results but a a less first cost for installation and less cost o operation.

Some of the latest and most successful theatre have some of these advantages and lack those th others have. The promoters of the next that ar built will, as far as possible, try to incorporate al the proven points of perfection, but before thei houses are in operation a week, they will se where they can make further improvements. Bu it requires, sometimes, the observation of a year o two to know definitely the merits or demerits of a certain innovation.

However, a careful investigation of all th theatres that are built and constantly watching thei operation, when you know what you want an where to look for it, will give you as far as i possible the most successful theatre.

Staff Additions to Perkins Electric Co.

In keeping with the long established policy o protecting the progressive exhibitor in need of in terior equipment and expert service, The Perkin Electric Company have made additions to thei staff which will help improve the Moving Pictur Industry in Canada to very high standards.

The Perkins Electric Company has secured in th person of Mr. Geo. A. Rogers a man who is known throughout the central western portion of th United States as one of the most practical supply men in that section, having been identified with several of the leading supply concerns, where he gained a wide circle of friends, who have expressed their regrets at his leaving this territory.

The appointment of Mr. Rogers to the position of assistant general sales manager of the Perkins interest will increase the efficiency of their selling organization. Mr. Rogers is about to make a complete tour of Canada in the interests of the organization, afterwards keeping in touch with all parts.

The Perkins Electric Company have also secured the services of another American in the person of Mr. Geo. McArthur, Jr., who has devoted much time to the perfection of screens with leading American manufacturers, and the acme gold Fibre screen developed by the Perkins Electric Company is made under his personal supervision.

Mr. Perkins, general manager, states that the addition of these two American experts will fill a long apparent need.

Hints on Making Motion Pictures

Copyrighted by Its Author and Published Originally in the Bass Camera Co. Catalog

THE accepted standard motion picture film is 35 mm. (1⅜ inches) wide. When exposed the film must contain 16 full pictures to the foot. A standard camera will make 8 pictures per turn. Two turns per second is the normal rate of cranking. The standard frame line for projection is between the perforations. The accuracy and sharpness of the finished picture depends—

First, on the absolute registration of the film as it passes through the film channel in unvarying uniformity and separation between each of the thousands of pictures constituting a reel.

Second, the exact focus. Third, correct exposure. Fourth, a rock steady tripod.

The accurate movements of the film, of course, depend on the camera, but the focusing and exposure depend entirely on the operator. While every lens mount has an engraved distance scale, focus through the reflecting finder every time, unless conditions make this impossible, then and only then use the scale including objects 25 feet away or farther. Focus on the most distant object. The most distant object is known photographically as infinity. Every lens has its infinity point, at which point all objects are sharp, including everything beyond. The greater the opening of the lens, the shallower depth of the picture. This is known as the "Depth of Focus." At F: 3.5 the depth of focus is very shallow, whereas at F: 8 everything from 12 feet and beyond is in focus. At F: 11 everything from 7½ feet is in focus on a 2-inch lens. The use of the small stops is always preferable in motion picture work, as greater depths is secured. However, conditions of light govern the aperture to use. A good rule to follow is to use the smallest aperture consistent with the subject and light conditions. The following scale is of immense value, as it gives nearest distance on every stop at which all points are sharp to infinity. Scale for 2-inch and 3-inch (50 and 75 mm.) lenses, showing the distant and beyond where all objects are sharp for any stops.

DISTANCES ARE GIVEN IN FEET.

Stop	3.5	4.5	5.6	6.3	8	11	16	22	32
50 mm. (2-in.)...	24	19	15	13	12	7½	5.3	3.8	2.7
75 mm. (3-in.)...	54	42	34	30	25	17	12	8.4	5.9

Exposure with motion picture cameras is comparatively easy, the film is fast, rated at 250 H. D., the standard of relative speed value in sensitized products. This fact, in conjunction with the high speed of motion picture lenses, makes it possible to take motion pictures on dark days. The motion picture shutter is adjustable by degrees, as follows:

Deg.	Speed two turns per second.	Deg.	Speed two turns per second.
170	1/34 of a second.	60	1/115 of a second.
140	1/41 of a second.	40	1/192 of a second.
120	1/52 of a second.	30	1/288 of a second.
100	1/64 of a second.	20	1/576 of a second.
90	1/72 of a second.	10	1/1152 of a second.

By noting the degrees of opening, you have a fixed speed. The writer has found that the speed most generally desired is the opening of 120 degrees, giving speed of 1/52 of a second on turning the crank at the rate of two times per second, cranking from the elbow, not from the wrist.

A steady, easy movement is essential. Based on the speed of 1/52 of a second exposure, the following table will prove beneficial for average use:

Dark cloudless days, stop F: 35. Clear cloudless days, stop F: 5.6.

Clear day, sun behind white clouds, stop F: 8.

Bright sunny day, exposure in open, stop F: 11 or 16.

Exposure on the seashore, stop F: 16 or 22.

The above table applies to all light conditions between latitudes 35 and 50. Below 35 degrees the light conditions are generally stronger and require a slightly smaller shutter opening. Above 50 degrees, north latitude, more light is required, or larger shutter opening.

If the camera you have is not fitted with an adjustable shutter, measure carefully the angle of the shutter opening, calculate your exposure by the speed of your shutter.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that uniformity of cranking is necessary. Practice this movement steadily and you will no doubt succeed.

A handy accessory for determining exposure is a Harvey Motion Picture Camera Exposure Meter, which we can supply for $2. Practice makes perfect. An easy method of determining the exact exposure for all conditions is simply to take a test strip with a few turns of the crank for each test, changing the diaphragm opening for every test, also adjusting the shutter. Develop the test strip, and the portion showing the best exposure is the one to use for his light condition. In this manner all light conditions may be thoroughly learned.

I will close this necessarily limited text by reiterating my first statement. Focus carefully, crank uniformly and expose correctly. If these simple rules are followed success is assured. Keep your camera clean and free from dust.

We Have With Us Today—

Lens Apertures

THE system of marking lenses with what are generally called f/values has now become almost universal, and practically all modern instruments have the diaphragm scale so engraved. The only notable exceptions are some American lenses of which the apertures, while conforming to the standard openings, are marked with figures which express not the relation of aperture to focal length, but the relative exposures necessary. These may be recognized by the fact that starting with the largest opening, the number is doubled at each step. There is only one number which is identical and common to both systems and that is 16, which is also f/16 in the more usual notation. We draw attention to this because many Kodak owners who have lenses marked with the full aperture as 4 imagine that it indicates f/4, and consequently give much shorter exposures than they would do if they knew that in this case 4 is only equivalent to f/8, while on the other hand they are likely to over expose and also be disappointed in the depth of field obtained when using the aperture marked 32, which corresponds to f/22. Once this is realized it is perfectly easy to reckon backwards or forwards from number 16 when the f/values are easily found.

In the past there has been a multiplicity of diaphragm systems, while in a few cases it may be found that the apertures are incorrectly marked. We have found lenses bearing a reputable name which, purporting to have a full aperture of f/8, had one no larger than f/10, which would require an exposure of half as much again. On the other hand, we have heard of a photographer wrongly imputing misrepresentation on the part of an optician, because according to his measurements a lens said to have an aperture of f/6 appeared to work at nothing larger than f/7.

It is a matter of some delicacy to ascertain the exact equivalent focal length of a lens, but it is quite easy for the most unscientific operator to obtain a sufficiently near approximation for purposes of exposure.

One way is to focus an object so that it appears exactly its own size upon the focusing screen and to divide the distance between the ground glass surface and original by four, the result being the focal length of the lens used. There is a small percentage of error in the result, but not enough to cause trouble in practical work. A more accurate way is to focus a very distant object to measure the camera extension carefully then to focus an object full size, and again measure the extension. The difference between the two measurements is the focal length. Neither of these methods requires any calculation, unless division by four can be so termed, and either will answer the pur-

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

Our activities for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

pose. Having determined the focal length we must find out what fraction of it is represented by any particular diaphragm opening. Here it is not sufficient to measure the diameter of the opening and to divide this into the focal length except in the case of single lenses, which have the diaphragm fixed in front. With all others the convergence of the rays passing through the front combination has to be taken into account, and in some types of lens this convergence is considerable. We have therefore to send a beam of light through the diaphragm from the back and measure its diameter as it merges from the front lens. This may appear to be rather a difficult task, but it is really quite simple. The first step is to focus a very distant object in the usual way, next to replace the focusing screen by a card or plate of metal in which exactly opposite the centre of the lens and in the same plane as the ground surface of the glass is a pinhole with smooth edges. The camera is now taken into a darkened room and a light held near the pinhole. On the surface of the front lens will be seen a patch of light which represents the effective aperture of any diaphragm which is in position. The beam illuminates the lens front measurements. A convenient way of carrying out this test is to dispense with the ordinary focusing screen and to make a light board of wood or very thick card which will slip into the grooves in place of the dark slide. In the centre of this a hole about an inch in diameter is cut and covering this is a scrap of ground glass slipped under the heads of two or three drawing pins, the ground surface, of course, facing the lens. A pinhole is now made in a small piece of metal—ferrotype plate will do—which will slip into the position previously occupied by the piece of ground glass. This pinhole may be illuminated by a small flame—even a candle answers well. Electric filament lamps are unsuitable, as it is difficult to get the filament opposite the pinhole.

As the emerging beam is parallel we can measure it in any convenient plane, and to do this we need a strip or disc of ground glass at least as wide as the lens hood. On placing this in contact with the hood or front cell of the lens we see a brightly illuminated circle, of which the diameter can be marked in pencil on the ground glass to be measured with a rule at leisure. If the whole series of stops has to be checked it is a good plan to start marking the diameters from one pencil mark, that is to say that when the diameters of f/8 has been marked on the ground glass, the left hand mark should be moved up to one edge of, say, the f/11 opening, so that only one fresh mark is necessary. This obviates all risk of confusion at a later stage.

It need hardly be pointed out that those accustomed to use the metric system will find it advantageous to disregard the makers' designation of the local length and to work throughout in millimetres.—British Journal of Photography.

Pictographs of Studio's Growth

FRANK MEYER, assistant secretary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, conceived the idea of securing pictures showing the growth of the new studio of the company at Long Island City, New York, and J. W. Naulty, general manager of the Eastern studios, has had constructed a wooden tower, fifty feet high, placed on the corner, diagonally opposite the studio plot, overlooking the site and the laboratory building.

In the box at the top is a still camera and a motion picture camera, securely held in place to prevent shifting. The box has been made weatherproof and in the front are two shutters that may be let down when using and pulled back into place when through.

Each day a cameraman takes one still picture and a few feet of motion picture. This is sufficient while the studio is in the present state of construction but later, after the first floor has been laid, the building will go up more rapidly and it will be necessary to take two a day. The object of taking the still picture at the same time is so that, in case anything goes wrong with the motion pictures, a motion picture may be made from the transparent stills. It was first thought that pictures taken from the roof of an apartment building overlooking the plot would be satisfactory but was later considered not practicable.

The photography has been entrusted to J. G. Goodrich who has been connected with the company for a number of years and only recently returned from the other side as a member of the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps, attached to the 89th Division.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

An Organist of Exceptional Ability

SEVERAL days ago on the premises of Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh avenue, New York City, N. Y., we had the pleasure of meeting Miss Estelle Goldsten, organist of The Playhouse, Cedarhurst, L. I., a New York suburb. During the course of the conversation Miss Goldsten lamented about the methods employed by some of the gentlemen who compile the various musical cue sheets issued with the most current film releases. "Too much of the same stuff—too much," was her serious complaint. At first we were under the impression that Miss Goldsten was handing us more talk than goods, but we very soon began to realize that we had before us an organist of experience and knowledge of how to play pictures, and play them right.

The impression which Miss Goldsten left behind prompted us to visit The Playhouse, of Cedarhurst, N. Y., in order to convince ourselves that Miss Goldsten was really converting her preachings into practice, and we must confess that a good organist means as much to a theatre as an entire orchestra. Miss Goldsten mastered every situation at a glance of a moment. She played everything from the popular number to a symphonic Poeme, with continuous and clever interjections of her own synchronizations which were masterful modulations throughout the performance.

Readers of this column may wonder why we wrote the above interesting little story. Here is the moral:

How many organists do continuously play good and appropriate music during an entire performance without resigning to musical doggerel? How many organists are able to maintain a dignified and artistical musical atmosphere throughout the entire show with only a single instrument at their command? Miss Goldsten did it! The fault with most of our organists is that they do not keep up the good work throughout an entire performance. Usually the first two or three reels are excellent, the balance is musically neglected. This is one of the paramount reasons why many organists are failures. We congratulate the management of The Playhouse on their excellent choice of entrusting the musical destinies of their theatre into the able hands of Miss Estelle Goldsten.—MUSIC EDITOR.

The Motion Picture vs. the Motion Picture Musician

EVERY industry had its start, and somebody must be kept responsible for its genesis. Who is the man that created the "Motion Picture Musician"? Who is the man that established the Motion picture musician amongst the most distinguished of his profession.

Motion picture exhibitors are spending millions for music. Thousands of men and women are deriving a comfortable income playing for pictures. Who is the man that created this prosperity. It is no less a man than Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, a giant and originator of motion picture presentation. Only several years ago this man was ridiculed as being a fanatic and hopeless dreamer. I personally will never forget the time when S. L. Rothapfel (known to his friends as Roxie) installed an orchestra of thirty men in the Strand theatre of New York City. It was at that time the universal opinion that his action was the quickest road to financial suicide. We all know the results of this Rothapfel venture. It was a success from every angle—artistic as well as financially.

Mr. S. L. Rothapfel was the first man to try out a new dish on his own palate, to see whether it is poisoned, and as soon as the crowd of exhibitors saw that Roxie didn't die, and wasn't poisoned, they all beagn to eat the pie and found it the best ever. The Rialto followed and the Rivoli was next. Large orchestras became the hobby of all skinny exhibitors, and they all got fat. Hundreds of new theatres were built, large orchestra pits were installed—all exhibitors began to advertise their orchestras. Musical directors of fame sprang up from this hobby. The people liked it immensely, admission prices were raised, and the result: the motion picture house of today. The creation of an industry incalculable in scope—the creation of a means giving comfort to millions—and last, but not least, the opening of the shrine of musical art and education to the great mass of average wealth.

Mr. S. L. Rothapfel has created a new language understood by everybody. The language of the silent drama. He was the first man to attempt to transmit the silent thoughts of the screen and waving flags to the peoples of the world. He has placed the motion picture where it is today.

Millions owe their livelihood to this energetic and aggressive man and I feel proud of having been the first one to openly acknowledge these facts. Who is next?—THE EDITORS.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Mississippi Moonlight," by Lee Roberts. A charming waltz with an absolutely irresistible rhythm. Dance arrangement by Dave Kaplan, obtainable. (G. Schirmer.)

2—"Tell Me," by Callahan & Kortlander. A ballad Fox Trot. (Jememe H. Remick.)

3—"Eyes that Say I Love You," by Fred Fisher. A sensational song hit now sung by all headliners in vaudeville. (McCarthy & Fisher.)

4—"My Cuban Dream," by Frank Warshauer. A number with a new fox trot rhythm. (Richmond Pub.)

5—"Madriola," a Spanish one-step, by Sol P. Levy and Jos. Samuels, The first, Sol P. Levy, is composer of "That Naughty Waltz" and "Hunkatin," and the second, Jos. Samuels, is a world known musical director. The lyrics were written by the famous I. Caeser. In preparation for vocal, instrumental and orchestra. (Belwin Inc.)

6—"Oh! How She Can Dance," Emma Carus's big song hit. (Chas. K. Harris.)

7—"The D. U. R. Blues," an instrumental Jazz fox trot. Predicted to be one of the best dance numbers out this winter. (Chas. A. Arthur, Detroit, Mich.)

8—"When a Feller Needs a Friend." A waltz with music that is wonderful. This number is also to be featured by "Briggs-Paramount Movies," for one whole year. (Jos. W. Stern.)

9—"Poeme Symphonic," by Gaston Borch. A number of exceptional musical merits, and a number which can be appropriately used for a theme. (Belwin, Inc.)

10—"The Boy and the Birds," by Fred W. Hager. A new descriptive novelty number which will make good every time you play it. "The Boy and the Birds" might be called a sequel to that other band number, "The Whistler and His Dog." There is a variety of charming themes running through it, punctuated with sweet bird voices. (Carl Fischer.)

Song Campaign Launched by Famous Players-Lasky

THE nationwide publicity campaign planned by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in connection with the song, "When a Feller Needs a Friend," which was written around the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, was launched this week with the publication of the song by Joseph W. Stern & Co., music publishers, of New York City. In the expectation that "When a Feller Needs a Friend" will prove one of the big ballad hits of years, the Stern company is publishing 300,000 copies as a first edition.

Striking evidence of the popularity of the title, according to reports from the Stern company, is the fact that even before the song was published a number of big orders were received. A big music store in Boston ordered 50,000 copies, another in Denver ordered 10,000, and one of the big chain store systems placed an advance order of 50,000. Several thousand orchestrations already have been distributed throughout the country.

This week also, it is announced, saw the completion of the special 300-foot song-picture, "When a Feller Needs a Friend," which will be given free to exhibitors booking the Briggs Comedies. The picture was made under the direct supervision of Clare A. Briggs, producer of the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, and Joseph W. Stern, Jr., the music publisher and co-author of the song.

The first part of the picture shows the incidents leading up to the publication of the song. This part will run on the screen exactly the length of time required for the theatre pianist or orchestra to play the first verse and chorus over once. Then when the singer starts to sing the first verse the picture illustrates the words of he verse. When the singer comes to the chorus the words of the chorus are flashed on the screen, and remain there during the singing of the refrain. For the second verse some exceptionally beautiful views of an old-fashioned swimming hole are shown. Then, during the singing of the chorus, the words of the refrain are shown again.

Every scene in the picture has been synchronized exactly with the time of the music.

This special picture, it is announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be absolutely free for exhibitors. Prints will be available shortly at all Famous Players-Lasky exchanges.

Vaudevillian Praises Tone of Robert-Morton Organ

Herschel Henlere, vaudevillan, has paid tribute to the qualities of the Robert-Morton Organ in the following letter to the American Photo Player Co.:

"I just left the console of the Robert-Morton Organ and am inspired with the fact that this instrument has wonderful possibilities for vaudeville performance.

"I found that the Robert-Morton was quick to the touch, easy to operate and the wonderful voicing gave an individual tone characteristic of the instruments represented.

"The Robert-Morton is particularly adapted to terpsichore, ballet and instrumental musical acts giving such "turns" the required and an extra added punch. In power and range of musical expression your organ will augment an ordinary eight or ten piece orchestra into a fifty piece symphony.

"Congratulating you on your enterprise in popularizing organ music, and wishing you continued success in vaudeville, beg to remain——"

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

Read What Josiah Pearce & Sons Say About Our Goods

Gentlemen:

Now that you have completed equipment in our new theatres here in New Orleans and Houston, Texas, we want to take this means of expressing to you our appreciation of the manner in which we have done business with you, also as to the character of your goods. You have, without exception, filled our orders just as promptly as we could ever expect and probably quicker than we had anticipated, and the fact of your having supplied us with brass frames and various other equipment in our fifteen theatres is evidence that we are pleased with your goods, for they are the most attractive, durable and practical that we have as yet found.

We wish you good luck in the prosecution of your work.

Yours very truly,
JOSIAH PEARCE & SONS,

YAKIMA THEATRE
At Yakima, Washington, where the Estey Theatre Organ helps to entertain the crowds that come every night.

The New Factor in Success

First-class theatres in all parts of the country are beginning to install the Estey Theatre Pipe Organ because its success has been proved.

We will be glad to tell you some theatre near you that has an Estey Organ, so you can hear it and judge for yourself.

The Estey Theatre Organ

is unquestionably the best music for motion picture theatres. Another big thing is that the public talks about it.

Use it for the music that goes with the pictures. Use it for a music program in addition to pictures, as hundreds of theatres do. No matter what kind of entertainment you give, the Estey Organ will make it better and draw more people. It can be built to fit any theatre.

The price will depend on what kind of an organ you require and can use best. Without cost we will send an expert to look at your theatre.

Things move fast in the theatre business. Write

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Short Subjects, Comedies and Other Features Reviewed on This Page

"He Leads: Others Follow"
(Harold Lloyd Comedy—One Reel—Pathe)

THE masquerade dance is the piece de resistance of Harold Lloyd's newest comedy, "He Leads; Others Follow," and since it is old in the scheme of burlesque it is well taken care of here. Mr. Lloyd is a comedian who is ever branching out. He is not content to stand still and duplicate the methods of others. In fact he is continually adding to his bag of tricks. And his stories are always different. The result is the Lloyd comedies are eagerly awaited.

The newest comedy has been excelled in the past and there is not a great deal of substance to it, nor a great deal of mirth. A masquerade dance is given in a certain home and the high lights are the several colorful costumes worn by the ensemble. Naturally the girls who have been treated kindly by nature, are attired in bathing suits. And some are worthy to be featured entirely on the California beaches. The question arises why Lloyd does not make more bathing girl pictures. Surely the hoydens are attractive enough.

So the guests are all assembled. The star is dressed in a sort of Pierrot costume and Bebe Daniels is bedecked a la ballet. The dance never proceeds very far for there is introduced a regular old-fashioned roughhouse. The parties are hurled through space to the accompaniment of jazz music and it is exaggerated slapstick with the emphasis upon the slap.

"He Leads; Others Follow" is not an exceptionally good filler. Its humorous lights are widely scattered. Exaggeration is all right and proper in comedies but it should be based upon an idea to sound its true comical value.—Laurence Reid.

"Travelogue in Switzerland"
(Mutt and Jeff Comedy Cartoon, Released Sept. 14 at Fox Exchanges—Half Reel)

THIS "travelogue" certainly has a "strong" plot as it is built around a cheese locale in the land of the yodlers.

From an educational standpoint it also registers for we always thought that the chief vocation of the Swiss was preparing rendezvous for fleeing noblemen and making Ingersoll watches.

But we learn here that the chief industry is the manufacturing and quick disposal of Swiss Cheese.

Herein lies the suspense that grips the audience. Every spectator is certain that the film will demonstrate just how the holes are inserted in the luscious provender.

And the picture shows this so cleverly that anybody can see through it.

The mock-seriousness of this "travelogue" places it in a class all its own and it is so funny that it would force the Sphinx to laugh. The reviewer considers this an exceptionally entertaining comedy filler on any bill.—Tom Hamlin.

"In the Heart of the Jungle"
(Paul Rainey Travelogue)

PAUL RAINEY, the explorer and big game hunter, has in his latest pictorial journey, "In the Heart of the Jungle," a subject well calculated to keep the spectators at strict attention. The intrepidity of the cameraman is noticeable upon more than one occasion. He has journeyed into the private domains of the tiger, the antelope and the flamingo and these species have been caught with remarkable photographic success. The scene which presents thousands and thousands (there may be millions) of flamingoes upon a shimmering sheet of water is a treat for the eye. And the thought arises how the camera can approach the lair of the jungle beasts and catch them in interesting closeups.

The subject is educational since it acquaints the spectator with birds and beasts which have been strangers except for an occasional spread in a geography. One can glean from it their habits. In all an interesting number.—Laurence Reid.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of allfeature pictures for last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture,the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed ina brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 25, 1919.

"THE WORLD AND ITS WOMAN"
(GOLDWYN)

Heavy Dramatic Picture, Well Produced

A DRAMA set in Russia before the war and extending into the Bolshevist regime, with the Russian prince and the American singer finally wedded and bound for America. The story affords the star wide latitude in displaying her abilities and talent and has many tense situations and several melodramatic periods. A fight between the star and another woman is an incident that is gripping and will not seem revolting except to the extremely fastidious.

The leading man may seem too effiminate to many. The cast is a large one and very capable. A large army of extras is used as soldiers, peasants and revolutionists. Direction generally is very good and the sets and exteriors are exceptionally good. Photography is clear and continuity easy to follow. All in all, a heavy dramatic picture well produced.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective patronages are: Cosmopolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, strong puller and entirely pleasing; Family, good puller and generally pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Sept. 7.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Geraldine Farrar with Lou Tellegen as her leading man is coming to the ——— theatre beginning ——— for ——— days.

"The World and Its Woman" is the title of her latest Goldwyn production directed by Frank Llyod and with a strong supporting cast. The action takes place in Russia and shows a young American child reading fairy tales as a young boy prince and his father visits her father, an American civil engineer.

The little girl reads to the little boy the finish of one of the fairy stories where the prince and his bride lives happy forever after and she tells him naively that she will marry him when he grows up. But the boy Prince gravely informs her that he cannot marry her as he is a Prince.

Twenty years are supposed to elapse and then the world war is on. In the meantime Geraldine Farrar in the role of the now matured American girl, has had her voice cultivated and has registered a tremendous hit at the opera. During the absence of the Prince at the front, the aristocracy and royalty are overthrown.

She finds that the Prince has been captured and is to be executed. There are massacres and continual excitement. After many thrilling incidents which calls out the great emotional talents of the star, the Prince is rescued by the young American singer and they make their way across to the American lines and find both safety and love in America, and thus the fairy tale turned out true as originally printed.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture your plain duty is to give it some extra exploitation. It is unnecessary to remind you that Geraldine Farrar must be foremost in all your advertising and publicity. For she has a distinct following. The women as a rule like her very much. But don't neglect another angle of the personal pull. Her husband, Lou Tellegen, is the leading man in this picture. And he also has a distinct following. When you link them together in the same picture you will undoubtedly pull in another element also.

If your people like the anti-Bolshevism angle you should use it strongly. If they are tired of that sort of stuff you can exploit it from its dramatic worth as a thrilling story of love and romance. Don't let them get the idea that this is a war subject because it is not. And the star has an active part all the way through. Advise them that she has a far different role than in her previous pictures. If you have a list of the music lovers and society people it would be well to use the invitation announcement by mail.

Geraldine Farrar, operatic diva and film favorite, appearing in "The World and Its Woman," a Goldwyn picture, supported by her husband, Lou Tellegen

PROGRAM READER

When a little American girl read a story from a child's book which she found in Russia she learned that the Prince and his bride had married and lived happy forever after.

And she turned to the real little Prince at her side and frankly informed him that she would marry him when they both grew up.

Then she was rebuffed for the first time in her very young life. The boy refused her on the ground that a Prince could not marry beneath royalty.

But her wish was finally granted and the printed words of the fairy tale became true to life.

Twenty years later the world wide war was on and royalty in Russia had been wiped out. But her Prince was left and the little American girl, now a matured young woman and a noted singer on the operatic stage, was able to save him from the Bolshevists.

And they found love, safety and refuge in America.

Geraldine Farrar is the star in "The World and Its Woman" which comes to this theatre next week.

And Lou Tellegen is her leading man in the Goldwyn production which embraces this thrilling story of love and romance.

CATCH LINES

As a child she vowed she'd marry a Prince and as a woman she did.

Bolshevism gave one woman her wish and she won her Prince.

It took a resolution to make one fairy tale come true but love will always find a way.

A young American beauty in Russia won her Prince in Royalty's downfall.

"THE HOODLUM"
(FIRST NATIONAL)

Many Comedy Situations Will Entertain

WITH dramatic, comedy and melodramatic angles in a modern story with a big city locale, the star runs the chromatic scale of human equation from an ugly-dispositioned society debutante to a sweeter internally, but filthier externally, street urchin.

She has no sympathetic role, as this is destroyed at the start by the display of temper. But she appears later in a character that all her earlier admirers will thoroughly enjoy and her more recently added army of followers will consider unique. It is a well produced picture and bound to entertain any audience anywhere. And the many side touches injected will appeal. Photography, sets, exteriors and laboratory work are above par and there are many good characterizations. But the role so cleverly portrayed by the star has not the sweet appeal of most of her former offerings. The many comedy situations will provide enough amusement to thoroughly entertain all classes of patrons.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for the respective patronages are: Cosmopolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and fairly pleasing; Family, big puller and generally pleasing; Labor, tremendous puller and exceptionally pleasing.—Length, 7 reels.—Released Sept. 1.—Tom Hamlin.

Directed by S. A. Franklin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary Pickford is coming to the ——— theatre beginning ——— for a ——— days' engagement in her latest First National Attraction, "The Hoodlum."

This is announced as a notable successor to "Daddy Longlegs" and has been adapted from Julie M. Lippmann's great story, "Burkses' Amy," and directed by S. A. Franklin.

Living on Riverside Drive as the pet of her grandfather, a power in financial circles, she refuses to tour Europe with him and instead she visits her father in the tenement district on the lower east side. He is a sociologist and rather neglects the proper care of his child as he is too busy writing.

The girl had become petulant and tired of driving expensive racing cars and mixing up with the elite. So when she went to live in the rough environments she gradually became, as her neighbors and playmates were, a street urchin.

It is while here that she discovers a youth who had served time in prison for a crime that he never committed. And she found that her grandfather was the head of a group of financiers that had made this youth the scapegoat.

But during her stay in the slum district the little hoodlum learned to shoot craps and dodge the cops. And one time this former society debutante had to make a quick escape by sliding down a coal chute. And Mary Pickford as the hoodlum does this very gracefully, it is said, although she managed to gather all the coal dust in sight and presents a very disreputable appearance.

Before her wealthy grandfather manages to rescue her from her tenement environments she has established the youth's innocence and received her grandfather's permission to marry the boy.

And her grandfather, now thoroughly chastened, promises to lead a better life in his future financial dealings. This is announced as a wholesome drama just full of pure, rich sentiment and comedy.

CATCH LINES

In these days of reconstruction the hoodlum reconstructs the former society debutante—herself.

A dirty face oftimes covers a multitude of virtues.

Better to have a grimy face with a whole souled character shining through it than to be immaculate and fastidious with a shallow disposition.

The hoodlum regenerates a hardened man of wealth from a seasoned profiteer to a regular fellow.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum."
Don't that sound just like Mary?
"Everybody's Sweetheart" is coming to this theatre next week with a dirty face.

During the run of this First National Attraction she evolutes and almost degenerates again but finishes the cycle on the top revolution.

"The Hoodlum" is declared to be a notable successor to her last screen success, "Daddy Longlegs."

In her latest our little heroine tires of living with her wealthy grandfather among the high brows in upper Manhattan. So she visits her father, a socologist on the lower east side.

And she "loves her neighbors as herself." When her little street urchin pals came forth with a soiled countenance our little hoodlum goes them one better by acquiring a face like an end man in a minstrel show. She slides down a coal chute.

Besides gathering a lot of filth externally the little hoodlum finds that she is gathering a wealth of knowledge about true fellowship. And she uses this inspiration to great advantage when it comes to winning a husband from the tenement district.

Her grandfather is also made to see the error of many of his former financial tactics.

SUGGESTIONS

How useless to tell any exhibitor to concentrate upon the pulling power of the star when he books this picture. This may be accomplished in various effective ways however. The catch lines and other material should embellish every announcement. And her photographs and cuts should be spread wherever possible. But do not use the "Hoodlum" picture or cut alone by itself. It is not inviting except you can plant a "straight" picture or cut of the star alongside in the same layout.

The invitation to the children of an orphans home should result on a free morning matinee and gain your charitable act some newspaper publicity. A "stunt" proposition is to phone all the coal companies and if it is possible to secure the names and addresses of their coal heavers you can issue passes to them for one certain night and publicize this as "Coal Heavers' Night." It is unique and should excite comment when a theatre has the poor coal heavers as guests. A "society night" on another night just as well publicized will link up a great tie-in on the angle that the picture has a broad democratic appeal to all the classes.

Sex Drama Is Good Average Production

A SEX DRAMA in which the hero is rescued by the heroine and afterwards takes advantage of her and she gives birth to the child after she has married another man. The hero returns from a prison term for another's crime and finds that the heroine still loves him. Being a gambler, he proposes to the husband that they roll dice to see who should possess her, and he uses loaded dice so that he could sacrifice himself by losing.

This about describes the theme, plot and story. Those exhibitors that cater to audiences liking this style of picture will find that the direction, continuity and photography are up to standard, and the cast helps to mark this a good average production of its kind.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective patronages are: Metropolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, less than average puller and not generally pleasing; Family, ordinary puller and not generally pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Sept. 7.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Fox offers Gladys Brockwell in "Broken Commandments" at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

This is heralded as a big story with a big star portraying an impulsive girl in a lonely cabin in the California redwoods giving shelter to two escaped convicts. When one convict insults her the youthful one protected her and drove the other out of the house.

After the three days of rain and storm the youth who had been serving time in prison for another's crime, starts for a minister in a nearby town as a great love had developed between the girl and himself. He is recaptured and unable to inform the girl who waits in vain for him.

She afterwards marries a good friend, an author who had courted her since her childhood. But she never told him of the broken commandment during the three days she spent marooned with the youthful convict.

When a child is born her husband is enraptured but she is still mourning the loss of her first and great love. The husband in search for material for his forthcoming novel visits the warden of the prison and meets the youthful convict.

When the heartrending story of the young man is related the author invites him to his house when he is released two days hence.

And one of the greatest and most intense dramatic situations of the story takes place when the young man meets his first love and she meets him with his child.

"Sporting Chance" Austin is the name of the young ex-convict, and he lives up to his name in this instance and makes the great sacrifice to assure the future happiness of the young girl wife of such a good man.

Wiliam Scott plays this leading role opposite Gladys Brockwell and a notable cast is said to be in support.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked you will recognize that its best exploitation angle is the title. "Broken Commandments" is a very elastic title. Note the material in the program reader and catch lines on this page and you will find many lines available for advertising copy for use not only in newspapers but on heralds, long quarter-sheets or throw-aways.

Of course the fact that this is a William Fox production under an established and familiar brand should be worth considerable in the exploitation also. And you naturally will play up the star as she is said to have a good following. But outside these usual advertising features you should simply concentrate on the many angles possible from the title. Lobby displays or special stunts should be tabooed on this picture.

Gladys Brockwell, Fox star, in "Broken Commandments"

PROGRAM READER

How many can repeat the Ten Commandments?

And how many go along day after day and night after night without breaking at least one of the commandments?

Why should a person be more generally condemned for breaking one particular commandment than for breaking any one of the nine others?

And what commandment in particular must a woman never break unless she would court ostracism for the rest of her unnatural life?

Was it intended that it should be any more immoral to break one certain commandment than it is any of the others?

And should not the breaking of this one certain commandment condemn the sinner regardless of sex?

Is it any more immoral for a woman to break this particular commandment than it is for a man to do likewise?

"Broken Commandments," a William Fox production starring Gladys Brockwell will be shown at this theatre next week.

And we command you to come and see it.

And don't break this commandment of ours unless you want to miss a remarkable screen offering.

CATCH LINES

There has been many amendments added to the original Ten Commandments directed particularly at men.

All men seem to believe that one of the original Ten Commandments was meant for women only.

Now that the women have the vote it remains to be seen whether at least one of the Ten Commandments can be made to work both ways.

It seems that a woman can only break nine commandments and get by but a man can break the whole ten apparently with impunity.

"SIX FEET FOUR"
(AMERICAN)

Will Satisfy Lovers of Western Melodrama

A MELODRAMATIC Western with ranches, stage coaches, barrooms, bandits, cowboys, reckless riding, robberies, killings, sheriffs, United States marshals, crap games, hold-ups, one-gun men, two-gun men, and everything that goes to make up a screen portrayal of the West except the actual cattle.

The exhibitor whose patrons want real Westerns can safely count on this being a very good example of the Western melodrama. The hero is likable, the cast is good, and plenty of fast action is provided. The story, continuity and direction is up to standard and the sets and outside locale entirely in keeping. A neat little love element is injected effectively and this will certainly satisfy all lovers of western melodramas.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective patronages are: Cosmopolitan, good puller and generally pleasing; Elite, poor puller and not pleasing; Family, average puller and generally pleasing; Labor, big puller and entirely pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.—Released Sept. 14.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Russell come to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in his latest American attraction, "Six Feet Four."

Jackson Gregory wrote the story which was adapted for the screen by Stephen Fox and directed by Henry King. Vola Vale is Mr. Russell's leading woman in this attraction and Pathe announces that "Six Feet Four" is the strongest Western attraction that William Russell has ever starred in.

As Buck Thornton, otherwise known as "Six Feet Four," he enters the Drytown Hotel five minutes after the place had been held up by a big man with a mask who also took the United States mail bags with him. Russell is suspected because of his height and the similarity of dress.

The charming young girl, who had just returned from the East, rejoices with him when he established an alibi. It was against this girl's uncle, with whom she resided, that the suspicions of a United States Deputy Marshal were directed.

And when the stage coach was again robbed, this officer was able to inform "Six Feet Four" that the girl's uncle was a bandit, and was in league with the scoundrelly sheriff. A reign of terror had been established by the gang assisted by the officers of the law.

It was this same U. S. Marshal who was able to balk the bandits and their sheriff friend when they tried to fasten several of these crimes upon the hero.

There are shootings, fast riding, heart interest, and all the melodrama that go to make up a thrilling Western screen production in "Six Feet Four."

And the hero and heroine come into their own after peace has been restored in this fiery town on the desert border.

CATCH LINES

They had to make the doors higher for "Six Feet Four."

The sky was the limit as a roof for "Six Feet Four."

When a man is "Six Feet Four" he has to defend his station in life.

The women enjoy equal rights but at that one girl had to look up to "Six Feet Four."

Love, thrills, wholesome sentiment, in a western setting.

"Six Feet Four" with William Russell is heralded as the strongest American offering in a long time

PROGRAM READER

Small women would get sore necks trying to look up into his eyes.

For he was an up-standing man and six feet four inches in height.

A small western town on the desert's edge before civilization had entirely conquered is just full of excitement.

And when "Six Feet Four" arrived he took an active part in the festivities.

But all was not festive. There were some robberies, and many shots passed around promiscuously.

Not a very inviting environment for love to enter.

But when a charming young lady, just returned to her uncle from the finishing school down east, notices "Six Feet Four," the love element was just bound to steal in.

William Russell may have a number of very successful screen attractions to his credit but none so thrilling and entertaining as his latest American production, "Six Feet Four."

And it comes to this theatre next week.

SUGGESTIONS

After you book this picture you should prepare as wide an exploitation as your advertising appropriation will stand. And let it be known far and wide that this is a real western picture through and through. No transferring of locals to the east but an out and out truly western picture. Those that like real western pictures, and they number the strength of many a mies, will be glad to see a real western subject produced with fast action, love and thrills.

In this connection you should always keep the name of the star foremost as William Russell has a following and this role is a typical Russell type. Now there are a lot of ways to put over a Western picture. Use the lobby display for all the Westren material you can collect. And place a huge cut-out of William Russell in the center. Simple but undoubtedly effective in attracting.

Material in the program reader and catch lines on this page can also be utilized in both your newspaper advertising and heralds, placards or throw-aways.

"HIS FATHER'S WIFE" (WORLD)

June Elvidge Has Satisfying Offering

"HIS FATHER'S WIFE" may be put down as an average program offering and one which satisfies, even though it does rely heavily upon its sentimental interest for success. The skeleton which supports it is unique enough to give it vitality despite the fact that the action is easily anticipated from the start. Once the novelty of the theme is planted in the spectator's mind there is nothing to interest him further in the development of the story, though he should respond to the sympathetic attitude which is struck off by the star.

Indeed Miss Elvidge's talent always reaches the high-water mark in a role of this character, because of her rich quality of sympathy. The novelty of her part is found in a double romance—a romance which leads her to the altar with an elderly widower, and at his demise escorts her again as the bride of her stepson. A small measure of conflict penetrates the story and gives it a certain amount of substance.

And credit must be given to Director Crane for only at rare intervals has he allowed the action to become arbitrary. A large cast that includes Sam Hardy renders adequate support.—Length, 5 reels. —Released September 8.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

June Elvidge, the charming and talented World star, will be seen in her latest picture "His Father's Wife," at the ——— theatre beginning ———. This is considered one of the most entertaining offerings in which Miss Elvidge has appeared, as it is well balanced throughout in points of humor, pathos, characterization and plot. Under the direction of Frank Crane the feature has been given a fine production, indeed, it is pictorially effective in atmosphere and settings. Among the players who surround the star are Sam Hardy, the well known comedian, Malcon Fassett, W. T. Carleton, Marion Barney, Virginia Valli, William Parke and others. The entire cast contributes greatly to the success of the picture.

Miss Elvidge assumes the role of Patricia Hudson (Patty for short), a girl blessed with a charming personality, but very little of the wherewithal which keeps the wolf away. Her physician advises her to seek a restful occupation and good fortune favors her to the extent that she becomes the secretary to a wealthy widower, James Winthrop. They become increasingly intimate and their fondness for each other is intensified by their mutual interest in the fortunes of young Jim Winthrop, who is an aviator in France. However, the romance is nearly nipped in the bud through the designs of Winthrop's sister, who is bent upon gaining the old gentleman's wealth. And when Patty learns that she is the innocent cause of the family trouble she decides to resign.

The difficulties are smoothed over when she becomes his wife. Winthrop, Jr., arrives home to find his father dead, though the sorrow is somewhat lifted through his charming step-mother. The designing relatives still continue to discredit Patty, but the clouds break eventually and happiness is restored when Jim takes his father's widow as his bride.

SUGGESTIONS

"His Father's Wife" presents no big advertising angle to the exhibitor—that is no big outstanding situation or climax. Perhaps it is just as well a picture such as this comes along once in a while, for it gives you the opportunity to get in some dignified copy—copy whose essential quality is attractive atmosphere. Yet the picture carries a plot which is unique to say the least. Mention that the heroine has a double romance in the same family. Use throwaways or teasers telling briefly that a young girl marries an old man, is made a widow and marries her step-son. This idea is indeed something new under the screen sun. Doesn't it suggest advertising possibilities? Doesn't it present a wonderful opportunity to paint delightful word and sketch pictures?

This is the angle to emphasize in respect to this picture. Aside from that you have June Elvidge, one of the popular stars of the day, supported by Sam Hardy and W. T. Carleton, two well known screen actors. There is no necessity to exploit the feature in a "circus" way. Treat it with dignity. Stills and catchlines framed from the idea are sufficient.

June Elvide, World star, seen in "His Father's Wife"

PROGRAM READER

Something out of the ordinary in picture plots is contained in the new World feature, "His Father's Wife," which comes to the ——— next ——— starring June Elvidge. The offering is a romantic comedy-drama with plenty of pathos and humor adroitly commingled. Lieut. Winthrop returns home to find that during his absence his father has married Patty Hudson, his secretary. Now this is a peculiar dilemma—to be the stepson of a charming woman younger in years. It sort of perplexed James, Jr. But fighting Boches in the air had made him decidedly resourceful and after his father's death he undertook the peaceful pastime of conquering a woman's heart.

And Patty? Well, she has a hard time of it. Gossips are busy attempting to discredit her. Naturally young Winthrop, not appreciating the true state of affairs treats her coolly. How the sunshine breaks through the clouds and scatters sunbeams everywhere is told in a richly dramatic climax. Come and see this picture of unusual complications. You will leave the theatre highly pleased.

CATCH LINES

"STRIPPED FOR A MILLION"
(VICTOR KREMER)

Ancient Vintage and Much Overacting

THE Saturday Evening Post is credited for the story of this, which proves that good fiction is not always good photoplay material. This picture in plot is very ancient stuff. The ingredients for the continuity are the gay young man who is disinherited for squandering his allowance, the sweetheart who returns the engagement ring to accept that of the villain, with hero going to a small town and finding true love when he meets a girl living in an orphanage. They are married, although the prospects of three square meals per are nil, and a few scenes later show up at the lawyer's to hear a provision of the will read, which bequeaths all the money to the orphan who hero has married.

Crane Wilbur is starred and is his usual good-looking self. Anita King is the orphan. This is a picture to book on the star's name alone, as the story is ordinary and it has been overacted.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Stanley Warren ..... Crane Wilbur
Alice Tremont ..... Anita King
Chauncey Holbrook..... J. H. Keller
June Day..... Gladys Bell
Oliver True..... Ralph Connelly
J. Pettingill..... George C. Parker
Judge Peabody..... Mark Krelle
Author, Parker Fischer.
Director, L. De La Parelle.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Crane Wilbur, remembered for his many good pictures in the past, is starred in a new photoplay, "Stripped for a Million," which comes to the ——— for a ——— engagement beginning ———.

"Stripped for a Million" is a comedy drama in which Mr. Wilbur has the role of a young man who is disinherited for squandering his allowance, loses his sweetheart who loved him on the prospect of his having money for her to spend and who in desperation attempts to win back the fortune through the eccentric provision of a clause in the will whereby he is to be stripped of his clothing in a forest and live one month without telling anyone his identity. He fails to do this because he has met a little orphan girl whom he grows to love. They are married, and then it becomes known that there was another provision of the will whereby the orphan is the beneficiary of the codicil in the event that the husband loses the million.

In support of Mr. Wilbur is Anita King, a clever ingenue and ———, who will be remembered for her work in "Lucille Love" and other Universal serials.

The story is largely Mr. Wilbur's and all of the old time fans will welcome him back to the screen after a considerable absence.

SUGGESTIONS

We would bill the star in this picture calling attention to the fact that this is his first picture in some time and also lay stress on the fact that this is from a Saturday Evening Post story.

Describe the offering as a comedy drama where Crane Wilbur is stripped of his clothes out in the forest and compelled to make his own way for a month.

You can tell them that he wears "fig leaves" for clothing all of one night and that the dogs chase him up a tree and that a cow starts eating up his "shirt." This will arouse curiosity as to just how much epidermis is going to be shown which we will assure you is plenty. We haven't seen the stills, but imagine they will show the star on "undress" parade. Don't promise too much concerning the story except to say that it is from the Post.

If Anita King is at all known gives her some of your billing. She does the best work in the picture and is rather appealing. If you ran "Lucille Love" you can no doubt get some business on ——— name, as she had a very good part in the serial and your people will remember her.

There are a lot of little shavers in several scenes of this and they are always good for a certain amount of interest.

Crane Wilbur, author and actor in Victor Kremer's release, "Stripped for a Million"

Don't forget to make the identity of Crane Wilbur clear. You had better refer to him as the "Harry" of the "Perils of Pauline."

PROGRAM READER

He had been reared to spend money, not to earn, and when the provisions of his eccentric Uncle's will forced him to strip himself of his clothes and live for one month by his own efforts with his identity unknown in the hope that the fortune he had been led to expect was to be his, might be regained he looked at the task as hopeless. Yet fate was kind. He lived well, but worked hard and had all but finished his stint when necessity drove him to revealing his name that he might marry a little orphan girl whom he had grown to love, thereby losing the million that had almost been his. Then fate stepped in again and the newlyweds found that another provision of the will bequeathed the fortune to the wife and everyone was happy but the girl who had wanted to marry him when she thought he was to have money.

Crane Wilbur is starred in this new photoplay which is coming to this theater beginning ——— and in his support is dainty, pretty Anita King. The story is in five reels and is a comedy drama which will please.

CATCH LINES

He was stripped of his clothes and forced to earn his own living for a month. How he did it and what was his reward is told in the interesting photoplay, "Stripped for a Million," starring Crane Wilbur.

He wore "fig leaves" for one night, but then luck changed and he won a wife and with her a fortune in "Stripped for a Million."

"THE MISLEADING WIDOW"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Excellent Comedy Marks Billie Burke's Return

PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT disarms criticism in the style of offering which it has selected for Billie Burke's return to the screen after an absence of several months. The sponsors have gauged her personality to a nicety by fitting her unique style with a subject the scheme of which is decidedly novel. The highwater mark is reached in polite comedy in "The Misleading Widow," an adaptation of the humorous war play, "Billeted," since it bubbles with spontaneous mirth. And how the star rises to the occasion and presents her inimitable self in the role of the "widow" who dares to flout the conventions by entertaining two army officers in her home.

A rich germ of an idea it has been, excellently developed, so much so that it appears to sound something new in this style of picture. The entire subject throughout carries in its various sequences as abundant comedy as ever was included in five reels of film.

It sparkles with vitality and scores in every scene and subtitle. Miss Burke has a pair of admirable foils in James L. Crane and Frank Mills. Intelligent co-operation between the star and players and the scenarist and director has made the comedy the excellent thing it is.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Billie Burke, who will be remembered as the star of many interesting pictures a sbort season ago, has returned to the screen and will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— in "The Misleading Widow," an adaptation of F. Tennyson Jesse's successful play entitled "Billeted." Miss Burke's many friends will be glad to know that her return is marked by a picture which is ideally suited to her personality. She plays with a grace and charm and an appreciation of the comedy values of the story that again stamps her as one of the most skilled actresses on the screen. The plot is so arranged that the star is afforded opportunities to display her unbounded sense of humor.

Briefly the story tells of the adventures of Mrs. Betty Taradine, who was married and later deserted by her husband on account of her extravagance, and who lives in a big house in a little New England village. Colonel Preedy, a wounded army officer, is convalescing at the Taradine house. Betty is besieged by creditors, and, short of funds, announces that her husband has died in South Africa, so that she can collect his life insurance. Complications occnr when Captain Rymill, the Colonel's aide and friend, arrives and proves to be none other than the "dead" husband.

Naturally it takes all tbe charm of the inimitable Miss Burke to straigbten things out, assisted by James L. Crane, who makes an attractive and competent leading man. "The Misleading Widow" is a delightful romance.

CATCH LINES

How would you like to be a patient of a beautiful and charming widow—billeted at her home to be waited upon at every occasion? Wouldn't you like it and wouldn't you resolve never to get well? See what happened in "The Misleading Widow," a picture which brings Billie Burke back to the screen.

Yes—he was right under the bed. Shocking! Oh, horrible! Why she should be tarred and feathered and driven from the community! And you can imagine what he said when he came out! Why the very idea! He said that he——

Don't miss "The Misleading Widow"—it is a rare comedy-drama and stars the delectable Billie Burke. She plays the part of a charming widow and shocks the little town. Why the very idea—to entertain two men in her home and unchaperoned too!

She called herself a widow, but little did she know that ber own husband was one of the men she entertained. What do you suppose he said wben he came out of his hiding place under the bed! My word—simply scandalous. A rich comedy—don't miss it.

Charming Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow," a Paramount-Artcraft

Scandal? We'll say so. Two men in the home of a young, unchaperoned widow. And both hiding in the dead of night—one under the bed, the other in a clothespress. Oh, horrors!

PROGRAM READER

Now Betty Taradine was a married woman, but because of her extravagance her husband deserted her. So in order to pay her creditors she announced that he was dead in order to collect on his life insurance. Did she care for scandal and gossip wben she entertained two army officers at her home—she a young, charming widow and unchaperoned? Well, not so you could notice it. But a spinster, Tabitha Liptrott, attempted to entertain the convalescent officers in the village church. And she was horrified to find that two were billeted at Betty's home.

In the dead o' night she visited the widow's home and discovered the two officers—one was found under a bed, the other in a clothespress. Now wasn't it scandalous? Well, what do you suppose the man under the bed said when things were explained to him. Why Betty was his wife! How this resourceful widow straightened out the tangle is told in a series of richly humorous scenes. The picture is "The Misleading Widow"—the star is Billie Burke. She has been absent a long time. You will want to see her next ———

SUGGESTIONS

You might start your exploitation on this feature by announcing that the star, Billie Burke, has returned to the screen after a long absence. This will be sufficient to pack your house if you never advertised the picture at all. Indeed, Miss Burke has always held a conspicuous place in the hearts of the filmgoers. And no wonder. She is unique in her style of acting. She is remarkably pretty and simply exudes personality. Feature the story as a comedy-drama and outline the plot in attractive catchlines and teasers.

"THE VALLEY OF THE GIANTS"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Lumber Camp Drama Not as Big as Title

WALLACE REID'S latest picture may disappoint his followers if they anticipate something extraordinary from the colorful title of Peter B. Kyne's story. Here is one of the most impressive titles that ever adorned a photoplay and to those who are not in the "know" concerning the subject matter, it will attract through its picturesque appeal. True it has the scope of the big outdoors, still primitive nature does not wholly satisfy. One naturally expects a drama of mighty passions, of mighty thoughts between men of brawn and brain, and the unfolding of the story is largely disappointing because of its quite ordinary theme and characterization.

In fact, the picture discloses the traditional episodes which have been part and parcel of works of this character since time immemorial. Yet it carries a punch which is discernable in a number of red-blooded thrills. The elemental action sort of compensates for certain uninteresting references to business matters in the subtitles and which carry no appeal when visualized.

The film is not a big melodrama nor a little one, it only striking a happy medium. Given a less pretentious title and it would hit a higher mark.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Paramount picture, "The Valley of the Giants," will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— with Wallace Reid as the star. This is a picturization of Peter B. Kyne's famous story of the California Redwoods and it is a compelling drama of love and adventure. And to give it life Director James Cruze has framed the picture in appropriate locations. Indeed, the deep forests of giant trees lend a rich atmosphere.

Mr. Reid plays the part of Bryce Cardigan, son of James Cardigan, a pioneer California lumberman who had founded a city and opened up the lumbering industry. Before the death of his wife Cardigan had given to her an enchanting glade in the forest, wbich he named "The Valley of the Giants." On her death and burial in the glade, Cardigan and Byrce vow they will protect with their lives, if necessary, this sacred valley. The young man returns from college and finds his father in financial straits and nearly blind. It is Bryce's object to prevent the sale of the property to Colonel Pennington, a scheming landowner and business rival of Cardigan. But conflict enters here, as the Colonel has a niece, Shirley Sumner, with whom Bryce is deeply in love.

The young man jumps into the fight, determined to do two things: to beat Pennington, and to win the latter's niece. He does hem both, but only after he has risked his life in numberless ways, and after he has exposed Pennington as a crook. So the Valley of the Giants is saved for the Cardigans. There are numerous thrills in the picture, notably one which shows a fierce fistic batle between Bryce and Pennington's foreman; another when the young man saves the lives of Shirley and her uncle. The support is exceptional, Grace Darmond appearing opposite the star. Others include Hart Hoxie, Charles Ogle, Kay Laurell and Noah Beery.

CATCH LINES

A rugged täle of the redwoods—of giants of the forest, of giants among men. A tale which presents the grim clash of the lumber camps where no quarter is asked and no mercy given—that is "The Valley of the Giants," which stars Wallace Reid. See it.

His mother was buried in a beautiful glade in the Valley of the Giants and when he returned home he found that the sacred spot had been desecrated. What happened?

A moment from Wallace Reid's latest Paramount-Artcraft production, "The Valley of the Giants"

See Wallace Reid in "The Valley of the Giants."

See "The Valley of the Giants"—a picture of the lumber camps and the clash of giant woodmen. It throbs with red blood yet it is warm with a romance sweet as any story ever told.

He vowed to protect with his life these giants of the forest—these massive redwoods. But when he returned he found that the hoary giant that guarded his mother's grave had been destroyed. Then it was man against man—to the death.

See a picturization of Peter B. Kyne's celebrated story of the California redwoods—"The Valley of the Giants." A picture of rugged hills and of rugged hearts; a picture of boundless forests; a picture rich with the blood of primitive men.

Wallace Reid, the clever Paramount star, will appear at the ——— theatre next ——— in "The Valley of the Giants," a picture based upon Peter B. Kyne's story of the same name. It is big; it is vital—a picture for redblooded people See it.

PROGRAM READER

Bryce Cardigan returned from college to find that vandal pioneers had desecrated his mother's grave in the Valley of the Giants. They had felled the hoary giant which guarded his mother's resting place. So it was a fight to the death—a fight of man against man and camp against camp. This is the bare outline of "The Valley of the Giants," the new Wallace Reid picture which comes to this theatre next ———. The part of Bryce Cardigan fits the star like a glove. A happy-go-lucky fellow who isn't afraid of a fight.

The story is by Peter B. Kyne, an author skillful in painting the great outdoors. Our patrons are sure to be delighted in this masterful creation—it deals so richly with life in the big tree country.

"THE WOMAN UNDER COVER"
(UNIVERSAL)

A Very Good Drama That Will Register

A MANHATTAN drama with scenes placed in a newspaper office, theatre back stage and a fashionable apartment. The heroine is a sob sister reporter and a pretty love sentiment develops between the girl and the editor. The leading man at a theatre is shot by his wife during a quarrel and the worthless brother of the little reporter is the only witness. And her editor assigns her on the murder mystery. A very good drama that will register.

This is an interesting story and is interpreted by a capable, well balanced cast. Although the audience knows who fired the fatal shot in the first reel, the suspense is still sustained, as there is plenty of action throughout. The sets are unique and quite appropriate and the direction is up to present day standards.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective patronages are: Cosmopolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, average puller and generally pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing; Labor, strong puller and exceptionally pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.—Released Sept. 15.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Alma Jordan.....Fritzi Brunette
"Mac".....George McDaniels
Billy Jordan.....Harry Springler
Yvonne Leclaire.....Fontaine LaRue

Story by Sada Cowan.
Scenario by Harry Thew.
Directed by George Seigmann.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Woman Under Cover" is scheduled to start a ——— days' engagement at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

This Universal attraction features Fritzi Brunette with a strong supporting cast and the action takes place in a New York newspaper office, a Broadway theatre, and a fashionable apartment on Riverside Drive.

During a quarrel between a leading man and his wife in the dressing-room of the theatre he is shot and the only witness who saw the wife shoot her husband was a chorus man who loved the woman and kept quiet.

It is later when he attempts to force his attentions upon the woman that he finally threatens her with exposure unless she will marry him. The chorus man is the worthless brother of a sob sister reporter on a daily paper and she is assigned to get a big feature story on the shooting and also try and run down the real criminal.

And the city editor of this same newspaper helps her in every way possible not only because it will mean much for the newspaper, but that he loves the little reporter.

In the meantime the woman under cover has a very ardent suitor, a wealthy man who desires to wed her. Right here is where all the big complications begin to stream in. When she refuses the chorus man to accept the wealthy man the youth goes to the same newspaper where his sister is attached and tells the editor that the murdered man's wife did the shooting.

When the little sob sister is sent out to secure the confession exclusive for her newspaper she quickly learns in the rapid series of fast moving events that her brother was the witness to the affair and was now trying to repudiate his confession to the editor.

The final denouement comes after a series of anti-climaxes and the newspaper gets its exclusive story, the woman is taken away and the editor wins his little sob sister reporter and transfers her from his editorial staff to happy home environments.

PROGRAM READER

Pity the editor who is in love with his "sob-sister" reporter.

If he assigns her to big stories and she makes good he feels sure that the domestic appeal will grow less in her eyes.

And at the same time he loves her so much that he just wants to help her in every way to make good for the newspaper which holds a place in his heart only second to her.

Editors generally are supposed to be very wise men.

But can they be wise and also be in love?

A shot rings out in the dressing-room of the leading man on the stage of a prominent New York theatre.

And the editor assigns his girl to the story. Her own brother is a worthless youth and happens to be a chorus man in the same theatrical company in which the tragedy occurs.

This is the plot of a tremendous story screened by Universal with Fritzi Brunette featured and supported by an exceptional cast of notable players.

"The Woman Under Cover" comes to this theatre next week.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture and announce that "The Woman Under Cover" is a Universal Special Attraction featuring Fritzi Brunette, your best bet is to concentrate on at least two of the spots where the principal action takes place. A New York newspaper editorial offices and composing room and back stage in a leading Broadway theatre.

There is something enchanting for most people in these two locations and they should be brought forward in all your advertising and publicity, as they have a strong appeal and consequently will pull big at the box office.

CATCH LINES

The editor demonstrates to his little "sob-sister" reporter the power of the press.

Love will have its way even on a newspaper staff—but the story comes first.

A shot back stage does for the leading man. And the little reporter covering the story runs across a tragedy in her own life.

A dramatic combination is realized by a tragedy that links the theatre and newspaper, and finally culminates in a great love.

One little newspaper girl uncovers "The Woman Under Cover."

"VALLEY OF THE GIANTS"

A beautiful romance is woven into the story, and it is considered to be one of the best in which Mr. Reid has ever appeared. James Cruze directed and a powerful cast portray the various supporting roles. Grace Darmond appears opposite the star.

SUGGESTIONS

In the exploitation of this feature you can surely bank on the author's name and the drawing power of the star. Invitations can be sent out informing your public that it is a tale of the California redwoods. Tell that it is crowded with action and color and all that goes to make up a vivid tale. Post cards would be a good angle to feature. As for the story impress upon your patrons its BIGNESS. It has a big title—a big star, a big author, and it is laid in a big country. And it fulfills the expectations because it lives up to its title.

Mention that the story first appeared in the Red Book Magazine and then it appeared as a novel. Launch your advertising campaign around these facts. Treat the picture in a big way—not only in your word arguments but as regards space and photographic display. Have your artist draw in vivid colors a painting of a California redwood and use it in a frame for your lobby. If you go in for lobby display you can dress it in bark to bring out the atmosphere. And you can use your stage as appropriately. Mention the cast.

"THE GRIM GAME"
(PRAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Series of Rapid Thrills Will Entertain

HERE is a modern melodrama filled with thrills and built around a unique plot, with a strong mystery element to provide the essential suspense. The love and romance thread is slight, but this picture doesn't need it. Big city scenes around newspaper office, asylum and jail, with some country exteriors, is where the fast action is placed.

Houdini makes marvelous escapes from strait-jackets, handcuffs, shackles, cistern, bear traps, etc., and climbs the side of buildings in daring fashion in making his many escapes from the officers. He is accused of his uncle's murder and must be free to find the person actually guilty. Well directed and a capable cast.

The big climax is the changing from one airplane to another and the crash of the machine to the ground. It is a series of rapid thrills that will entertain.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective patronages are: Cosmopolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and generally pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing; Labor, tremendous puller and exceptionally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Sept. 14.—Tom Hamlin.

Police Reporter.....Ed Martin

Story by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Gray.
Directed by Irvin Willat.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Houdini, famed the world over as the great escape artist, will be seen in his Paramount Artcraft screen feature, "The Grim Game," at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

This is his first big screen feature and is complete in itself from a story by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Gray. It is described as a mystery story and the melodramatic effects show Houdini in many thrilling escapes, once from a strait-jacket, hanging head downward outside a high building, another time from a locked jail cell where he has been handcuffed and shackled, and once from a cistern filled with water.

The star appears as a reporter on a daily newspaper. He does not believe in convicting anybody on circumstantial evidence and outlines a plan whereby the newspaper can make this method of the law unpopular.

He proposes to three of his associates that his wealthy uncle be induced to take a vacation in an isolated place while the reporter establishes several clues calculated to have himself accused of his uncle's murder. The plan is successful and the young reporter is placed in jail. And then his uncle's body is found in a cistern near the house.

There has been treachery somewhere, but the young man has to escape to run down the real murderer. Otherwise the self-made evidence is so conclusive against him that he will surely be sent to the electric chair.

The big climax comes when he is chasing the arch conspirator in an airplane. The villain is abducting beautiful Mary Cameron in his airplane and the hero is determined to catch him. In passing from his own airplane to the other in mid-air the machine drops with its three occupants in a terrible crash to the earth.

This production is heralded as one of the most thrilling screen melodramas of the year.

PROGRAM READER

The big airplane smashes into the earth after a thrilling drop from the skies.

And you actually see this thrilling incident in motion pictures.

This is only one of the many thrills provided in a Paramount Artcraft Special coming to this theatre next week.

Houdini is the star. And everybody knows that the world famous escape king can supply the necessary thrills if given the scope.

"The Grim Game" is the title of this picture and it is the first complete feature Houdini has ever produced for the screen.

It is a startling mystery story by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Gray, and the love element is also there. A plot that you will follow with keen interest to the finish in the sixth reel.

He is in jail accused of the murder of his uncle. And he must escape to find the real murderer and prove his own innocence. One incident shows him hanging head downward from a high building and escaping from a strait-jacket.

Yes, there are thrills enough in "The Grim Game" to last a lifetime.

SUGGESTIONS

Houdini is the name to feature most prominently when you book this picture. And, of course, the natural lobby display will be all that you can secure from police headquarters or the town constable in the way of handcuffs, shackles, etc. Some exhibitors may try and secure or build a small cell for lobby use. Padlocks will help embellish the display. The brand is a well advertised name, so you should emphasize that this is a Paramount Artcraft Special in all your advertising and publicity. Bring the airplane fall incident forward in all your announcements.

And don't forget to mention prominently that this is complete in six reels, as many persons may gain an impression that it is a serial and that they will not be able to see a complete feature if they attend. This, of course, in view of his recent well-advertised serial. If a star is known as a serial star it is hard to get them to believe that a complete feature will be shown unless you emphasize this strongly in all your exploitation.

CATCH LINES

Handcuffs and shackles have no terrors for Houdini in "The Grim Game."

Devilish ingenuity is rendered impotent by an escaping daredevil.

A strait-jacket could not hold him when love called.

A plunge from the skies to the earth in a falling airplane was a mere incident to one man.

And love laughs at locksmiths.

You can play it up humorously and attract the crowd. Send out circular letters telling that Billie Burke has returned to your theatre after a long absence. Mention that the picture is an adaptation of the successful play "Billeted," in which Margaret Anglin starred. But don't neglect the star. She is your strongest drawing card. Use newspaper space telling of her stage career, her home, and her baby Patricia, one of the most photographed babies in America. And use stills liberally. The star takes a wonderful photograph. Bring out that she returns in an ideal vehicle. Exploit it to the limit and you will reap a rich harvest.

Harold Lloyd, Pathe comedy star, whose recently sustained injuries will not prevent him from further screen work

Longer Lloyd Comedies to Come

Accident to Comedian Will Not Interfere with Releases

UNHINDERED by the accident which recently befell Harold Lloyd, and which will keep him inactive for a short time, Pathe is going through with plans made during the visit of Charles Pathe to America, to present the Rolin comedian in a series of special two-reel comedies. Beginning on November 2nd, the initial multiple Lloyd feature will be issued and one a month will be released thereafter. Lloyd worked on these comedies for more than two months before the accident in the Rolin studio, and in the Pathe announcement this week is contained the information that he was far enough ahead of schedule to permit of the listing of the new offerings beyond the first of the year.

Definite information has come from California, that the accident to Lloyd will in no manner impair his ability as a comedian. His injuries are much less serious than were at first expected.

The Lloyd comedies in two reels will it is claimed be masters of the comic art, under the Rolin production plans. Nothing will be spared to establish the specials in the highest estimation of exhibitors and public alike. Lloyd will be surrounded by the most competent staff of comedians it is possible for Director General Hal. E. Roach to engage. In his company will be a bevy of beauties which will make the blase beach-"bugs" of Long Beach, Cal., sit up and take notice. Mr. Roach, who has as large a part in the success of the Lloyd comedies, will continue to direct the two-reel subjects. He knows the cinema art from the inside out, and his master handling of the Lloyd offerings has established him among the foremost comedy directors in motion pictures.

In the new two-reelers, the Rolin Film Company will endeavor to uphold the same reputation for wholesomeness in comedy "business" that has marked its one-reel releases. The Lloyd comedies will continue to be models of the new comedy spirit, clean and wholesome, and while broad in their farcical treatment, will still be clever in their satire upon men and things.

In announcing the two reel comedies, Pathe indicates that exhibitors can only contract for six of the features at a time. No yearly contracts will be accepted.

Pretentious plans have been laid by Pathe for the launching of the initial two-reel subject. The entire Pathe organization is enthusiastic over the prospects for the Lloyd productions under the new plan. In a statement accompanying the announcement, Mr. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, said: "We have been literally compelled to feature Lloyd in two-reel comedies. The demand upon us by the exhibitors on this score has been most insistent. We have always regarded Lloyd as the best comedian of his style on the screen but we have been overwhelmed by the praises that have been bestowed upon his efforts.

"In declining to feature the comedian in two-reel subjects, we were moved by the knowledge that his artistry is sufficient to warrant such action."

More Booking Made as Picture Ages

From an inspection of its booking records, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation makes a most unusual discovery with regard to Leah Baird, in Augustus Thomas' screen version of his stage hit, "As A Man Thinks." This discovery controverts the established performances of the majority of motion pictures. "As A Man Thinks" was first released in May, and had its premiere presentation in Harry Crandall's chain of Washington theatres. Pictures customarily are booked in heaviest ratio at the time of or soon after initial release date and after a certain period of freshness taper downward in business.

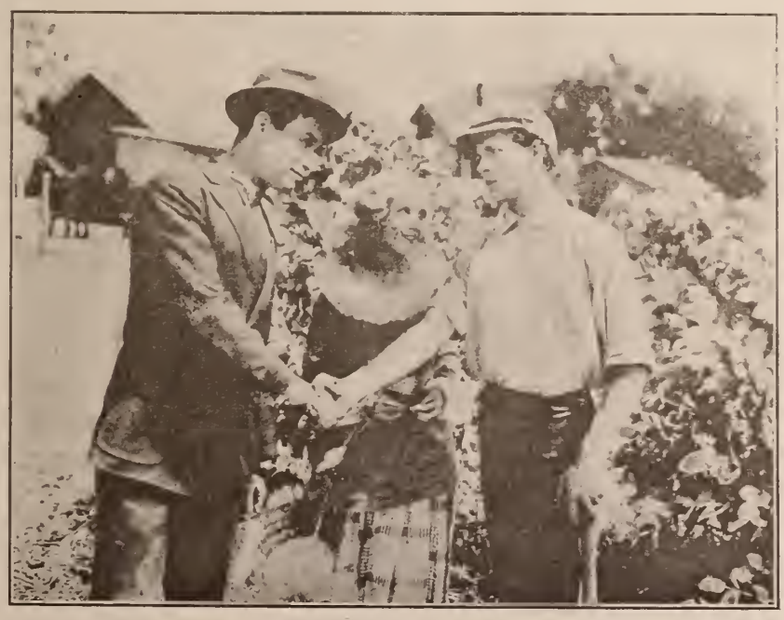
This Hodkinson discovery with regard to "As A Man Thinks," is that each week of the eighteen weeks since the release of this production has been larger in volume of contracts approved and larger in collections for contracts played and paid for than the preceding week.

Kerrigan to Announce Production Series

J. Warren Kerrigan planned wisely last spring when he organized his own company and linked himself up first with the author-market conditions that he saw developing, and secondly, with Robert Brunton's standards of production. Having completed two productions, "A White Man's Chance," from the Johnston McCulley-Munsey Magazine success, and "The Joyous Liar," he will be ready in a week or so to announce the titles of all of his productions for the remainder of the season 1919-1920. It will then be found that he has rounded up for his personal vehicles stories by some of the big names in American literature.

Owen Moore to Be Seen in "Piccadilly Jim"

Myron Selznick announces that he has purchased "Piccadilly Jim," by P. G. Wodehouse, to serve as Owen Moore's first Selznick production. "Piccadilly Jim" ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post, where it met with country-wide acclaim. It was then printed in book form. Now it is being turned into a stage play as well as a screen play.



The Mystery of "13" Is Completed

Burston Announces the Last Shots Have Been Made

LOUIS BURSTON, president of Burston Film Inc., who has been supervising the production of his latest Francis Ford Serial, The Mystery of "13," sends word from the Coast that the last foot of negative has been developed; worry over retakes is a thing of the past, and the company at the Holleywood Ford Studios for the past five months are congratulating each other upon the successful outcome as shown by the first screening of the production.

Francis Ford not only played the principal role and directed the action but furnished most of the material for the story as well. For more than a year the versatile director-star has been looking for an opportunity to introduce submarine scenes in a serial and long before his opportunity came in The Mystery of "13" he had invented and perfected an 'Under Water' camera, which was given its first tryout in one of the early episodes of the present picture.

The results were so satisfactory that more submarine matter has been written into the script and the largest tank ever built for use in a motion picture was constructed at the Ford Studios in Holleywood to take such subsidiary scenes as did not require a larger water location. The main under-water views were taken at Catalina Island, where Mr. Ford has a summer home and where his big motor boat, "Delirium II" was used to transport the members of the cast back and forth from the mainland.

"Funny Bill Rogers," who jumped into picture fan fame in "Laughing Bill Hyde," who will appear soon in a Goldwyn picture, "Almost a Husband"

Western reviewers who witnessed the preliminary showing say: The Mystery of "13" should prove of absorbing interest because of the suspense and continued narrative of adventure is maintained without the labored efforts of meaningless or "trick stunts" which are too frequently the weak spot in an episodic production. In this it is stated, Messrs. Burston and Ford have succeeded in telling and acting a dramatic story of wide appeal.

Another feature is the constant hammering away at the central idea of "13" in such a way that the audience becomes more deeply impressed with its mystery from episode to episode. Advantage of this fact has been taken in the preparation of the advertising matter, the "13" being featured in every possible way that can help the exhibitor in exploiting the serial.

Ready prepared advertising matter lobby displays, publicity stories, stock and episode paper, all accentuates "13" to the fullest degree. The cast is a notable one, besides Francis Ford and Rosemary Theby, includes, Nigel de Brullier, Dolly Dare, Mark Fenton, Phil Ford, who is the juvenile lead, and Elsie Van Name, to whom is also given credit for the screen adaptation of Director Ford's story.

A preliminary showing for the purpose of the New York review is anticipated at an early date.

Motion Paintings in Oil in Metros

Motion paintings, an invention that promises to in a measure revolutionize illustrative and visionary effects on the screen, have been introduced into the Screen Classics, Inc., picturization of the successful farce "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana. This invention was accomplished by D. Anthony Tauszky, well known portrait painter on the Screen Classics, Inc., art staff at its million-dollar studios in Hollywood.

Ever since he joined the Screen Classics, Inc., staff, Mr. Tauszky, who has painted the portraits of many American and European notables, has been experimenting with this device.

Mr. Tauszky also has made a series of paintings in oil for the art titles of "Please Get Married." His work in this line for several previous Metro Screen Classics and Nazimova productions has won for him a large measure of praise from critical observers of motion picture art.

Rogers' Book to Aid His Photoplay

Exhibitors showing the coming Will Rogers' photoplay comedy, "Almost a Husband," will profit by a far-reaching exploitation tie-up campaign. Goldwyn Pictures Corp., which will release the Rogers production through its twenty-two exchanges, along with its other fall series pictures scheduled for distribution in September, has arranged for the advertising co-operation of Harper Bros., publishers of Will Rogers' book entitled "Rogerisms," a collection of the comedian's witty sayings which already has had a large sale.

According to the agreement recently made, and which already has been prepared for operation, every book store of any importance in the country will contribute to the success of the exhibitor showing "Almost a Husband."

Ruby de Remer Signed for American Picture

Walter Niebuhr has signed up Miss Ruby De Remer to play the leading role opposite E. K. Lincoln in the forthcoming Lincoln production. Miss De Remer, who only two years ago was one of the leading beauties of the Ziegfeld Follies, has rapidly become a favorite of filmdom.

The vehicle chosen for Mr. Lincoln is "The Crucible," the English drama, for the motion picture rights of which the American Cinema Corporation paid an unusually high price.

R. William Neill has been selected to direct this picture and is now engaged in completing his cast.

Will Direct Williams

W. S. Smith, manager of the Vitagraph West Coast studio, announces the promotion of Chester Bennett to the rank of director.

Mr. Bennett, who has been acting as assistant to James Young and Theodore Marsden in the production of all the Earle Williams pictures made at the western plant, will now assume full charge of the direction of Mr. Williams in the making of the next feature which will be started this week.

Exploitation for Hypnotist

Mechanical Display Planned for Serial Which Will Star Pauline, Vaudevillian

If Sidney Reynolds does not develop some new angles in the exploitation field it will not be because he has neglected to pursue with zeal his announced determination to do so.

Mr. Reynolds announces that he has been devoting considerable time to the subject of developing a mechanical window advertising display for his 15 episode serial now being made with J. Robert Pauline, the former hypnotist and vaudeville headliner, as his star, and that this display will involve the most unique possibilities. He has been in consultation with a manufacturer of window displays which are operated by electric motors and has determined on a tentative design for this purpose. It is the intention of Mr. Reynolds, according to his statement, to develop a number of these for use in some of the largest cities of the country. These displays are to be constructed for easy packing and transportation.

The display will endeavor to picturize in unique fashion a moment from a dramatic scene in the serial. A life-size figure of J. Robert Pauline will be shown and a portrait of Director Will S. Davis as well as the figure of the camera man turning the crank of the motion picture camera. The drop in the back of the window is to be done in animated colors picturizing the locale of the scene. In connection with this device publicity cards will go into the window explaining that J. Robert Pauline is the star in the Supreme Pictures, Inc., serial. A list of the various theatres at which the production is to be shown will be lettered on a large sign.

For the other cities in which it is planned to use this device an effort is to be made to link up the established popularity on the vaudeville stage enjoyed by Mr. Pauline with his appearance in the serial now in the making. This will be done by recalling to theatregoers that J. Robert Pauline has played at (whatever local theatre by name) in that city.

General Policies of Capital

Enormous New York House to Be Devoted to Films, Music and Novelties

ANNOUNCEMENT made yesterday by Managing Director E. J. Bowes, of The Capitol, concerning the general policies of that huge new playhouse is calculated to set at rest the avalanche of rumors concerning the future activities of "the largest theatre in the world" in contributing to the entertainment of New York's show hungry millions. The Capitol is described by its manager as being devoted to "the presentation of motion pictures, music and novelties"—a very wide latitude in view of the fact that the house possesses one of the largest stages in America, equipped to handle almost any kind of a production.

The announcement sets forth that the fundamental feature of the entertainment will be the motion picture, eliminating all probability that the monumental pile at Broadway and 51st Street, with the unlimited financial resources of its owners, will figure in any way in the present struggle between the producers and actors, or blossom forth as a spectacular producing center as has been widely rumored and generally believed.

No date has been set for the premier, but the builders are straining every nerve and working on high speed to get open to take advantage of the present dearth of amusements. The capacity of The Capitol is given as 5,300 persons, making it the largest institution in the world devoted to this form of amusement under roof.

While nothing specific has been disclosed concerning the character of the incidental side of the program, intimation is made that unique and ambitious presentations will be made. The physical possibilities of the stage and the financial potentialities of the tremendous seating capacity of the house combine to make almost anything devised by the genius of the stage producer commercially possible, so the eyes of the amusement world will continue to be centered on Broadway and 51st Street until every detail of its plan of operation has been disclosed and analyzed.

More Dramas for Vita Player

Gladys Leslie's Success in Jumping from Lighter Roles to Be Followed Up

THE success of Gladys Leslie in "The Girl Woman," her first dramatic role, has been so marked that inquiries are constantly reaching Vitagraph's general offices asking if the star is to continue in the more serious roles. Miss Leslie always had been identified with the lighter comedies and her work in the emotional role of Belinda, the young girl who had been kept a child but who developed into a woman in a single day, was a revelation to the exhibitors and fans who had followed her screen career.

While Miss Leslie has by no means abandoned the lighter roles her two pictures following "The Girl Woman" are equally dramatic. The first, "The Gray Towers Mystery," is nearing its release, and the second, "The Golden Shower," is now being made.

In "The Gray Towers Mystery," written by Seward W. Hopkins and directed by John W. Noble, Miss Leslie has an excellent opportunity to demonstrate that in selecting her for the emotional role of Jewell Wheeler, a young woman who has just come into a fortune only to be accused of murder, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, had again shown a complete understanding of his stars. Miss Leslie has a strenuous role, one that would tax the abilities of many an actress who had never portrayed any but dramatic characters, but her work has been such as to warrant her continuance in this type of play. Her next vehicle, "The Golden Shower," on which she is now at work, gives her opportunity to develop a serious role.

Holubar and Dorothy Phillips on New One

Production started this week in the little town of Pleasanton, a suburb thirty miles from San Francisco, on "Ambition," the new Holubar-Phillips feature. The director who scored a success with "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Right to Happiness" has surrounded Dorothy Phillips with a cast including Robert Andersen, Rudolf Valentino, William Ellingford, Mrs. Margaret Mann, Emily Chichester, Mary Wise, Elinor Field, Dan Crimmins, Rosa Gore, Frank Elliott, Katherine Griffith and Emma Gerdes.

Miss Phillips will be seen as a small town girl who is filled with ambition to become a great opera singer. She battles her way through the world to the pinnacle of operatic fame, only to find it all a hollow mockery, and that the glitter and glamour of what the world calls success is only a drop in the bucket compared with the sympathy and understanding of the loved ones at home.

Lesser's N. Y. Branch is Established

Ira H. Simmons, the well-known film man, has attained another niche in his successful climb when he connected himself with the Sol Lesser offices in the Longacre Building.

Simmons is now general sales manager for the Yankee Doodle Film Co. (New York Branch) and is successfully handling the bookings for all of Greater New York.

Besides "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" Mr. Lesser in conjunction with Mr. Rosenberg, of Seattle, have the rights to present the Vatican Choir in the cities of Portland and Seattle, for which they paid an immense sum. The Choir, which left Rome with the blessing of the Pope and King Emanuel, will have sixty members and the tour will start from New York, visiting cities such as Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco and other places of large populations.

Bessie Love in "Over the Garden Wall"

Bessie Love's typical Love love story, "Over the Garden Wall," is nearing its release by Vitagraph. Like "Cupid Forecloses," her last feature, and "Love at First Sight," which is now in the making, the coming release fits the little star perfectly, although the stories are entirely dissimilar. Miss Love has a supporting company including Myrtle Reeves, Allan Forest, Willis Marks, James Blackwell, Edward Hearn, Truman Van Dyke, Anne Schaefer, Jay Morley and Otto Lederer.

SCREEN ILLUMINATION

EITHER OF THESE TWO FACTORS MEAN SOMETHING TO YOU

Either of them can be realized through the use of the most talked-of projector accessory produced in years.

The EXTRALITE SHUTTER

Based upon a scientific principle involving synchronization of perforations in shutter blades with translucent filler material.

THE SOLID BLADED SHUTTER CUTS OFF ALL LIGHT IN PASSING THE LENS—THE EXTRALITE DIFFUSES ONLY, RESULTING IN ADDED SCREEN ILLUMINATION OR ALLOWING FOR THE CUTTING DOWN OF AMPERAGE AT THE ARC WHICH MEANS ECONOMY.

Indorsed by the best known projection editors—engineers—and leading high class projectionists.

OVER 4500 EXTRALITES IN USE TODAY ALTHOUGH ONLY MARKETED SINCE LAST JANUARY.

Made in two or three wing types for all standard built projectors.

EXTRALITE SHUTTERS ARE A PART OF EVERY NEW SIMPLEX EQUIPMENT.

Can be purchased wherever Simplex Projectors are sold.

"The higher the brow the less it sweats"

It is a significant fact that the thinker who places his quality and service ahead of the "cheap" arguments in laboratory consideration, is cooler around the cranium than his extravagant brother.

Why have a damp forehead and inferior prints when you can comfortably enjoy the security of real quality and service.

It is better to be safe than sorry
With the laboratory service we offer, you can blame yourself if you are sorry, for we guarantee to obtain screen brilliancy to the full extent of your negative values.

"Can't Hold a Candle!"

"Send me the Motion Picture News, 'the trade paper that distinguishes the best from all the rest,' for another year.

"I take two other trade papers but will state that none of them can hold a candle light for the News.

"Every exhibitor in town is talking about the News."—Charles Peters, Jr., Greenville, Texas.

If you, Mr. Advertiser, were to call personally upon every theater, you would hear every exhibitor say an emphatic "yes" to the above declaration. You will save money for yourself and the exhibitor by concentrating your advertising in Motion Picture News.

What Did It Prove?

THE THOUSANDS of exhibitors who joined in Paramount-Artcraft Week did so for only one reason:

Because they knew it would be a big money week.

What made it a big money week?

The fact that all week Paramount-Artcraft Pictures were shown.

It was a week in which the people knew that no matter what day they went, they would see a Paramount-Artcraft Picture.

Every day a fine show; so they went many days, making it a top week for thousands of theatres.

What did it prove?

That the public wants Paramount-Artcraft Pictures above all others.

That the successful exhibitor is the one that gives the public just as many Paramount-Artcraft Pictures as he can get and advertises that they are Paramount-Artcraft Pictures.

THE HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of patrons who attended the theatres participating in Paramount-Artcraft Week did so for one reason:

Because they knew the show would be the best.

Because the exhibitor had advertised not only great stars and foremost plays—but also Paramount-Artcraft.

And the public, knowing what Paramount-Artcraft means, came, bringing prosperity to the exhibitor.

To advertise "It's a Paramount-Artcraft" means to bring more money to the box office.

An Announcement

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation takes great pleasure in announcing the extension of its distributing organization to Canada to operate along the same lines as employed in Famous Players-Lasky branch exchanges in the United States.

Each and every Canadian exhibitor may now be assured of the ability to secure Paramount-Artcraft Pictures and Paramount-Artcraft service direct from the six Canadian branch exchanges now established, operating under a company known as Famous Lasky Films, Ltd., formed for the purpose of enabling all Canadian exhibitors to share in the prosperity that goes with the exhibition of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures.

The same releasing schedule and plans in operation in this country will apply in the Canadian field.

WILLIAM RUSSELL as "Buck" Thornton

AMERICAN FLYING "A" PICTURES
MADE BY AMERICAN FILM CO. INC.

The Cinematographic Triumph of the Year!

"The best vehicle William Russell has ever had!" That's the unanimous verdict of all the photoplay critics who have seen "Six Feet Four." "Why it's even more thrilling as a play than it was as a novel," declares one newspaper writer. Harrison of Harrison's Reports says: "William Russell has never appeared in a better picture in his life—heart interest, thrills and suspense—a rare combination of the best elements." Wid says: "Many new and novel situations—a picture any house can run to good advantage." Dramatic Mirror says: "Will elevate any screen—worthy of showing in any theatre."

Exhibitors, critics, exchange managers, foreign rights buyers—all in fact, who have been afforded a pre-view of "Six Feet Four" assert it is the biggest, most sensational story of life in the great American West that has ever been screened.

Exhibitors who have seen it have one and all applied for an early booking—satisfied that it will stand a long run at the best houses in the country.

If YOU want to play the biggest attractions of the Fall Season, get in touch today with the American Film Company representative at your nearest Pathe Exchange.

"You're Pinched!"

What a fix for a perfectly respectable husband and wife to be in

SCENE: Country Hotel

TIME: Midnight

Wifey had arrived two hours earlier with a handsome male foreigner. They took adjoining rooms and wifey roused the neighborhood by almost snatching the foreigner bald headed because he tried to steal a kiss—which he thought he was entitled to because she had eloped with him.

Then hubby arrives—hot under the collar, cussing on all 12 cylinders—makes straight for wifey's room—and the brave hotel clerk-constable beards them in their lair.

"I ain't goin' to have no more sich doins in this house—you're pinched" he says—

Fulfillment

At the time of its organization, United Artists Corporation dedicated its energies and resources to the betterment of both the artistic and the commercial sides of the motion picture.

Its first release,

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS

in

"His Majesty, the American"

is demonstrating in the leading theatres of the country today what can be done by a big star in a big picture, rented to the exhibitor on a fair and sound basis.

Its second release,

D. W. GRIFFTH'S

"Broken Blossoms"

gives to the showmen of the country the acknowledged masterpiece of the screen on a similar basis of absolute merit.

Truly, the fulfillment of the promise of better things is here.

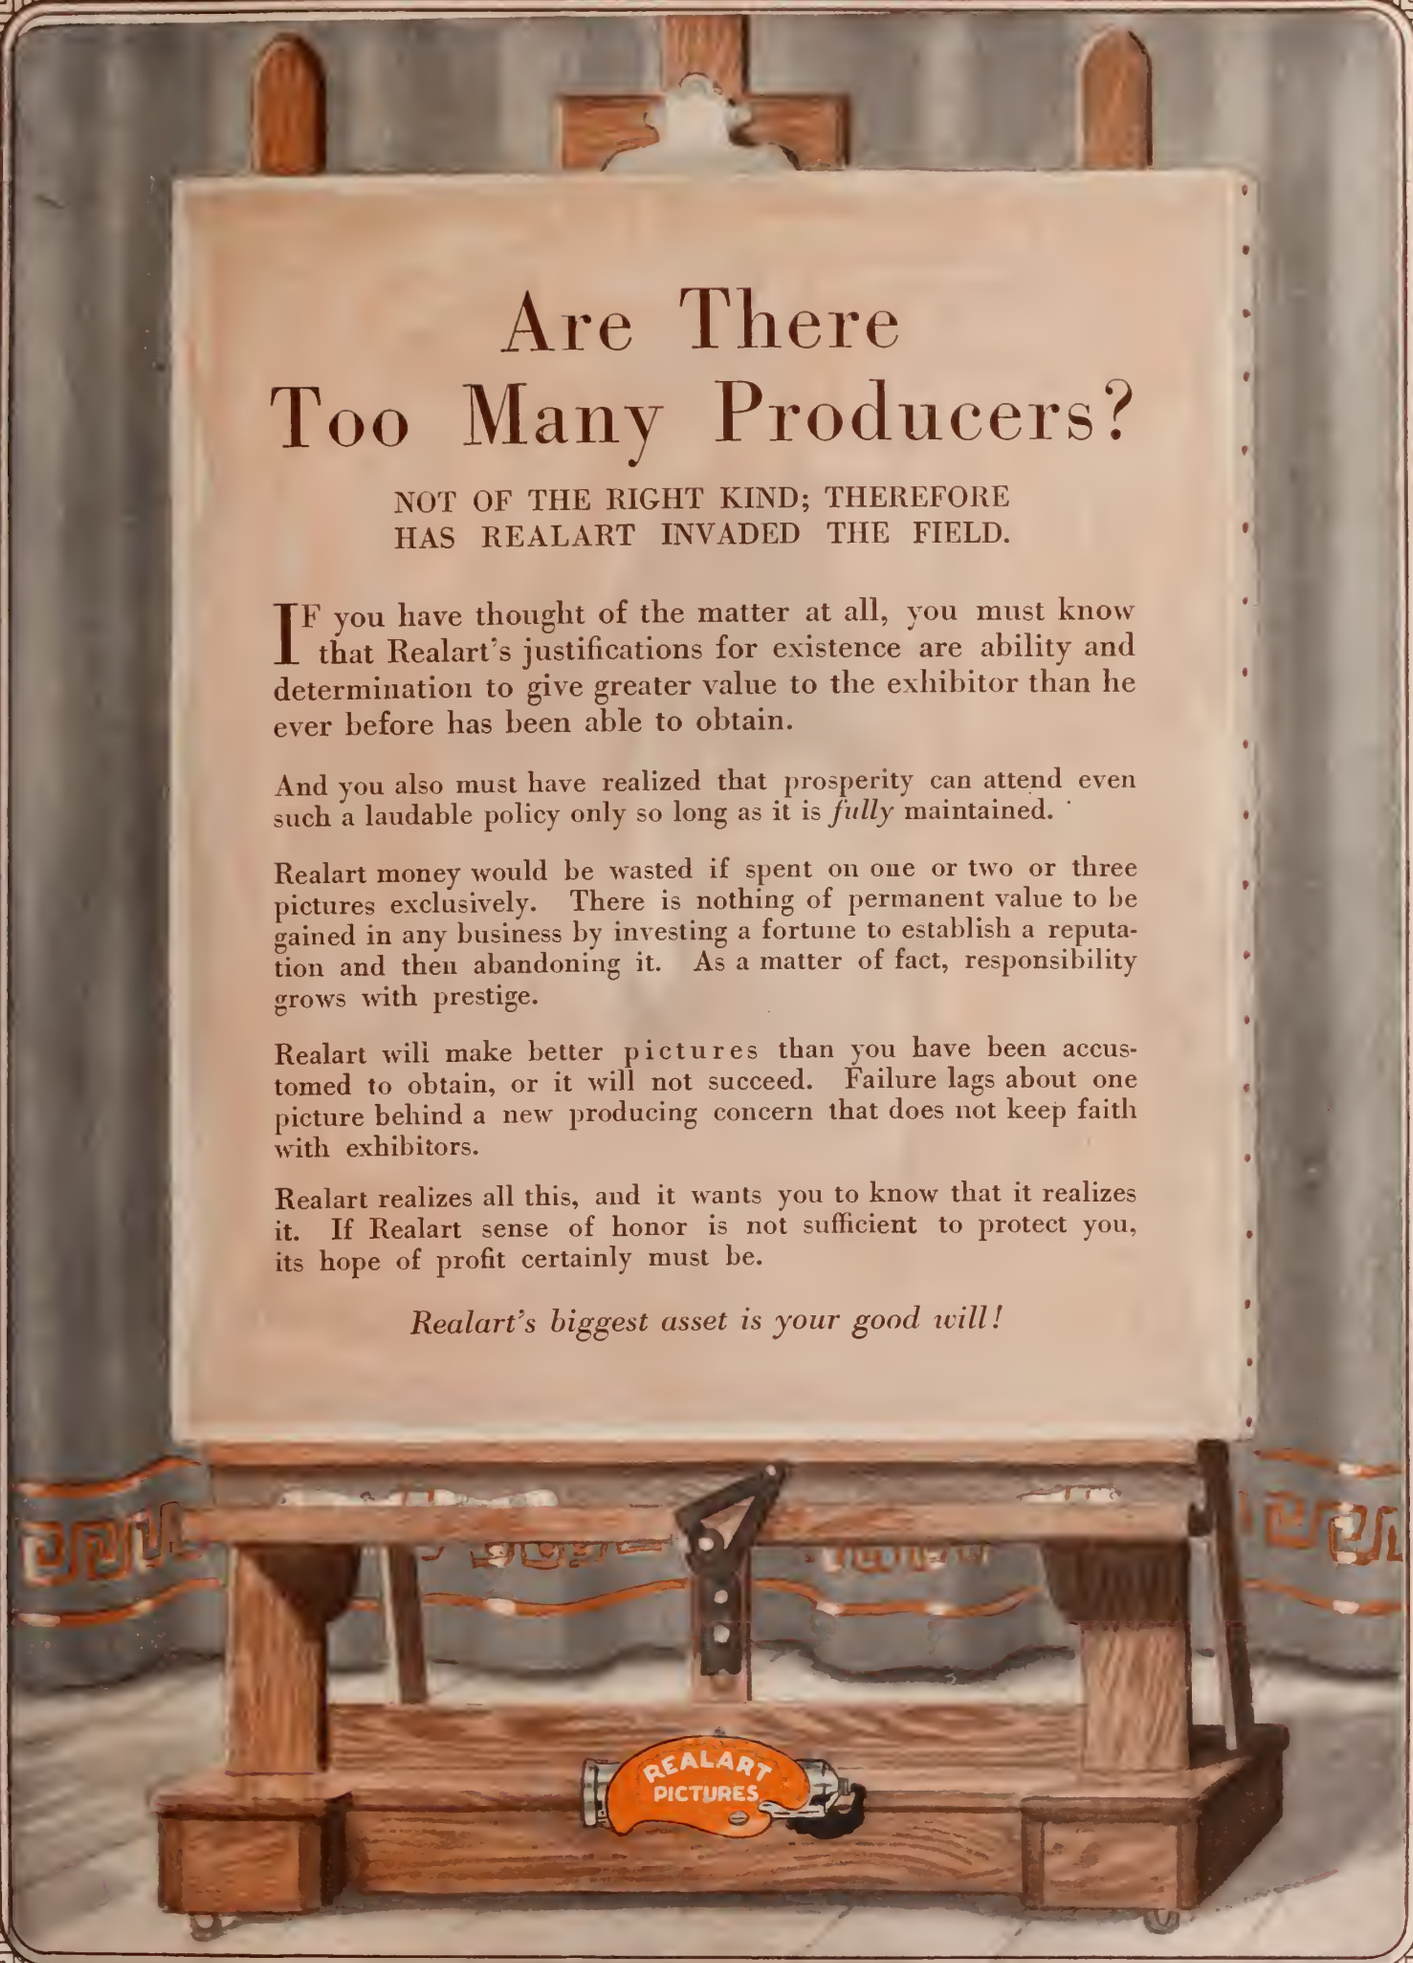
Are There Too Many Producers?

NOT OF THE RIGHT KIND; THEREFORE HAS REALART INVADED THE FIELD.

IF you have thought of the matter at all, you must know that Realart's justifications for existence are ability and determination to give greater value to the exhibitor than he ever before has been able to obtain.



And you also must have realized that prosperity can attend even such a laudable policy only so long as it is fully maintained.

Realart money would be wasted if spent on one or two or three pictures exclusively. There is nothing of permanent value to be gained in any business by investing a fortune to establish a reputation and then abandoning it. As a matter of fact, responsibility grows with prestige.

Realart will make better pictures than you have been accustomed to obtain, or it will not succeed. Failure lags about one picture behind a new producing concern that does not keep faith with exhibitors.

Realart realizes all this, and it wants you to know that it realizes it. If Realart sense of honor is not sufficient to protect you, its hope of profit certainly must be.

Realart's biggest asset is your good will!

Does This Solve Your Problem?

DO YOU FIND IT DIFFICULT TO GET MATINEE CROWDS?

OR TO ATTRACT WOMEN PATRONS AT NIGHT?

MR. Max Nathanson of the Modern Theatre, Providence, R. I., is one of many progressive exhibitors who have found the answer. When is the matinee star at his house the attendance averages 900 women to 70 men. At night, the BRADY average is 700 women and 300 men. It's a full house always!

And now MISS BRADY is to be seen in productions that would themselves be notable without the added merit of interpretation by a world-famed actress!

Her first Realart picture is based on one of the stage triumphs of the decade—the OWEN DAVIS stage drama in which MISS BRADY starred for months on Broadway, which took three companies on highly profitable tours, and which now is offered to exhibitors as a sample of the better productions awaiting them in the Brady Series.

"SINNERS"

Director, KENNETH WEBB—Scenario by EVE UNSELL

If you want early runs, the time for concluding arrangements is limited.

When Is A Picture Sold?

BETTER pictures, bigger stories, more thorough exploitation—these are some of the improvements that will be manifest in motion picture marketing this year.

To these, Realart adds salesmanship that serves. The Realart idea is that a picture is never satisfactorily sold until it has been successfully shown! A Realart contract is a beginning, not an end.

"A strikingly original plot which vibrates with suspense and crowds one dramatic thrill on top of another.

"Miss Phillips' beauty and talents have never been displayed to better advantage and she is supported by a cast of unusual excellence.

"This feature should be played up as a Special —for it is just that in every way.

"It deserves heavy advertising and billing. You have a great name to work with. Dorothy Phillips has a big box-office following.

"Go to it and boost this photodrama as you never boosted anything before.

THE OPEN MARKET

means that now, more than ever before, the quality of the printing will have an important bearing on the successful booking of a picture. Your prints can be no better than the negative.

IS YOUR NEGATIVE BEING PROPERLY DEVELOPED?

This branch of the business is a vital one, and too much care cannot be given in this direction. The Palisade Film Laboratories has gained the reputation of being not only on account of the high quality of the positive prints produced, but also owing to the excellence of its negative developing and sample printing.

In the Palisade Film Laboratories the handling of negative is done in a separate department, in personal charge of HERMAN DOERING (for more than five years chief negative developer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's eastern productions), under the supervision of PAUL RIPLEY, superintendent.

Clear, clean negative, properly developed, means that you are assured of good printing.

Do not overlook the fact that if a laboratory turns out unsatisfactory positives you can change to a better one, but if your negative is spoiled there is no hope for you.

YOU CANNOT AFFORD TO GAMBLE ON INFERIOR NEGATIVE WORK IN SECOND CLASS LABORATORIES. THE NEGATIVE REPRESENTS YOUR ENTIRE OUTLAY ON A PRODUCTION.

Make no mistake. Go to the best. Send your work to

IN

The WORLD and ITS WOMAN

With Lou Tellegen

By Thompson Buchanan Directed by Frank Lloyd

On Labor Day, Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, opened with this master drama—at dollar prices! Audiences packed the Auditorium and were wildly enthusiastic.

"If this is the kind of plays Samuel Goldwyn intends giving us in the future, then let's make way for more Goldwyn Productions."—Express.

"Combined artistry of Farrar and Tellegen elevates the production to high rank among the season's output. The star and her star husband handle delicate situations in a manner that exhilarates as well as convinces."—Herald.

"All Farrar's heroines of the stage seem embodied in her, only waiting for the magic hour to strike wherein they issue forth in the newest play."—Times.

"Never looked more beautiful; a pictorial delight."—Examiner.

You will enjoy the Bray Popular Science Romances yourself as much as your most enthusiastic patron.

There are wonderful things happening in the world. Science is making giant strides; worlds are about to talk together; things as unbelievable to us as the telephone and wireless were to our grandparents are soon to be given to the people.

Talk of romance? The most thrilling stories are weak in comparison. The best of popular science romances are in the Bray-Goldwyn Pictograph.

Learn to learn, through the

and you will be as big a booster for Goldwyn-Bray as any of our salesmen!

Forthcoming releases bring out some wonderful examples of popular science romances.

The new and record-breaking DOUBLE ANIMATED CARTOONS are ready.

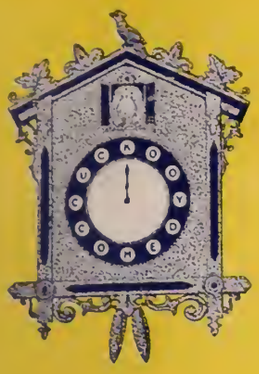
in Her Purchase Price



THE most versatile actress of the silver screen appears in a more novel and colorful role than ever before. As Sheka, the Pearl of the Harem, she is seen in all the barbaric splendor of the treasured pleasure slaves of Egypt and is then transformed into the Woman of the East searching for the truth in London's cultured society.

Scenes of magnificence are not unusual on the screen today, but the Harem settings and the auction of slave girls are triumphs of grandeur.

FAMOUS STAGE SUCCESSES FOR VITAGRAPH STARS

Vitagraph has launched a broad campaign to present its famous feature stars in the greatest stage productions available.

It is one step further in Vitagraph's undertaking to mobilize genius. Just a few days ago the company proclaimed the acquisition of rights to the works of twelve of the most famous writers in the world. The gathering of stage masterpieces serves to complete the roundup.

The best, the finest, the highest processes of stage direction and the translation of words into action will be contributed by the spoken drama to Vitagraph's creations for the screen.

Vitagraph approaches its big future with an equipment of confidence gained by long, gradual experiment. It has previously produced screen translations of powerful stage plays, and has seen these pictures ride to enormous success. The experiments that proved flawless in the past, therefore, serve as foundation for a definite drive into the future.

Here are some of the stage productions which Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announces for early production and release:

"THE CLIMBERS," Clyde Fitch's famous stage success, the filming of which is already near completion, with Corinne Griffith as star.

"THE FORTUNE HUNTER," by Winchell Smith, in which John Barrymore enjoyed one of his greatest successes.

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS," that massive Drury Lane spectacle.

"THE COLLEGE WIDOW," by George Ade.

"SHENANDOAH."

"THE CITY."

"THE GREAT DIVIDE," in which Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin starred season after season.

Vitagraph's previous stage play translations are fresh in the public mind. They include:

"THE THIRD DEGREE," by Charles Klein, which Alice Joyce made beautiful on the screen.

"THE LION AND THE MOUSE," by the same author, and with the same star.

"WITHIN THE LAW," in which Alice Joyce and Harry T. Morey shared enviable screen honors.

"A STITCH IN TIME," with Gladys Leslie starred.

More recently Vitagraph issued a film version of Eugene Walter's tremendous play, "THE WOLF," with Earle Williams in the star role, and Charles Klein's equally great drama, "THE GAMBLERS," starring Harry T. Morey.

These two crashing dramas are among this month's releases.

Vitagraph brings forward the combined judgment and talent of big theatrical producers. It preserves ideas from the brains of great playwrights—ideas which for centuries past have lived only in the printed word and in memory.

Exhibitors everywhere have sensed the power of these features which originated on the stage, and are booking these masterpieces for week-runs.

Typical of this is the experience of the manager of the Victoria Theater, Rochester, N. Y., who reports that during the hottest week in July he drew capacity houses with his presentation of Vitagraph's "THE THIRD DEGREE."

Such films have specific drawing power from the fact that many thousands of film patrons have seen or read of the original stage productions, and are eager for that reason to see the translation. The desire to see extends also to the minds of thousands unable to witness the big dramas of Broadway.

In addition to the particular plays mentioned, George Randolph Chester, production editor of Vitagraph, has mapped out a program of stage-plays to be filmed by that company. Some of the additional stage productions listed for visualization in its films are:

"The District Attorney," "The House Next Door," "Mrs. Dane's Defense," "Zira," and "A Celebrated Case."

"FEWER Pictures—Better Pictures—Longer Runs. This is the order of the future. There is little doubt about it now. It is no longer a prophecy; it is actually going into effect."

Does this sound like an editorial thought of yesterday or to-day? Like a trite forecast of the coming year?

It isn't. The quotation above is the opening paragraph of an editorial that appeared on this page in the month of May, 1915. Motion Picture News on that occasion first declared for the slogan, "Fewer Pictures, Better Pictures, Longer Runs."

For over four years the industry has been slowly moving towards the fulfillment of that slogan. To-day, as we enter upon a new film season, the battle cry of more than one company is expressed in the phrase, "Fewer and Better Pictures, and Longer Runs."

But the editorial of 1915 is brought to mind now because of its heading—"Protect the Exhibitor."

There is a thought expressed in 1915 that is as pertinent to-day as the day it was written. There is the thought that will within the next year become the companion to the slogan, "Fewer Pictures—Better Pictures—Longer Runs." If the rocks are to be avoided and the hurdles overcome the industry's sign-post must be changed to read:

"Fewer Pictures—Better Pictures—Longer Runs—and Protection for the Exhibitor."

THE year 1915 marked a turning point in the industry. There is value, therefore, in a glance backward to the editorial thoughts prompted by the outlook of that day. Let us study the possibilities for application of those earlier conclusions to the conditions of to-day. Taking up the editorial after the opening paragraph quoted above, we read:

> "The year past has been largely a scramble, without order or logic.
> The well-established daily change programs have gone steadily on, furnishing a solid undertone to the business. Now they are adding features, but with a clear idea ahead of furnishing a shorter program of higher quality and fit for a longer run than a daily change.
> With features as a whole the production and exhibition of them have in a large measure been equally wild. Big and little houses have struggled to book them; big and little companies have competed in their production.
> "But the lines of cleavage have appeared and grow more and more distinct."

It can hardly be said to-day that "The year past has been largely a scramble, without order or logic." The "year past," it must now be said, has been a steady, consistent preparation for the year that is to come. It has been the lessons of the year past that taught producers the immense revenue possibilities of "Fewer and Better Pictures." The twelve months that have gone have shown the steadiest progression by exhibitors towards "Better Advertising and Longer Runs."

But what can be said of the thought expressed in 1915 regarding features that "Big and little houses have struggled to book them; big and little companies have competed in their production. But the lines of cleavage have appeared and grow more and more distinct."

The lines of cleavage were appearing then between the store-show and the "theatre"; between the dollar a foot "fillum" and the feature.

Protect Your Customer

The lines of cleavage will appear during the coming year between the theatre whose class of patronage, seating capacity, advertising possibilities and ability make possible the payment of the higher rentals that the "Fewer and Better Pictures" will demand, and the theatre that must be content to remain "a picture house." The lines of cleavage will appear between the producers who actually make fewer pictures and the organizations that turn out a quantity product for a market demand that exists just as strongly to-day as it did in 1915 and that will continue to exist.

Will the process of drawing this line be a peacable one? Will it come about naturally and harmoniously or will it be a jarring, injurious course, beset with disturbances?

THUS we come to the conclusion of the 1915 editorial and to the warning that is as apropos to-day. Let's read further in the 1915 editorial, merely changing the phrase "Bulk business" to "higher rentals" to bring its thought up-to-date.

"There is still chaos in the booking of pictures.

We have too many exchanges and with many of them a blind, reckless competition that is working much harm.

Their one aim seems to be to get bulk business, to secure the greatest possible number of customers.

If Ajax Film can't put its service in a house at its price, it puts it in anyway, and two weeks later breaks its contract in favor of another house for a better price. This disorder seems to prevail quite generally.

This is wrong—unbusinesslike.

In the first place, bulk business does not pay an exchange and never did. An exchange makes more money out of fewer and better customers.

But there's the exhibitor to consider. It might seem as if this sharp competition benefited him. But it doesn't.

If he has Ajax pictures for two weeks and then some other brand, and then some other, how is he to establish the name of his house, its kind of pictures, its character? How is he to participate in the benefits of the advertising the maker of the picture does?

A few years ago a prominent clothing manufacturing house, backed by a big advertising campaign, went after bulk customers in this very same way. It got them; but a year later the concern reversed its policy.

Instead of putting its brand of clothing into two or more stores in a town or section of a large city, it selected one dealer and then protected him.

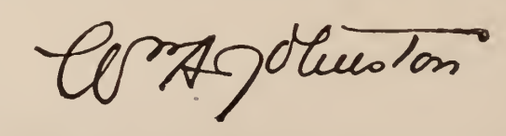
It protected him against near-at-hand competition, and helped him sell more clothes through advertising and other sales help. All with the result that the concern sold more goods at less expense through one dealer than through three. And the dealer also made money.

The dealer in every business must be protected, not only for his sake, but also for the good of the manufacturer.

The exhibitor must be protected and supported. It is he alone who can raise and hold admission prices. It is he alone who takes in the stream of money that in turn supports the whole industry.

BETTER pictures he must have—pictures as excellent in amusement qualities as the magazine fiction which the millions read.

And sooner or later he must realize that better pictures mean fewer pictures and longer runs for them—not pictures turned out by the foot rule to make a daily change program, but pictures so good that they must be shown again.



But he needs protection.

He should get one service and hold it. He should be protected against competition. He should be able to advertise to a population sufficient to his seating capacity that he has such and such picture and that he alone has them.

Then he can afford to pay a satisfactory rental in return for this service from the manufacturer.

And the latter, by cutting down an exorbitant and unnecessary distributing and printing expense can put more money into his pictures and make them better."

"PROTECT the Exhibitor" read the editorial heading in 1915; "Protect Your Customer," reads the sign-post for 1919-20. Forget the exhibitor, disregard his problems and his possibilities, think only of methods of putting more and more pressure on the rental-gauge—and there are rocks ahead.

Dealing in Personalities

J. C. JESSEN is in town, boys. J. Carl Jessen, in other words. Or, if you prefer it, Carl Jessen.

We like J. Clever Jessen for ours. Bennie Zeidman and Tom Geraghty are the word specialists who are understood to have officiated when our West Coast representative was christened that fashion. We are willing to take their word for it. If they—and the rest of the Los Angeles colony—persist in declaring that "the boy is clever," far be it from us to object.

Of course, "J. C." objects. In fact, they make him very uncomfortable with that, "the boy is clever," line. And when we think of that we decide that it wouldn't be quite fair to spread the phrase around New York, now that he is our guest.

So we'll say no more about it.

But we will say this: If there is any way that the cooperation between MOTION PICTURE NEWS and your organization on the West Coast can be improved now is the time to speak. "J. C." is going to try and see most of you in the few days that he will be here. But if you have something on your chest, if there is some way that we can help you in Los Angeles—say the word.

You'll be glad to meet "J. C.," anyway. He's the genial, regular fellow type that you will be glad to have on your calling list the next time you journey to Los Angeles.

We had an interesting visitor from London this week in the person of Victor Sheridan, managing director of the Associated Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd. Mr. Sheridan runs six big English theatres and is also prominent in the activities of the C. E. A. He impressed us as the live-wire type with worth while opinions that he is not afraid to express. Some of the things he told us will make most interesting reading for American producers. We'll present these views to you within a week or so.

WHILE speaking of the visit of our Los Angeles representative to New York let us also mention the fact that Harry Reichenbach has returned to the precincts of Broadway. Harry returned the same day that we received a postcard from him postmarked "Tia Juana" and inscribed, "Came down here to get a new crop of bull."

We laughed at the card and then walked down the street only to meet Harry at the luncheon table. Now we suppose he will be sore if we say that Harry always makes good on any statement he issues. Do you think he will?

Harry is now hanging his hat in the Equity offices and warming up to a campaign on "The Eyes of Youth." Bill Rudolph, after accepting congratulations from all sides on his crackerjack insert advertising, has tendered his resignation.

We like to have Harry journey to the Coast. Because he always brings back a corking supply of good stories. One of the funniest he told this time concerns the producer who declared to a crowd at the Alexandria, "I want distribution in the worst way!"

But, shucks, we can't tell you the answer to that one.

Had still another visitor from across the pond this week. W. Harlan, proprietor of the Electric theatre, Portobello, came to us with some news of conditions in Scotland. Mr. Harlan finds so much room for improvement in the distribution of American pictures in Britain that he plans the opening of offices here for the reciprocal handling of British pictures in the American market and American pictures in the British field.

JACK WOODY has been made General Manager of Realart, stepping up from the title of "General Sales Manager." Which is good news to the host of fellows who insist on telling you that Jack Woody is "one regular feller."

Wonder what change the new title will make in Jack's status at the daily convention of sales managers which seems to be a regular feature at the Astor lunch room now. Gosh, there is hardly a day that you won't find Jack Woody, Fred Quimby, of Pathe, Ralph Proctor, of United Artists, and E. C. Pearson of the same organization grouped about a table.

And it's a funny thing that all of these boys are popular with every one you meet—exchange men, exhibitors, and common, ordinary New York film hounds. Why, even J. C. Jessen pulled it on us the minute he arrived in town, by saying, "Where can I reach Fred Quimby and Jack Woody?"

The next thing we know Woody, Proctor and Quimby, three boys from the far Pacific coast will be known as "The Three Musketeers." They are together a lot, they have the same genial personalities and they give the same clean-cut impressions.

There's real lightning and jazz in the story on page 2396 of this issue, which tells of the battle Hulsey and his associates are making against the S. A. Lynch invasion of Texas. There's a rip-snorting battle on down there, boys, ana how we all do like a battle! But this is only the warming up stage. Just think of all the fun that we will have six months from now. Just think of the new joy that will be injected into a news editor's life when he can turn from publicity hokum to a real, snappy, fight story. Guess we'll have to polish up some of the adjectives that press agents don't use.

J. EUGENE PEARCE, general manager of five houses in New Orleans, was among the exhibitors who called at MOTION PICTURE NEWS office this week. "Gene" is one of the many exhibitors who isn't worrying over the prospect of strenuous days this winter.

"I went through the first battle this industry saw," he declares," and that was when General Film set out to monopolize the game. I guess those days were strenuous enough for anybody. But at the same time they taught real lessons. It isn't for me to point out the lesson but any exhibitor whose memory takes him back to those days can face the experience squarely and form his own guide. Of course, this is going to be a tempestuous year, with perplexing problems in booking and advertising. But the only man who has to worry is the one who 'quits' before the gong sounds."

Fatty Arbuckle sure can see things coming. "Back Stage," his latest release, was made and completed several weeks ago, and yet it is built around an actors' strike. If that isn't stepping right into publicity we'd like to know what is. But that doesn't compare with "W. H." Shepard's skill in landing on the title, "Everybody's Business," just when the Saturday Evening Post started a weekly department with that heading. A short story title would only be seen by the Post readers once. a serial heading about five times, but "Everybody's Business" is there week in and week out.

JOE PLUNKITT has left the Famous Players-Lasky organization and is acting very mysterious about his new connection. Says he hasn't decided on anything yet but the rumorists persist in having it all doped out for him. They link his name with a gentleman whose initials are "L. J."

Not believing in rumors ourselves we won't even hint at Joe's future. And since it is only a few weeks ago—on the occasion of his moving to Fifth avenue—that we told you all the good things we thought about Joe Plunkitt we can't do that again.

So we'll just close by saying: "Whatever the next move is, Joe, good luck to you!"

TWO NEW STUDIOS FOR WEST COAST

THREE quarters of a million dollars will be spent on the erection of two more motion picture studios on the West Coast, according to construction plans just announced.

Los Angeles and New York capital is said to be behind the project of Paul Studios, Inc., which is to begin within thirty days the erection of a commercial studio with a capacity of thirty production units and at a cost of $500,000.

Associated in this enterprise are R. Holmes Paul, president; R. C. Willard, former Universal controller; Whittington and Kahn, New York brokers, and Emil Fossler, builder of Brunton, Lasky and other studios. A forty acre site at Melrose and Crescent avenue, Hollywood, has been secured.

Jesse D. Hampton Productions begin the construction of a $250,000 studio on Santa Monica Boulevard, near La Brea, with three dark stages, each one hundred and twenty by one hundred and twenty; also administration, laboratory and property rooms.

Press Books as the Authors See Them

In Which Mr. Briggs, of Minneapolis, Is Given a Few Pointers On the Why and Wherefore of Press Books and Picture Exploitation

[Recently Motion Picture News published an article by George N. Briggs, publicity director for Finkelstein and Ruben, which complained of the quality of publicity aid given the exhibitor in the average press book. Mr. Briggs invited an argument—and this week he gets it. Howard Dietz, director of service for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, and J. H. Mayer, acting director of publicity for the Universal Film Exchanges, are the two gentlemen who step forward to set Mr. Briggs right.]

The Other Side of the Story

By J. H. Mayer

(Acting Director of Publicity, the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.)

THERE has recently been an epidemic of abuse hurled at the various publicity departments of moving picture concerns for the alleged mediocrity of their press books, and it seems that whenever a space writer is unable to create an original thought around which to build a story, he hauls out his dictionary and book of synonyms, and proceeds to strip the venacular of its superlatives in malignity. "Rotten," "cheap," "uninforming," "twaddle," etc. are favorite words of the press book maligner, who rants and fumes ad lib. But when he has finished two or three columns in which he has uncorked a profusion of platitudes, about all the reader has learned is that the writer has had fifteen years' experience on some newspaper.

No words are minced; no discrimination is used. We are informed that all press books are bad, and an insult to the intelligence of the exhibitors, newspapermen, and the printer's devil.

In a recent issue of "The Motion Picture News," an article entitled, "More About The Press Books We See," was published in which the author branded all press books as twaddle, and then went on to describe his search through the campaign book of a well known film concern in search of material for publicity. He could find nothing that appealed to his esthetic taste as a "press agent." He admitted that the press book contained a synopsis and a number of short stories about the various scenes in the picture. "But," to use his own words: "Nothing in the book even suggested the germ of an idea." And then he came upon a column story describing a scene in the picture which the writer of the press book assured him was not a fake. But the fifteen years' experience of this writer stood him in good stead, and he not only refused to believe the story, but he unmercifully flayed the item as a fake.

The fact of the matter is, the story was not a fake. The scene was real. I can vouch for this, as I saw the picture, which was shown at the Strand theatre here. The press book had vividly described the scene, which was one of the features of the picture.

There can be no argument in favor of the press book of a year ago. It was poor. It was devoid, in most cases, of good stories. Dramatic and photoplay editors found little or nothing in the press books which could be used without rewriting, and most dramatic or photoplay editors haven't the time or inclination to rewrite press stuff.

But this condition does not prevail today. The press books of most film organizations are as nearly perfect as they can be made. (At this point I beg permission of my readers to drag in the fact that I have had only twelve years' experience as a newspaper hound.) The fact is mentioned in this connection: For two years, I was dramatic editor of The Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, and during that period handled tons of press matter from the various film concerns. A vast amount of it was ordinary, some of it was good—a portion was excellent.

Any dramatic editor who cannot find good material for his photoplay column in the Bulletin issued by The Universal, "The Progress Advance" of the Paramount-Artcraft Company, the press sheet of the Goldwyn company, or the clip sheet of Fox, isn't partial to moving pictures. There are other concerns which issue good material, but the ones mentioned are probably the best.

The press sheets of these companies are also fitted with readable stories, which can be used in their original form, or adapted for particular localities by any "press agent" who has a grain of ingenuity. I have before me as this is written, a press book on "The Heart of Humanity," containing 32 pages. Every conceivable form of publicity is contained in this book. There are intimate sketches of the production, criticisms of various metropolitan newspapers, ten stories for the week producing the showing, ten paragraphs for the week of the showing, twenty-four special stories, advertising punches for the program and herald, reproduction of posters and stills, and seventeen different suggestions for newspaper advertisements. Any press agent who cannot find sufficient material in this press book to lay out a rip roaring advertising and publicity campaign, should go back to "covering" the church route on the Podunk Gazette.

Press books are written for the use of exhibitors in New York City, and Three Corners, Wisconsin. In the biggest cities, the exhibitor usually has a publicity manager or press agent who devotes all of his time to securing publicity and exploiting pictures through the arrangement of novel lobby displays, tieing up with department stores, writing letters to patrons, etc. In other cities, not so large, the press agent is usually a newspaper man, who gives a few hours of his spare time to the exhibitor. In the smaller towns and villages, the exhibitor, feeling that he cannot afford the services of a publicist, does his own press agenting. Publicity departments of the film concerns do not maintain that the intelligence of the exhibitor in the smaller towns is of lesser degree than in the big city, as has been suggested. They do aver, however, that exhibitors in the village must be given the very best cooperation in the way of publicity material, by reason of the very fact that such exhibitors are more dependent upon the press book than the big exhibitor, who pays a good salary to a press agent, who has, or should have, ideas for putting on the picture, and obtaining the maximum newspaper publicity. In my six months as publicity manager of the Cincinnati exchange of the Universal, I did not receive a single complaint from a small town exhibitor regarding our press books.

Manifestly, there is a wide difference of opinion as to what is a good press story. The photoplay editor of one paper will demand a certain kind of story, which another paper in the same town would not use. Some newspapers want feature stories—others require simple and straight facts. Here is where the ingenious press agent comes in. Knowing the requirements of his papers he can supply the kind of stories that will appeal to the individual tastes of the various editors. A little grey matter mixed with enthusiasm, and half an hour's work at a typewriter is a splendid recipe for "press agents" to follow. The time spent in considering the work of others, if diligently and judiciously applied, can be put to the purpose of writing stories, as the press agent would have them. That is what I did while handling the publicity for Gifts theatre, Cincinnati's most beautiful picture theatre.

"When a Feller Needs a Friend"

By Howard Dietz

Director of Service, Goldwyn Distributing Corp.

THE sanctity of the Press Book has undoubtedly been violated by your correspondent, George N. Briggs, and I cannot resist the urge to rush to the defense of the Alamotion picture exploitation clan. Mr. Briggs' zolaesque diatribe on our calling and the product of our calling could perhaps be best crushed by an absurd silence, but in this age of debate and rhetoric, where is the tongue to hold its place in the face of abuse, where is the press agent's typewriter which can refrain from clicking out the satisfying rebuttal?

Someone—and it must have been either Ruskin or Emerson—once said that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing." Their particular objection to "a little knowledge" was doubtless because it speaks the language of half-truths, and half-truths are more dangerous than lies. Mr. Briggs' article in The News was an article of half-truths. In his first paragraph he puts press books into the class of the "totally worthless," and further claims that they are an "insult to the intelligence of newspaper readers." Press books are not totally worthless. I have in my desk evidence for my case in the form of letters from exhibitors and clippings from newspapers of varying degrees of importance. Exhibitors being the sole judge of the worth of Press Books (and in this article I am taking Goldwyn Press Books as the example because I am most familiar with them) have declared them not worthless—in fact the vast majority of their letters eulogize their worth. Also the clippings which we have here in the charge of our librarian bear evidence that newspaper editors have not hesitated to "insult the intelligence" of their readers. And can Mr. Briggs say that he is a better judge of insults than those Prelates of Insolence—the editors?

Nor is it necessary to go on down the lines of Mr. Briggs' article to disprove his case that "one press book is just as bad as another—poorly written, devoid of ideas, cheap, uninforming twaddle." There is further use of the half-truth in all of this. I can point to Goldwyn Press Books that were poorly written, devoid of ideas, cheap, uninforming twaddle. And I can point to others that were quite the reverse in every respect.

I agree with your correspondent in his grievance against the idea of Service Departments blaming their poor work on lack of cooperation with their studios, and as long as he confines his argument to similar irrelevant matter, his thinking is clear and logical, though it must of necessity be quite uninteresting. But I do take issue with him when he attacks the idea that the standard of intelligence is lower in the country than in the city. In fact, I am absolutely sure that he is wrong. The city is, because of its very nature, the centre of culture. It is the only community that can afford to give its citizens the best in the way of education in the arts and sciences. The country's great education results from a contact with the city. Statistics on literacy (and even on health) will convince Mr. Briggs of the superiority of the city in this respect.

And as for the country newspaper printing the same matter—or matter of equally high calibre—as the city newspaper, that, of course, is absurd. The entire cataract of the country weeklies is stemmed by any one of the leading city newspapers. In fact, there is only one country newspaper in the United States that has made a dent in the history of journalism, and that paper is the Emporia Gazette, headed by a man of metropolitan education—William Allen White.

Yet, all this is perhaps beside the issue, for Mr. Briggs claims that 35% of the revenue for all pictures comes from the large cities. And on this ground we are willing to meet Mr. Briggs in the fight for better press books. But we claim that it is folly for him to drag statistics on country and city intelligence into his argument, an argument which lacks the one vital element for being convincing—lack of dogmatism.

Taking a more constructive attitude with regard to the Press Book is the discretion that is the better part of a Service Manager. The Press Book, of course, must be put in its place. It must be improved to its highest possible efficiency first, and then put in its place, let us say. Those of us who make Press Books are constantly trying to improve them so that they will be an aid to the exhibitor. That the Finkelstein and Rubin theatres have been unable to use them can only be answered by the statement that the Rothapfel theatres have used them. It was only the other day that I saw an advertisement in a Philadelphia paper—an advertisement of a showing at the Chestnut Street Opera House of a Geraldine Farrar picture. This advertisement was taken bodily from the Press Book. Moreover, previous to this advertisement I saw a large news story about Geraldine Farrar in a different Philadelphia paper which for the most part had emanated from the same Press Book. Which only proves that it is all a matter of opinion. One man at a desk in New York cannot turn out matter that will meet the demands of every exhibitor in the United States. But he can produce press material that will serve the majority of them. And if the maker of press books is not to be guided by the majority he must be guided by the minority, which would of course be ridiculous.

The printed word can say only a certain amount. It has its limits in the field of exposition. The acute idea that is not read is just as valuable as if it had never been put into print. The tendency therefore of the modern producing company is to supplement press books and other accessories with a human being on the premises, who will carry out for the exhibitor what the exhibitor will not carry out for himself, often through sheer inertia. Goldwyn has such a man at every exchange. In fact we shall all see the day of Mr. Briggs' Utopia when the press book is a minimum of bunk and a maximum of utility. Let us hope that Mr. Briggs will help us to better our service to the exhibitor. If he does not, but continues to *de*struct instead of *con*struct, he will shortly be a subject for a cartoon by his namesake entitled "When a feller needs a friend."

When is a Press Sheet?

When Is a Press Sheet?

One answer was presented in Motion Picture News recently by G. N. Briggs, publicity manager for the Rubin and Finkelstein theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul. This week the other side of the case is presented by Messrs. Dietz and Mayer.

But the real answer comes next week. Motion Picture News has obtained from C. L. Yearsley, Advertising Manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the exclusive right to present it to the industry. It consists of the opinions, criticisms, comments, suggestions and complaints of more than three hundred exhibitors.

Combined, these exhibitors leave nothing unsaid about press sheets and advertising material generally, nor do they overlook a single chance for condemning or complimenting the work of the men in the Publicity Departments of First National, Paramount, Metro, Fox, Select, Universal, Goldwyn, Exhibitors' Mutual, Robertson-Cole, World Film, Pathe in fact, every producing and distributing concern that regularly supplies them with "exhibitor helps."

They contribute a remarkable and valuable knowledge to all exhibitors in their revelations of methods, plans and ideas. They speak with a frankness that will remove all doubt from the minds of publicity and advertising men about exactly what the majority of exhibitors want in the way of service from their respective departments.

Motion Picture News next week will publish the first instalment of these exhibitor opinions.

Prefacing it will be an article by Mr. Yearsley, who has preferred to gauge the character of First National's exhibitor advertising and publicity material in accordance with the requirements of the majority rather than the specific needs of the few—and who made certain of his premise by determining just what are the points of agreement by the many. He will summarize his own experiences and conclusions with his own conception of the digest of the several hundred exhibitor opinions he has received.

Another Editor Heard From

By Sam Raddon, Jr.

Motion Picture Editor, Oregon Daily and Sunday Journal, Portland, Ore.

ARE only unsuccessful newspapermen recruited in the ranks of motion picture company publicists?

Or, having once connected with m. p. payrolls, do good newspapermen go stale?

Does the environment of the studio, the players' dressing room and the managerial sanctum stifle the good reporter's ambition to dig up a story?

Something is wrong?

There are news stories in every motion picture produced: in the producing of the picture, and in every star and in every speck of star-dust in the milky way of the silver-screen firmanent. Newspapermen, above all others, should be able to root out these stories, and to present them in press-books and advance sheets in such manner that motion picture editors would clamor for them, and newspaper-motion picture-fans would eat them up.

But as a rule the praise-agents fall down on the job. There are exceptions, bless 'em, but the general run of stuff awaiting the editor's shears and paste-pot when he opens his daily mail, with a half hour to press time and a big hole to fill, is bunk-simple, but by no means pure.

The argument that press sheets are prepared chiefly for small, country newspaper consumption, will not stand the gaff. If the average run of motion picture publicity matter is used by the country papers, it is simply because the small town editor, between taking a cord of wood on subscription, running out a job of letter-heads and writing an editorial on the curse of riches, must make some sort of a showing to please his theatre advertisers and his circulation constituency, and because he hasn't the time nor the facilities for re-writing his copy and getting it into the paper on time. Would the small-town editor use less of the press-material if it were really high class? Would the home-town subscriber read less of it? Nonsense. The best is none too good.

The day of superlative generalities has passed. Give us real newsy stuff with a kick. Two percent nauseates us.

But far be it from us to put all odium on the press-man himself. The blame rests in considerable part, we believe, with producers and managers themselves. What do they know about news? Their advertising instincts are largely those of the late lamented Barnum. A wizard in his day, we'll admit. But he's dead. Managers apparently fail to realize especially the cumulative value of repeated mention of their plays and players and theatres, even though such mention may

Meet Some More of the Real Ones!

Exhibitors Who Help Keep the Industry In Its High Place

E. A. VAN DORAN is manager and owner of the Victoria theatre, in a town sung of by poet and bard, Hiawatha, Kan. Prior to 1917 when he became owner of the house, Mr. Van Doran was a photographer, but says he is now "very much in the motion picture game, and in it to stick."

The people of Hiawatha are educated to pictures and are very critical, he says, and only the best will pass muster with them, so naturally the biggest productions at as early a date after release as possible, are run.

"I read the NEWS and keep posted up to the minute" Mr. Van Doran writes, and adds that this Fall and Winter he is looking for the biggest business for himself and other up to the minute exhibitors, that they have ever experienced.

SINCE 1911 D. Filizola, proprietor of of the Theatrette, Fort Scott, Kansas, has been an exhibitor, and prior to that was for twenty five years, in one or another way, connected with the show business.

Mr. Filizola has a few words to say on the exchange-exhibitor relations, which he believes is now entirely a one-sided affair. He is one of the many exhibitors who decry the deposit system, and says it is a most difficult matter to ever get a refund in case of a mix-up in service. He also finds the matter for lobby display and for press exploitation, sent out with a big feature, to be of absolutely no use, despite that the price of photos for display has almost tripled.

J. W. DAVIS manages the Vallejo Theatre at Vallejo, California, a house with a 1,050 seating capacity. The main offices of the theatre are in San Francisco, and the best attractions only are run, the booking following that of the same pictures at the big California Theatre in San Francisco.

In addition, the Paramount-Artcraft features are run following their play at the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, so altogether the Vallejo rightly lays claim to showing pictures worth while a short time after their release.

Mr. Davis follows the policy of running his theatre in accord with the wishes of his patrons, constantly open to suggestions of his public. He always says he finds many suggestions of interest in the NEWS.

EDDIE CRAFFETS is another Hoosier State exhibitor, controlling the destinies of the Pastime Theatre, Seelyville, Indiana. The town is but a small one, the coal mining industry being its standby, and the Pastime seats one hundred and fifty, but a full house is always the order of the day. Being but eight miles from Terre Haute, Mr. Craffets has to avoid competition of the big city which is easily reached, by running pictures of quality. Prior to his taking hold of the theatre, it had never been a success. It is now. That is its proprietor's doings.

JOHN H. WETZ is at the helm of the Crown Theater, North Salem, Indiana, which he has brought from a run down institution, not paying expenses even when running medium grade pictures, to a successful house billing only the best produced.

Such pictures as "Daddy Long Legs" and others of similar character are playing to big business at all times. In fact so successful has Mr. Wetz been that he has just completed a new theatre, up to date in every respect, and which opened August 30. Mr. Wetz promises pictures of the best calibre the market affords, to be presented in just as high class a manner, with excellent musical programs. North Salem is a progressive town in the progressive Hoosier state.

THE Rex Theatre, Perry, Iowa, is in J. C. Collins' hands, and another house now building. which will seat 600 will also be under his control, so the report "business prospering" seems more than a truth.

Mr. Collins finds the public has been educated to the best and only the best in films, and is quite willing to pay increased admission prices when special big features are presented for them. Mr. Collins adds a word to his letter stating the United Exhibitors of Iowa do not oppose Film Trade of Board rules.

F. C. Gregory is proprietor of the New Orpheum theatre, Maquoketa, Iowa. Prior to his taking hold of the house, it had been dark for several years, He opened it after installing new projection machines, and completely renovating the entire theatre inside and out.

The pick of the output of Fox, Pathe, Vitagraph, and Universal are offered patrons, together with any other good subjects which the market affords toward rounding out a balanced program. Advertising in the local newspapers is religiously followed, and results, says Mr. Gregory, prove he has found the correct system.

"I always find the NEWS a wonderful aid, in fact would feel lost without it" he concludes.

HARRY M. KIRKMAN started in 1916 with the Strand theatre, Hays, Kansas, and has stuck with it ever since. He adds his voice to the almost unanimous report of prosperous conditions, this in spite of the fact that his house seats 1000 in a town of 3750. So it would seem the townfolk depend on Mr. Kirkman's picture selections, and find them right. The programs of three distributing concerns are used by the Strand, and in addition Mr. Kirkman has signed up for the "Big Four."

A daily attendance of 1000 at twenty two cents admission is the Strand's average—and quite an average at that considering it means one out of every four people in his town. Mr. Kirkman is kind enough to declare the NEWS the best trade paper, and wish it long life.

Six to Six Hundred in Three Years

The Remarkable Growth of the Miami Valley Exhibitors League with the Story of Its Founders and the Work It Is Doing for Exhibitor Organization

THREE years ago, when the motion picture business in Dayton, Ohio, was confined almost exclusively to what was ordinarily termed "picture shows," six exhibitors met in the lobby of the old Phillips House to discuss ways and means of securing first-run pictures without conflicting with the interests of each other.

Nothing much was done and nothing in the nature of a "league" was contemplated at this first meeting of the motion picture exhibitors of Dayton, but from this small beginning grew one of the most important organizations of motion picture exhibitors to be found anywhere in the United States.

With a small membership confined to the men engaged in the motion picture business in Dayton, Ohio, the organization struggled long attempting to do many things and succeeding in but a few. Municipal and state regulations of one kind or another developed with great rapidity and owing to the small number of exhibitors in comparison to the population the voice of the showman in protest could not be heard.

About this time—or in March, 1919—a meeting of the then existing organization was called by John Seifert and a reorganization effected, bringing into existence the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League as it now stands. The officers of the organization are elected annually and at present consist of the following: John Seifert, manager of the Rialto and Ideal theatres, president; Ollie Schaeffer, manager of the Grand, vice-president; A. F. Kinsler, manager of the Elite, secretary; Bert Fiala, manager of the Alambra, treasurer; Theodore Lindsey, manager of the Apollo, trustee.

The board of directors is composed of John Seifert, Theodore Lindsey, Mark Gates, Julius Leopold and Al Kinsler. This board, elected annually by the members at large, acts officially for the League, reporting at the monthly meeting of the members.

Officers of Miami Valley Exhibitors League: Al Kinsler, John Seifert and Bert Fiala

The meeting place originally selected was one room in the Rauh Building, where the routine business of the local membership was cared for.

As first organized, the membership was limited to the exhibitors of Dayton, but with the increase of state and municipal regulation it was thought advisable to widen the field in order to secure more serious consideration of the exhibitors' viewpoint. With this in mind the membership was extended to cover Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia and Kentucky and from a list of six the membership was steadily grown until it now numbers five hundred and twenty-seven with an average of twenty applications coming unsolicited every week.

Many phases of the exhibition business are being cared for and under the able guidance of the president, Mr. Seifert, many things are being accomplished that tend to make smooth the path of the man who shows pictures.

Through the activities of this league the Wurlitzer Company of Cincinnati and the Q. R. S. Company of Chicago, are cutting music for automatic players that can be used tax free and through the activities of the league its members are being supplied with lists of music suitable for use in motion picture theatres that can be used without the payment of the music tax or royalty fee.

When the question of legalizing the showing of pictures on Sunday was being discussed it was this organization that got busy; and when some enthusiastic councilman, guided, no doubt, by what he considers the good of the community, introduces an ordinance that seriously conflicts with the rights of the exhibitor it is this organization that calls public attention to it and secures for the exhibitor a hearing and serious consideration.

The League long ago outgrew its original location and is now located in comfortable and commodious quarters in rooms numbered 913-914-915-916-917-918-919-920 and 921 of the Rauh Building, where the executive offices are maintained and where the members find many of the conveniences of the modern club.

The past summer the League rented a camp conveniently located on one of the nearby rivers and all of the midsummer meetings were held out of doors where the members could enjoy a bit of relaxation and transact the needed business at the same time.

The Miami Valley Exhibitors' League is affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State of which Sydney Cohen is president, and the constant exchange of views is proving beneficial to both organizations.

The growth of the local League has been phenominal and indicates the high regard in which the exhibitors generally hold the officials and directors of the organization.

There are many ways in which the members and motion picture exhibitors in general can be benefited by organizations of this type and there are many exceptional plans under consideration for the improvement of showing conditions.

When the membership has grown a bit, co-operative buying of pictures is one of the big features being discussed and to this end plans have already been formed to establish a clearing house or booking agency, through which the members of the League may secure at minimum cost the pictures they desire to show.

Declare War To The Finish In Texas

Frenzied Battle on to Buy and Build Theatres—Newspaper Advertisements Used to Carry Fight to Public

MILLIONS of dollars are being thrown into a frenzied orgy of theatre buying and building, and thousands of dollars are being used in advertising space in a battle of business giants for the film supremacy of the Southwest. S. A. Lynch, who already owns scores of theatres in the Southeast, is daily adding to his holdings in the Southwest; he is building a $500,000 thaetre in Dallas, in Waco he has bought three houses outright, in Houston he purchased the Liberty, the largest theatre in that city. and is reported to have options on two ground sites of $100,000 each in Houston and San Antonio in addition.

On the other hand, leading exhibitors in the cities named, and in others where Lynch will probably invade, have banded together, and in a round robin through the medium of a page ad in Texas and Oklahoma newspapers have announced that they are in the market to purchase theatre property in Texas, Oklahoma or Arkansas. Scores of scouts are daily making the rounds of the big towns in the territory named and, be it known, there are 35 towns in Texas alone with more than 10,000 inhabitants.

Drawn Up in Battle Array

The fight started with the announcement of the new season and policy by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises which handles Paramount-Artcraft pictures in this territory.

The Lynch Enterprises wanted what they considered just and equitable rentals in the cities wherein all this fight is going on, and they announced if they failed to get them they would either build or buy houses in those cities in which to house their product.

In Dallas, the film centre of the Southwest, which is largely controlled by E. H. Hulsey and his three big houses, the Old Mill, Hippodrome and Queen, there hasn't been a first run Paramount picture shown in some time. On the contrary, Hulsey in a full page addressed to both the public and exhibitors throughout the territory, announced that he, as well as Levy at Fort Worth, Boland at Oklahoma City, and Lytle at San Antonio, had booked the entire product of Fox, Metro, First National, Goldwyn, Select and United Artists', as well, according to the ad, "as independent productions, including Pathe, Universal, World, Hodkinson, Realart, Mutual and others."

This page ad, signed by Hulsey, Levy, Boland and Lytle, appeared last Sunday simultaneously in the Dallas News, the Dallas Times-Herald, the Houston Chronicle, the San Antonio Express and the Daily Oklahoman.

The advertisement had a combination appeal to the public and to other exhibitors. Under the head "Better Pictures—the Slogan" it listed the product for which these exhibitors have signed from the companies named above. There followed commendation of the business methods of these organizations with the declaration that they were confining their activities to producing and had no desire to enter into competition with exhibitors.

A footnote to the advertisement headed "A Letter to Exhibitors of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas," declared: "We are not frightened by the proposed plans of other companies to build theatres in our towns . . . . We have already plans WHICH WE WILL FULFILL to erect new and greater theatres . . . . WE WILL ALWAYS HAVE THE BEST THEATRES IN OUR RESPECTIVE TOWNS . . . . If you want to sell your theatre we are in the market to buy theatres in Texas, Oklahoma, or Arkansas."

Lynch, on the other hand, states that he is an exhibitor as well as an exchange man, and that he is simply adding to his chain of theatres by going into towns wherein there are good openings for motion picture theatres.

Mr. Hulsey likewise owns theatres in Waco, Houston and Galveston, and thus far Lynch has entered into every town except Galveston. But there are ramifications to the fight farther reaching than the cities mentioned. Every

ENDORSEMENT IS WITHDRAWN

THE Public Health Service has announced that its endorsement on the films "Fit to Win," "End of the Road," and "Open Your Eyes" has been withdrawn.

It is stated this action was taken in order that the educational, medical and legislative phases of the venereal disease program of the various state and municipal health organizations may be coordinated.

The action is declared to relate only to commercialization of the films, which are credited by the Service with educational value.

MURRAY OF ATLANTA TELLS OF EXHIBITORS' THEATRE ORGANIZATION

W. T. MURRAY, General Manager of the Exhibitors Theatre Organization at Atlanta, Ga., takes exception to an article in a New York paper which stated that a "Southern Booking Combine had been started by Charles Kessnich, Arthur Locas, Jake and Percy Wells, and Wm. Oldknow, with Wm. Murray as chief booker."

Mr. Murray denies this and declares that no man can hold a share of stock in the organization who does not own or operate a theatre.

He states that it is not the intention of the Organization to fight film companies other than those that have affiliated or lined themselves up with a certain interest which Mr. Murray says is trying to control the motion picture industry in that terriory.

Exhibitor Also Distributing

Gusdanovic, Running Five Cleveland Houses, Takes Leaf of Producer Book

WHILE it is nothing new for producers and exhibitors to buy up theatres, and go into the exhibiting end of the game, Paul Gusdanovic, owner and manager of five Cleveland theatres has turned the tables and besides running his houses, will dabble in the distributing end. He has just bought Ohio rights for the new series of Clara Kimball Young pictures and has incorporated the Equity Pictures Corporation of Ohio to distribute them.

Gusdanovic is president of the organization, which will maintain headquarters in the Sloan Bldg. Lew Thompson, who has been assistant manager of the Cleveland Universal exchange, will have full control of the office, beginning next week.

Mr. Gusdanovic says he will not confine himself to the Clara Kimball Young pictures, but will buy feature productions for distribution as he sees fit. "We shall have no set number of pictures for release," Mr. Gusdanovic explained. "I am opposed to buying pictures, just to have something to sell. Being an exhibitor, I know what the exhibitors need. And what they need is good pictures. We have more than plenty mediocre pictures on the market. It shall therefor be my policy to purchase only very good pictures. Maybe there will be only one a year. Maybe two. Maybe a dozen. It is not the number of releases upon which we shall make our emphasis, but upon the quality.

"I am a firm believer in the value of big pictures, whether new or old and I have just had a notable example of what a good picture will do whether it is brand new or whether it isn't. Our two downtown houses the Strand and the Orpheum are so called first-run houses. That means that we show only the best pictures in those houses. It does not mean, however, that because somebody else has run a good picture, we have to exclude it from our theatre be camouflaged within the body of a regular human-interest or news story. But it's there, and the results will speak for themselves when the paper time comes.

Born ourself in a hell-box, we might say; raised on printers ink, and school in a country shop for graduation into the metropolitan field, (and now wishing we were back in the country again again), our sense naturally runs to a nose-for-news scent, but even so, we search in vain in our own field in Portland for every-day motion picture stories that we know are buried in every managerial bosom; stories that in the old days before h. c. of I. investigations; presidential tours and fusses in the land of Villa and the tortilla, we could squeeze in an page one, and which now would at least make the readers of our motion picture page realize that the news there was not written by a press-agent.

House managers, 'tis true, have their own ideas of "news" but their ideas are not those of the editorial staff of the newspaper. The manager, with something he wants printed in the news columns, will, 16 to 1, call the newspapers' advertising manager and tell him about it. The theatre manager is satisfied that it will be printed. Probably it will be, but even so the theatre man's disposition to look at the business purely from the business office standpoint rather rankles in the breast of the motion picture editor, who thus labors rather to the disadvantage of himself and of his sources of news as well.

There is a way of getting "news" publicity via the advertising department's stuffed club. There is a better way of getting it via tactful confidential consideration of the "movie" editor.

Give us the real news. We'll see to it that it gets into print.

Legitimate House Now Running Pictures

The actors' strike in New York has changed utterly the policy of the Academy of Music in Fall River. Instead of running plays there, Manager Boas has canceled some big road shows and will run moving pictures instead. The theatre will open on September 8.

General Manager for Realart

John S. Woody, Formerly General Sales Manager, Has Had Rapid Business Rise

John S. Woody, new general manager for Realart Pictures Corp.

FOLLOWING his successful trip to the middle West and the Pacific Coast, John S. Woody, heretofore General Sales Manager, has been promoted to the position of General Manager for Realart Pictures Corporation. Mr. Woody, who arrived in New York last week, stepped into the duties of his new office at once and already is busily engaged on his larger sphere of activities.

This first promotion, which has been made by Arthur S. Kane, Realart's President, comes as the fitting climax in a career in the motion picture industry which has been marked by the rapidity and advancement of Mr. Woody's progress. Commencing six years ago as special salesman covering the whole Pacific Coast for the General Film Company in four months he had earned the managership. After nearly a year as Butte Manager Mr. Woody was promoted to the management of the more important Seattle office.

The Mutual Film Corporation heads had watched Woody's rise and when he seemed to have reached the limit of progress as Seattle manager of the General, J. C. Graham, then General Manager, succeeded in securing him as Pacific Northwest Manager for Mutual. Here for two years he continued to reside in Seattle, managing the Mutual office there and controlling the Portland and Spokane exchanges.

In 1916 Mr. Woody came East and joined the Triangle Distribution forces in New York City, from which he became Chicago manager where his salesmanship record attracted the attention of Mr. Kane, then General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation.

As a result, Mr. Woody became Field Manager for that organization with the entire United States as his territory, and shortly afterwards was elevated to the post of Sales Manager. It was from his work in this position that Mr. Kane grew to realize the full value of Mr. Woody's sales ability, his fitness for executive position, and his capacity for carrying his plans through to a successful conclusion.

At the time of the organization of Realart Picture Corporation, therefore, one of Mr. Kane's first appointments was that of John S. Woody to the post of General Sales Manager.

Tries Service by Air; Gets Lost in Clouds

Attempting to give his exhibitors service in an emergency, James V. Bryson, manager of the Universal Film Branch in Minneapolis, became lost in the clouds in an aeroplane in which he set out to deliver films to Lewistown, Minn., recently.

The trip followed the failure of "The Hearts of Humanity" picture to reach Lewistown in time for a widely advertised showing. The theatre mangement appealed to the Minneapolis office to do something, and as it was too late to send another film by wire Manager Bryson phoned the Curtis field and arranged for the trip. The cloud bank interfered with and delayed the trip, but Bryson and the pilot safely landed at Winona in time to deliver the picture for the evening show at Lewistown.

Proctor-Keith Houses Join State League

Accessions to the ranks of the organized exhibitors of the State of New York are reported as coming in rapidly.

"The Motion Picture Exhibitor's League of the State of New York" said Executive Secretary Berman in giving out a list of prominent recent recruits "today numbers on its roll of membership the best known and the most progressive exhibitors in the State" I have just received applications for membership from all the Proctor-Keith houses showing motion pictures in this State. I was much gratified in receiving assurances of hearty support from the heads of the Proctor-Keith Circuit.

Preparing for the Ad Clubs Convention

Harry Levey, head of the Universal Industrial and Educational departments is rapidly pushing plans for the participation of the Screen Advertisers' Association in the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at New Orleans, September 21 to 25, to a conclusion.

One of the Screen Association's most interesting exhibits will be a complete chronicle of the history of advertising from the time of the Stone Age to the present day.

United Theatres Officer Out

C. R. Seelye, Secretary of Concern Resigns; C. C. Johnson Is His Successor

ON Sept. 8 J. A. Berst, President, and C. R. Seelye, Secretary of United Pictures Theatres Of America, Inc., issued a joint statement announcing the resignation of Mr. Seelye from that corporation. The statement follows:

"After an association of one year and a half in United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., and two years previously at Pathe, we have for the time being at least, severed our association, Mr. Seelye having resigned and sold all his interest in the company to Mr. Berst.

"Mr. Seelye leaves United with nothing but good will towards Mr. Berst and United and the only reason for leaving was the difference of opinion as to its policy regarding certain matters.

"In leaving the company, Mr. Berst wishes Mr. Seelye success in his new enterprise which is soon to start."

At a meeting of the Board of Directors following Mr. Seelye's resignation as secretary, Mr. C. C. Johnson was elected secretary of the company.

Mr. Johnson has had a very successful career in the motion picture industry. For some time he was connected with Pathe in its New York branch. Somewhat over a year ago he joined the United Picture Theatres of America, organization as manager of its New York branch. A short time ago he was made business manager of United Picture Production Corp., the recently formed company which is to manufacture a series of elaborate superfeature productions for United.

Mr. Johnson's personality has won for him a large personal following, so that he brings to his new office not only ripe experience but also the good wishes of hundreds of friends in the industry as well as, of the entire personnel of the United Picture Theatres organization.

Stanley House Opened

The Capitol Theatre, the newest motion picture theatre in Philadelphia built by the Stanley Company of America and to be operated under its direction, will throw open its doors to the public for the first time on Monday, September 15th. The finishing touches are now being placed in and out of the house and it will be one of the handsomest of its kind in the country, presenting only the highest class of film features and organ music.

The author of "From Now On," Frank L. Packard. The feature is to be a vehicle for George Walsh, the Fox star

Pryor's Band Engaged for Capitol Theatre

Managing Director E. J. Bowes of the Capitol Theatre, New York, has announced the engagement of Pryor's band for that huge amusement institution. The organization will be taken over as a unit and renamed in honor of "the largest theatre in the world," being known henceforth as Pryor's Capitol Band.

Arthur Pryor, the veteran bandmaster, will be musical director of the Capitol Theatre as well.

Another important announcement is that of Ned Wayburn of "girl and music show" fame as producing director through amicable arrangement with Florenz Ziegfeld.

Mr. Wayburn declined to amplify or elaborate the brief announcement of his excursion into the new field, merely confirming it and declaring his plans too indefinite as yet to justify an attempt to go into details.

John Wenger has been engaged as art director.

Fox Player Drowned

Jesse Washington, New York, a pugilist, at least in the moving pictures, was drowned at Newport last week while staging a fight on the deck of a submarine for a Fox production.

Washington and another man, John O'Brien, were supposed to be caught by the camera fighting on the deck of a submarine, which would sink at the critical moment in the encounter. After a scrap which is said to have had all the earmarks of the genuine, the submarine fulfilled its part of the play. O'Brien quickly appeared on the surface of the water, but Washington never rose.

Pearl White Escapes Hurt in Crash

Pearl White, the Fox star, barely escaped severe injuries in Chicago while making an appeal for the benefit of the Tanner orphans. From the running board of her automobile, Miss White was addressing a street jammed with people who had followed her from one of Ascher Brothers' theatres, when a small truck raced into the lady's machine. The star escaped by her great presence of mind, vaulting to safety as the crash came.

EVERY LINE A BIT OF NEWS

Denver

WITH rumors by the dozen following in the wake of the announcement that the Rivoli, Strand, Isis and Place theatres have been sold to William Fox, the one outstanding certainty is that there will be radical changes in booking. Not only Fox productions, but the best pictures of other companies will be shown. Three other houses remain on Curtis street under different management. What their policies will be is a matter for conjecture.

Edward L. Hayman of St. Louis will manage the Rivoli. H. C. McDonald of Los Angeles is to manage the Isis and Plaza. Both men come to Denver with enviable records as exhibitors.

Manager H. E. Ellison, of the Rialto and Princess theatres, ushered in Paramount-Artcraft week with several innovations in his theatres. At the Rialto he enlarged his orchestra to twelve pieces, under the capable direction of Maurice Perlmutter. The Princess orchestra was also enlarged. Beside liberal newspaper advertising and billboards, Manager Ellison had printed several thousand copies of his house organ, which were sent out on a mailing list and distributed at the theatres. He opened the week with Elsie Ferguson in "The Witness for the Defence" and Wallace Reid in "The Valley of Giants."

Various charitable institutions in the city of Denver will profit by the kindness of William Fox, the new owner of the Rivoli, Strand, Isis and Plaza theatres who wired his local representative, John Zanft, to give ten per cent of the first week's gross earnings to charity.

Buffalo

JAMES BAILEY, for twelve years connected with the Old and New Academy theatre, during which time he has been treasurer and assistant manager, has been appointed manager of Keith's theatre, Main street. Mr. Bailey takes the place left vacant by J. Wallingford, who recently took over the Como and Abbott theatres in the South Park district.

Oscar E. Florine of Chicago has been appointed American Film Company representative at the Buffalo Pathe office. Mr. Florine has been for the past nine years with Mutual, Universal and other offices.

The big Shea Court street vaudeville house in Buffalo has been turned over to motion picture presentation on Sundays. The musical accompaniment is furnished by the theatre orchestra under the direction of Herman E. Schultz and Greek Evans of the Rialto theatre, New York was soloist at the first presentation September 7. An elaborate stage setting, prepared under the direction of Harold B. Franklin is one of the features of the show. Prices are 10, 25 and 35 and the show runs continuous from 12:30 to 11 P. M.

Walter Linder of New York, formerly advance man for Fritzi Scheff has been appointed exploitation representative at the Buffalo Famous Players-Lasky office.

Henry E. Wilkinson, manager of the local Realart offices has engaged J. Earl Wells, formerly with World and Mell R. Edwards as salesmen. Mr. Wilkinson has just returned from an extensive trip through his territory and reports a fine bunch of contracts as a result.

Cincinnati

ASCHLER BROTHERS have applied for a building permit for the construction of their new $250,000 theatre at Seventh and Vine streets, Cincinnati, work on which has already been started.

Goldwyn's Cincinnati office started out with a vim to observe "Goldwyn Week," beginning September 8th, to celebrate the third anniversary of the company, by signing up the new $250,000 Auditorium theatre in Dayton, and the new Riviera theatre at Anderson, Indiana, another quarter of a million dollar house.

Mr. T. M. Eckert has severed his connections as manager of the Film Clearing House to join Paramount's office.

A DOUBLE APPEAL TO ADVERTISERS AND EXHIBITORS

EACH week exhibitor subscribers to MOTION PICTURE NEWS in the Middle States and far Western territory receive together with the regular issue of the NEWS a separate publication titled "The West Coast" and "The Central States"—in reality two publications. These territorial sections give the exhibitor the intimate home news of his own activity and that of his neighbors, thus offering advertisers in MOTION PICTURE NEWS the benefit of a national trade publication to which is added a local interest.

Among the interesting news items found in "The Central States" and "The West Coast" this week are:

"Fond Du Lac exhibitors and their musicians are at odds owing to the musicians' demands."

"Elkhart, Indiana, managers handle musicians' and operators' strike by a straight appeal to public, and win sympathy."

And there are lots more.

Manager Rudolph Knoepfle announces the appointment of Mr. Ralph Kinzler as assistant manager of the local Fox office. Mr. Kinzler was formerly conected with Universal.

Irwin Bajarsky has become connected with Fox's Cincinnati office in the capacity of booker. Mr. Bajarsky was for five years the booker of the General Film Company.

Chris Sander, Sedam street, Cincinnati, has purchased property on West Sixth street, adjoining Bold Face Park, and is about to let contracts for the building of a new motion picture theatre.

The C. C. Hite Attractions Company, which was recently incorporated in the State of Ohio, announces the opening of a Cleveland branch about the 15th of September. Mr. C. C. Hite, President of the company, was in Cleveland last week looking at several locations, and will make an announcement in regard to the establishment of the new office very shortly. "The Profiteer," their first big release, is booking very rapidly.

S. D. Pelzman, formerly district representative of the Inter-Ocean Film Import and Export Company, has joined the forces of Mark Goldman, as manager of Realart Pictures Corporation.

Dallas

BOTH W. L. Merrill, manager, and James B. Kelly, roadman, for the Independent Sales Corporation, Dallas, will go to New York to accept positions with Frank Hall since the sale of the Independent holdings to S. A. Lynch. Mr. Merrill made a hit as exchange manager in the Southwest city, while "Smiling" Jimmie Kelly, created some records in Arkansas with the Independent product.

Miss Gertrude R. Deppen, who has held several responsible advertising positions in Dallas, recently was named as head of the exhibitor exploitation in the Dallas office of Goldwyn. Miss Deppen will be sent to various towns that have booked Goldwyn pictures to help the exhibitor put the productions over. She is the second woman holding such a position in the United States, the other being also with Goldwyn, in the Omaha office.

Cleveland

LEON D. NETTER, general manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Cleveland announces that he has just arranged to handle the Ohio and Kentucky distribution of "The House Without Children." This is the picture written, scenarioized and filmed by Robert McLaughlin. In addition to this big feature production, Mr. Netter has secured the Ohio rights for the one-reel Chaplin comedy, "Some Nerve."

This is just a sample, Mr. Netter says, of the class of pictures that the Masterpiece Film Attractions will soon have ready for release under their extensive fall policy.

H. E. Elder, for over a year, manager of the Cleveland Pathe exchange has shifted his allegiance from Cleveland, and Pathe, to Pittsburgh, and Paramount. Elder's successor has not yet been named.

Tom Carroll is managing the Standard theatre, Cleveland, now. Carroll is about the best known and best liked exhibitors in the city. He has had a long time to make friends, during his connection with the Liberty, Mall and Euclid theatres, where he has been manager during the course of the past five years.

The Princess theatre, a 500 seat house is trying the experiment of runing an all-night show. One advantage the house has is in being located on Euclid avenue where everyone who is out late passes at some time or other during the wee hours.

Texas Towns

THE Victory Motion Picture Corporation has been formed at Houston, with a capital stock of $10,000 by C. J. Carey, H. W. Carter and L. W. Wagner.

The Queen will be the name of a new show in Richmond. H. A. Kruger is owner and W. A. Riemenschneider manager.

B. B. Butler and B. Legg, of Trenton, have purchased the Odeon theatre at Whitewright from Morehead and Mangrum.

Evan Bagley and Graves Burke are associated in a project for a picture theatre at Cherokee.

Improvements have been made to the Odeon theatre at Robstown.

Contract for a $60,000 show house, the Grand, at Electra, Texas, has been let to the Stewart Construction Co. of Fort Worth.

The Majestic theatre at Eastland was sold to James Carrigan by Tom Harrell, for a consideration of $40,000.

Letters from Readers

Would Like to "See Them in Hell"

Motion Picture News
New York City.

Herewith I hand you a copy of "Trade News" adopted by the New Orleans Film Exchanges.

What will these crooks start next? I have a few hundred dollars advance deposits with these film companies without any security at all, and for them to hold my money and demand payment of films before they leave exchange I say is a dirty imposition on the Exhibitor.

One firm sent a telegram that cost them at least one dollar about a 2-reel comedy that would not be shipped unless the money was cash in hand. I have $22.13 advance deposits with this firm and the comedy in question cost only $4.00. I think that the Exhibitors ought to see them in hell further than an iron-wedge could drop in a week before they stand for such "monkey-stuff."

If they would refund the deposits why it would be different, but to hold our money and make such an unreasonable demands I think is overstepping the laws of film shopping.

The N. M. P. E. O. A. certainly need to be organized stronger and demand more respect from film companies with their unreasonable demands.

I think that the N. M. P. E. O. A. should use one sheet each week in the M. P. News discussing these issues and urging each Exhibitor in America to become active members and feel that he is a part of the great body and use his aid, and money, to help put our rights through.

The country town Exhibitor has to stand for everything. They know comparatively nothing about the N. M. P. E. O. A. and never have been solicited direct, to become a member of the order. I am speaking from experience. I happened to notice in the M. P. News that the convention would meet in St. Louis and joined also attended through curiosity. Of course I knew that the N. M. P. E. O. A. were in existence and I found that about all when I got there.

Unless sometbing is done, the order never will amount to anything beyond meeting every year and having a few days' good time.

We have simply got to go after them as a whole or be "muddled" at their will.

Our demands are reasonable and our rights should be respected.

Yours truly

Motion Picture News
New York, N. Y.

What can an exhibitor do when a film exchainge positively will not answer your letters?

In April I booked "Oh, You Women," from Famous Players-Lasky. Gave them my deposit and in a few days received my copy of contract. When play date came along picture did not arrive. I had advertised in a big way using from one to twenty four sheet boards, heralds, newspaper and special advertising on program and dodgers. I wrote them asking cause for delay; they wrote back asking from whom and when I had booked picture.

After I had explained that I had their name to contract and on back of my check, they agreed to give me the picture gratis to remunerate me for my advertising loss, my loss of profits, the loss of patron confidence, etc. I thougbt that this was as much as I could get, therefore, accepted proposition.

When the picture came due to be shown again they sent statement charging me with same plus a raise of 20 per cent. I immediately wrote them that they had agreed to give me this picture gratis. I received no reply. When picture came, it was parcel post C. O. D.

That is only one of their transactions. I had a deposit with them on a star series contract. When the contract expired they added $17.83 for accumulated charges, which was another parcel post C. O. D. At present they have my deposit on contract, deposit on "Oh, You Women," the C. O. D. on "Oh, You Women," and the $17.83 already mentioned.

Another thing I would like to know why is it that a firm advertising that they do a cash in advance or C. O. D. business lets items accumulate during life of contract and puts it all into one big C. O. D. at the expiration of contract sending a Parcel Post C. O. D. on last picture.

Yours very truly
G. B. McFarling, owner,

Truart Moves Into the Eastern Film Studio

The Truart Motion Picture Corporation of New York has taken over the moving picture plant on Elmwood avenue in Providence, R. I., formerly occupied by the Eastern Film Company and started on September 8th to make pictures. The big plant has been renovated and refurnished for the company which it is said intends to produce some big features here.

Sentiment Growing for Tax Repeal

More than sixty thousand motion picture theatre goers through the country have signed petitions asking for the repeal of the motion picture taxes. This accumulation of public sentiment is the result of the campaign being waged by the Committee on Legislation and Tax of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America under the leadership of Louis F. Blumenthal and active state directors throughout the country.

It is said to be the sentiment now in Congress that something should be done to relieve the motion picture theatres of the country from the double taxation under which they are compelled to do business. Every day brings new additions to the list of Congressmen who favor the repeal or revision of the motion picture taxes.

Among prominent members of the House of Representatives who have come out strongly for the repeal is Congressman W. A. Rodenberg of Illinois.

Los Angeles Stages a "Premier Week"

"Premier Week" might properly be the designation of the period in Los Angeles beginning August 31st, for three productions of special interest, each of which inaugurated a new system of production, received their first public showing in any city during that time.

The three offerings were "The World and Its Woman," first of the new series of Geraldine Farrar subjects under the Goldwyn banner; "The Miracle Man," George Loane Tucker's Paramount-Artcraft special; and "Back Stage," the initial Fatty Arbuckle comedy under the new Paramount-Artcraft system of distribution.

First of these to receive the attention of film critics and producers in Los Angeles, was "The Miracle Man," which was staged at the Kinema theatre for an extended run. This screen version of George M. Cohan's celebrated stage play, received highly favorable comment from those who viewed the production.

The other subjects were also enthusiastically received.

Three in Film Theft Committee Net

Three arrests in New York City are the most recent result of the operations of the Film Theft Committee of the National Association.

A man whose name was given as Morris Cohen, alias Mike Coan, is said to be one of those accused. Pioneer films were said to have been dealt with, a Western exporter innocently being in the transaction. Detective Sergeant Joseph Russo is credited with the arrest.

Theodore Potter, a negro elevator man and an alleged accomplice was also said to have been taken into custody. The accomplice is declared to have made a full confession, corroborated by the man Potter. Both were released on bail. Cohen was held in $5,000 bail for a Grand Jury hearing, according to the Committee's announcement.

CLEVELAND MUSICIANS STRIKE; OPERATOR TROUBLE SETTLED

THE musicians of the motion picture houses in Cleveland walked out on strike on September 7, affecting every house except the Hippodrome, which employs non-union help. A threatened strike of picture operators was avoided through the signing of a new wage agreement, increasing the weekly wage from $25 to $30, and allowing $7.50 for Sundays and holidays—six hours to constitute a day.

The musicians are getting $39 a week and three dollars extra for rehearsals. They demand a flat wage of fifty dollars a week. A nominal increase was proferred and rejected by the union.

Oregon Deal Widens in Scope

Jensen and Von Herberg Acquire More Theatres Besides Seven in Portland

FURTHER details of the deal whereby seven Portland playhouses as well as houses in other Coast cities are acquired by Jensen and Von Herberg interests, as was reported by wire to the News last week, are now available.

Control of seven of Portland's principal motion picture theatres, including the Liberty, the Columbia, the Star, the Majestic, the Peoples' and two suburban theatres is announced, as well as a policy of further expansion of the big circuit thus created in the northwest. The financial consideration in the transaction is said to have been large, but has not been publicly disclosed.

In addition to the Portland phase of the merger, the transaction includes four of Tacoma's leading motion picture theatres, the Victory, the Rialto, the Colonial and the Strand. Two houses at Butte, Mont., are also taken in, the Rialto and the Peoples', while the Liberty Theatre, Medford, Oregon, formerly controlled by the Peoples' Amusement Company, also passes under the new management.

Projected plans of the new management include the construction, in the near future, of modern motion picture playhouses in Everett, Bremerton and Yakima, Wash., while other deals now pending will provide important additions to the circuit before the end of another season.

Head offices of the controlling company will be maintained in Portland under the direct supervision of Mr. Jensen, who has been a resident of Portland for the past two years.

Jensen & Von Herberg purchased the Victory Theatre in Tacoma three weeks ago. Since then the control of three other Tacoma theatres has passed into their hands, adding to the circuit the Rialto, Strand and Colonial. H. G. Moore will remain as resident manager in Tacoma.

It is also announced that the Liberty theatre in Medford, acquired by Jensen & Von Herberg, will shortly be replaced by a palatial theatre.

Timely Belgium Film Ready

Educational Offers Subject Containing Views of Cardinal Mercier

AN exclusive "close up" of brave Cardinal Mercier, in his own garden at Malines, is one of the features of "Belgium, the Broken Kingdom"—first of the new productions of the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross to be released through the exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America.

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational organization, announces that the subject has been shipped from the laboratory, and that exhibitors have the opportunity to secure the picture for use simultaneously with Cardinal Mercier's visit to this country. September 17 and 19 are officially designated as "Cardinal Mercier Day" and "Belgium Day," thus providing a tie-up with newspaper headlines that will be of tremendous value in exploiting "Belgium, the Broken Kingdom." Immediately following these holidays, the Cardinal will begin a triumphant tour of the larger cities, continuing the national publicity in connection with his name for a period of weeks.

Every effort has been made to make of "Belgium, the Broken Kingdom" a travel picture of unusual merit. Red Cross cameramen were allowed first access to the war zone, and their extraordinary resources and advantages were devoted to securing "travelog" material that would be of permanent interest. Human-interest pictures of the country and its people, and interesting subjects that have been photographed have been retained in the new series of Red Cross releases, excluding all "news weekly stuff" and "war pictures" which have but temporary interest value.

The Red Cross series, according to Mr. Hammons' statement, is to be a continuous succession of single-reel travel subjects, made possible by the unusual opportunities which are extended to Red Cross cameramen in foreign lands. Like "The Red Cross Magazine," which was a medium for the distribution of Red Cross information during war-times, and has now been completely reorganized as a permanent addition to the field of first-class magazines, so the new motion picture productions, released through the Educational Films Corporation of America are to become a permanent series of travel pictures of general interest, with the unusual facilities of the American Red Cross as a guarantee of continued quality.

Major Warren Bigelow Is Honored

Health Commissioner Royal S. Copeland presented Major Warren Bigelow, U. S. A., with a beautiful, solid gold, jeweled watch as a token of appreciation from the personnel of the Re-employment Bureau for Soldiers, Sailors and Marines when the director of the service men's job organization was given a testimonial dinner in the red room at Allair's, 143 East 17th street. About 125 persons were present.

Seated at the guest table were Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exihibtors' League of the State of New York; Charles Blumenthal, Herbert N. Strauss, Martin Dodge, J. D. Wansor, Rowland Haynes, Walter T. Dieck and Miss Alice Carpenter, of the Mayor's Committee.

In making the presentation speech, Dr. Copeland, who acted as toastmaster, said the gift was an expression of friendship on the part of the personnel of the bureau. Responding, Major Bigelow expressed his thanks and told of the pleasure he had experienced in being associated with the hosts of the evening, practically all of whom were formerly in the service. Major Bigelow mentioned that positions had been found for more than 17,300 former soldiers, sailors and marines since the bureau was opened in April.

Henry Cole, director of motion picture publicity for the Re-employment Bureau, who was chairman of the dinner committee, was responsible for the success of the affair. Others on the committee were Michael Meiselman, treasurer; Miss Anna E. Vanson, secretary; L. H. Sullivan, H. T. Broome, E. W. Drake and F. A. Giffin.

Virginians Sold for Tax Repeal

The Virginia Exhibitors Association added their efforts in telling fashion to the campaign for repeal of Motion Picture taxes, by sending forth a strong circular letter to all exhibitors.

Part of the letter follows:

"If the exhibitors of this state Get Together and write or wire their senators and congressman and forward petitions the sentiment in favor of the tax repeal will be so overwhelming that something will be done. All petitions forwarded by you to the Congressman from your district go, as a matter of course, to the Committee on Ways and Means. Let that Committee know, before the hearing, that the country is just as anxious to repeal the tax on a poor man's theatre as it was to repeal the tax on soda water.

"For your information, in the last two weeks fifteen congressmen have signified their intention to vote for the repeal of the taxes on Motion Picture theatres. Just a little effort on your part can get a majority of the Virginia congressmen to do the same thing."

Big Bethlehem House

The Kurtz Bros. of Bethlehem, Pa., manufacturers of fine wood work, have broken ground to erect a $300,000 theatre for vaudeville and motion pictures with a seating capacity 1700.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY ACQUIRES VALUABLE PROPERTY ON BROADWAY IN TIMES SQUARE

THE Putnam Building, extending on the west side of Broadway, from Forty-third to Forty-fourth Street, was purchased Thursday, September 11, by Famous Players-Lasky.

Adolph Zukor negotiated the deal with Robert E. Simon, the real estate operator, who headed a syndicate which secured the option on this valuable property last June.

No definite statement regarding the actual value of the property was made but in June Mr. Simon reported a price of $5,000,000 had been set upon it.

An office building will be erected on the site to house all the exclusive and business offices of Famous Players-Lasky located in New York.

Operations will not be started until the expiration of the present leasess in the Rogers Peet Building, on Fifth Avnue, and in the Godfrey Building, on Seventh Avenue, and in the Winfild Building on Fifth Avenue.

It is also announced that a motion picture theatre will be erected on the Putnam Building site with a greater seating capacity than any present Broadway house. The policy of the proposed new theatre will be the showing of big special productions for indefinite runs, with all seats reserved.

The rentals on the Putnam Building and Western Court, which is included in the deal, will approximate $320,000 annually.

Poli Announces Plans for "Twin" Theatres

Following the recent acquisition of the most central site in Bridgeport upon which to erect a theatre, Sylvester Z. Poli the theatrical magnate supplemented the announcement made by him after acquiring the property, to the effect that he would erect a new million dollar theatre on the site by announcing that he had changed his plans and will erect two theatres there each with a seating capacity of more than three thousand, a "twin theatre" arrangement.

Architect Thomas W. Lamb of New York City is now at work on the plans with everything to be in readiness for the breaking of ground about November 1st. One of the theatres is to be devoted to the combination vaudeville and picture play programs and the other will be a modern picture play house.

Sid Grauman Purchases Another Playhouse

Sid Grauman has purchased the controlling interest in the Rialto Theatre, a prominent down-town Los Angeles house managed by J. A. Quinn and will transform that place into one of Grauman's trio of exhibition palaces which he will have in Los Angeles, the third being the recently projected theatre which is to be built at Sixth and Hill streets.

Instead of limiting the Rialto Theatre to exhibiting second-run pictures, as is now the case, Sid Grauman, according to announcement made at the time of making the purchases, will devote it to the continuation of those special features which are now being shown at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, for one week, and then move them to the Rialto for an extended period.

Rialto Entertains Distinguished Guest

On September 9 in the afternoon an automobile drove up to the Rialto theatre, New York and immediately, from all directions, people came running and gathered around the theatre entrance. The reason for the excitement quickly became evident as General John J. Pershing stepped out of the machine and entered the theater.

On the bill was "Pershing, The Weapon of Destiny," the International Special, released by the Universal Film Mfg. Co.

Tax Repeal Campaign Grows

Committee of Exhibitors' Body Reports Favorably on Spirit Aroused

THE efforts of the Committee on Legislation and Tax of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, is apparently bearing fruit judging from reports of activity on this subject in various parts of the country.

A special meeting of the Exhibitors of New Hampshire has been called for September 9th at Boston, Mass. when the tax repeal campaign will be taken up. The meeting was announced this week in a letter sent by C. H. Bean of Franklin, N. H. to all exhibitors in that state. Mr. Bean was appointed State Director for New Hampshire and is making an active fight for the tax repeal.

Similar action is being taken in other states in view of the fact that Chairman Fordney of the Congressional Ways and Means Committee is to set a date for the hearing which he has promised exhibitors. State Director H. T. Nolan of Denver met the exhibitors of his state at a special meeting and resolutions indorsing the action of Louis F. Blumenthal, chairman of the Legislation and Tax Committee, has been sent forward to Washington.

Ten feet of signatures affixed to petitions asking Congress to repeal the motion picture taxes were forwarded during the week to Congressman Peters of Maine. The signers are residents of Eastport and Calais, Me.

The signatures were obtained through the efforts of Wilber A. Shea, prominent theatre owner of Eastport and Calais who has proved himself one of the most active exhibitors in the campaign forces.

In addition to obtaining signatures to petitions Mr. Shea wrote to each of the Congressmen from his state with the result that they expressed themselves favorably on the repeal and pledged themselves to vote for it if the Ways and Means Committee reported favorably on the pending repeal bills.

A number of the leading commercial organizations of the country are being interested in the tax repeal campaign. Through C. H. de Bruler of Georgia the National Chamber of Commerce, one of the most influential bodies of businessmen in the country, is considering an invitation to support the campaign.

Phil Gleichman of Detroit has already received a favorable reply from the Detroit Chamber of Commerce whose support he sought.

STUDIO EMPLOYEES' DEMANDS MAY INCREASE RENTALS

HIGHER film rentals throughout the United entire world, would apStates and in fact, the pear to be the final off-shoot of the demands of the various mechanics' unions and employees of the studios in Los Angeles and vicinity.

Their demands, submitted in the form of a written agreement to go into effect September first, call for a greater increased wage scale for carpenters, electricians, painters, grips, property men, gang foreman and unskilled labor, with further demands for overtime, Sunday and holiday work.

These demands were made on all the studios operating in Hollywood, and at a meeting of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, at which were present representatives of practically every studio in Los Angeles, it was agreed that the wage scale demanded by the unions be accepted. The Producers' Association was willing to get together with the union representatives and a United States Government mediator, as was done last year. This the Unions refused, and the Producers' Association was further conciliatory and agreed to meet the union representatives direct in order to endeavor to come to a mutally satisfactory agreement.

Enters Producer Ranks

William Alexander, district manager for the United Picture Theatres Corporation, with offices in Los Angeles, has become a producer. Mr. Alexander only recently stated that he is financially interested in "The Weakly Indigestion," the comic news weekly now being filmed in the studios of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, and of which A. Lincoln Miller is the director and editor.

day exhibitors in towns of 10,000 and over arriving in Dallas report that the Lynch people have made offers for their theatres. Spirited bidding for houses is reported in Little Rock, Hot Springs and Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

Organize in Southern Texas Also

Exhibitors of South Texas, feeling the need of an organization to fight for equitable rentals and to combat other problems, met last week at the Rice Hotel in Houston and organized the Texas Exhibitors' Circuit, electing these officers:

E. T. Peter, of Cureo and Yoakum, president.

H. H. Elliott, Corpus Christi, vice-president.

H. C. Stearns, Kingsville, secretary-treasurer.

Directors elected were Mr. Peter, O. A. Englebrecht of Temple, G. C. Cage of Mercedes, Henry Oscar of Calvert, E. L. Shubeck of El Campo, Sam Swartz of Eagle Pass and H. H. Staacke of Seguin.

It is understood that the Southern organization will not interfere with the workings of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association, which is composed largely of exhibitors in Northern Texas, although, of course, on matters affecting the entire state, the closest of harmony will be observed by the two camps.

Dallas being the film centre and distributing point for the entire state, and Southern Texas being so far removed from this city, it was decided that a representative be appointed to reside in Dallas and look after the bookings of the Southern picturemen. Mr. Peter will personally conduct this office for the first sixty days, after which a permanent man will be appointed.

The next meeting of the organization will be held in Dallas on October 12th.

Fairbanks' Prints Sent by Aeroplanes

Twelve aeroplanes were engaged to carry forty prints of the first United Artists production of Douglas Fairbanks when the railroads were tied up with a strike in the West. The prints were delivered at San Francisco and from there sent to their various destinations.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

Some Observations — and an Invitation

A SMALL town exhibitor has written in with some pertinent remarks which reduced to theme tells us, that week after week, the Exhibitors' Service Bureau contains much and many laudatory articles concerning lobby displays and exploitation stunts of some exhibitor located in a town so large that he would feel lost if he were to walk down its main street. He says he reads about these big boys and what they do, and then shuts his eyes and sort of dreams of just how he would put the shows over if he was managing the "Billion Dollar Photoplay The-at-er" in the Metropolis, which spends more for a stage setting than he can take in in a week and then wakes up and wishes for a little advice from the sticks as how to make enough extra money to buy a winter overcoat, he having the foresight to remember that winter is approaching and that last year's outside garment is so frayed that it cannot be made to do another season. He ends his lament by asking why, oh why, we don't publish more stories of small town exploitation stunts and thereby get down out of the clouds for about ninety per cent of the exhibitors. We told him by letter the reason and now we are going to tell you, big boys and little ones, as well. We don't publish more small town exploitation stories because we can't get them and if anyone will devise a method of obtaining even a photograph or a newspaper clipping of the sort of stuff we want in this line from the small towns we'll vote him a genius. Every time we hear of a chap who has done something extraordinary or unusual, it doesn't matter whether he lives in Oshkosh or Chicago, we write him a letter, telling him that tears are in our eyes asking to please write us all about it, and to inclose photographs of himself, theatre, etc. and etcetera. What happens? Most of those we write to are so darn modest that when you get your reply if you do get one, the photo's are missing and he spends most of his letter space in telling you that he doesn't think his stuff is good enough for our pages and ends by thanking us for our interest.

Now we realize that a lot of the articles we write on exploitation are beyond the reach of the smaller towns and have regretted it more than the exhibitors have for truly this is a department which aims to work for all exhibitors, and just to see if one grand appeal wont produce something, we are inviting, nay requesting and if that isn't strong enough ordering every exhibitor in a town of less than fifty thousand population to sit down and tell us how he put over his best exploitation stunt of the season, not forgetting that above all things we want photographs.

Here is what we will do:

A little later as soon as material enough comes in we will get out a small town edition in this department relegating the "big boys" to the rear ranks for the week and giving all the head lines to the small town exploitation stories. Therefore here is your opportunity to get into the limelight and you know what Kid McCoy said: "Keep your name in the papers if you have to lick your wife to do it."

Miss Rita Cassilis, as she appeared in the scenic prelude at the New Garrick presentation of "The Red Lantern" in Minneapolis

To give you an idea what we consider great stuff, we will relate what one small town chap did for the biggest cleanup in the history of his theatre and which cost him about five dollars, and a little hard work of the clerical kind. Why didn't we print it before? It happened two years ago and we just heard of it through a friend and it is the sort of stuff that had to be written when it was "news" or not at all.

Here is the stunt!

An exhibitor living in a small town up in Central New York (the village happens to be a county seat) was playing pinochle or doing something else equally as profitable on the Saturday when the first selective draft for the great war was drawn. The papers were full of great columns of numbers but no one knew how they applied to the county and village where this exhibitor lived. Then came the big idea. He knew the sheriff and was soon hot footing it to the county jail (ordinarily he would figure he would be landing there soon enough without helping things along) and with the aid of the consecutive number list of the county's registrants and the published lists as released from Washington in the papers in a few hours he had listed the first three hundred men, or boys most of them were, who would be examined and sent away to war if they passed the physical test. In the meantime his printer had rushed out a handbill announcing that he would read this list of names from the stage at the evening's photoplay performance at his theatre. According to our informant he was one tired boy when he had his list complete, and realized that he was the only man in the whole world who knew who would be called first from this county to go to war.

His handbills had worked for him enough so word of mouth began picking the news up and by the time he was ready to open his theatre he had a line waiting to get in that reached out of sight around the corner. The theatre ran pretty nearly all night because people began to come in from the country to find out who in their neighborhood had been drawn and he was showman enough not to close down while the money still came in. The next day he nearly wore out a telephone telling insistent inquirers whether or not their names were on the list of the first three hundred.

Now there are thousands of just such stories as this, and good for more than a particular day and a particular town, which go unheralded in this department because we don't know about them. We can't afford to hire a correspondent in every little town and if we did the chances are he wouldn't send us the stuff we really need most, the average space man with us thinking that when he writes the life history of some exhibitor that he is getting just what we require when as a matter of fact that is the very stuff we don't want because the history of most exhibitors is pretty much the same. Got in the business by chance and stuck along ever since.

What we want is a full account of how a man did one particular thing that will be an inspiration and an aid to other exhibitors and help them make better showmen of themselves. Therefore here is your opportunity to contribute in this great cause. If you fail to do your share you certainly have no kick coming if somebody else doesn't come through with a story which you can use to advantage and financial profit.

Your Idea and Ours

THIS page won't be so much when it is reduced to our columns, but we are using it as an example of a great little tie-up with local merchants for some advertising on a picture which is timely. The pictures of the babies is sure fine stuff and will tend to bring the mother love which is the theme of "Human Desire" into prominence, where if something of this sort was not done, most people would presume that it was another of the "vamp" pictures designed principally to catch those who seem to like to sit in a theatre and watch the most advanced methods in disregarding the moral code. We presume that the New DesMoines had the assistance of the Capital's advertising solicitor in securing the ads for this page, and therefore about all the management did was to go around and lend moral support, which is the correct way to work the co-operative advertising stunt. If this display didn't bring business for the New DesMoines there is something wrong with the city.

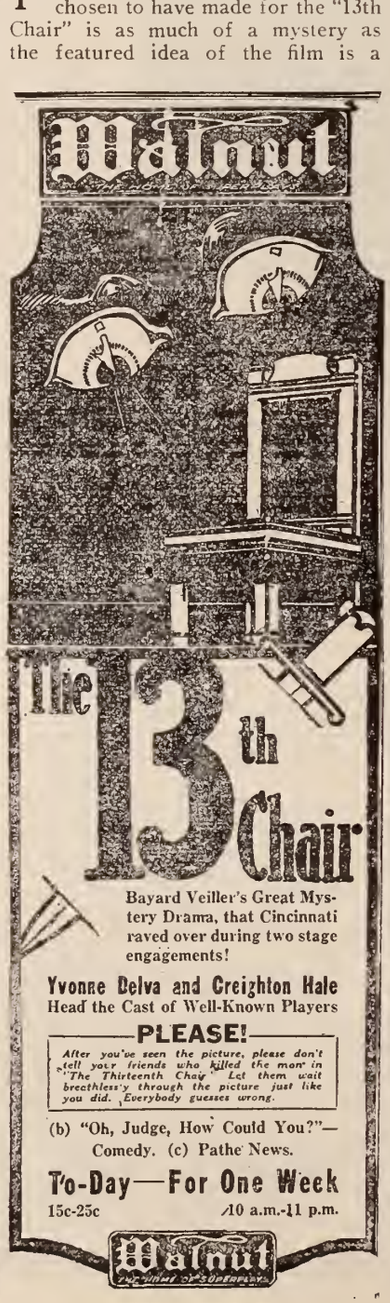
Some publicity matter has come into the office claiming that "The Miracle Man" is greatest picture of the season. Once in the while press agents tell the truth.



WHEN you choose to stake your all on a star and the title of the picture, you can not do better than the Regent has done in this four column nine inch display on "The Roaring Road." From out of the star a mighty good one which brings out the points of his "phisog" which the feminine sex like to the selling talk this is good advertising. We are unable to judge just how much of this is producers' material if any but we rather figure the cut only. Possibly the Regent used a hack saw as this is rather out of the ordinary, meaning the cut part itself, for a producers' aid. Anyway it is good display utilizing about all the angles the film presented for exploitation. The Regent entertains the residents of Ionia, Mich.

A picture is to be made called "The Breath of the Gods." Well, most places are dry now.

THE cut which the producers have chosen to have made for the "13th Chair" is as much of a mystery as the featured idea of the film is a mystery. We see what might be a door and what might be a billiard table and what might be oysters or eyes on a jet black splash of ink, on the top part of this ad which is one of the aids the producer placed with the exchanges to help advertise the feature, and inasmuch as this ad is about 50 per cent cut this display comes pretty close to being 50 per cent bad, except that the title of the production has been given a good display and the author's name and the fact that it was a stage success billed correctly. In the box under the word "Please" is an admonition which was used very successfully in the stage version and was productive of a whole lot of curiosity. People would talk about having seen the play, saying how good it was, then immediately inform the listener that they would not tell them the plot for the reason given. Of course everybody was curious and the stunt was productive of a lot of business. Now that the play has been used to such an extent in practically all the cities both in stock and from New York, much of this mystery stuff is going to fail but it at least is worth while attempting. The real picture fans don't go to the legitimate theater so much at that and some of them who can tell you the life history of Mary Pickford or even a lesser star wouldn't know whether Shakespeare is the name of a new drink which contains better than two and three quarters kick or is a sect like Bolsheviki. We actually have heard intelligent people prefer to men like Belasco and William A. Brady as "good actors" which however they are, but until recently they haven't worked at it in quite some time. The display reproduced was two columns wide and twelve inches deep, and the Walnut is located at Cincinnati, Ohio.

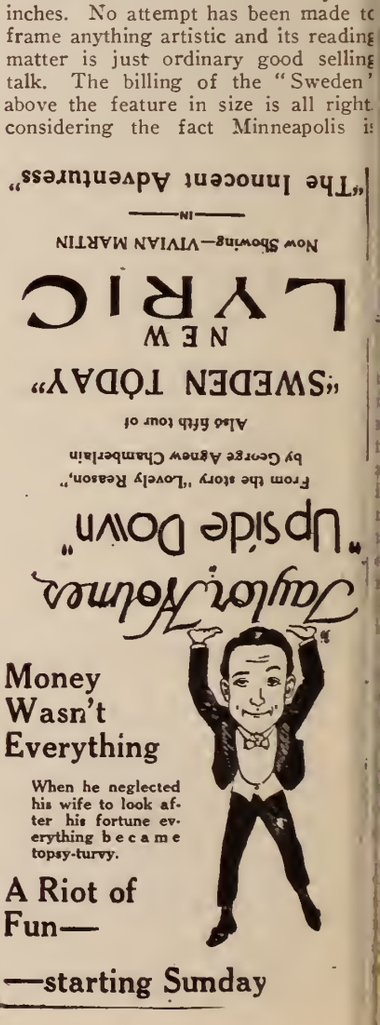
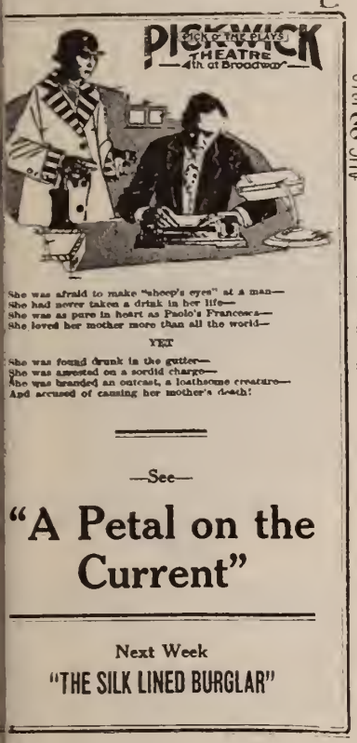
A well-known motion pcture actor collapsed from overwork. He must have a very delicate constitution.

THE Newman theatre border again comes in for commendation in this three column by ten display on "Bill Henry." Incidentally here is a bang up good cut for use on any Ray picture as it is typical with that particular appeal which this star has with audiences. Then too the selling talk is an artistic little gem and if it is original with the Newman ad man, we offer him congratulations. If the press book is responsible the same may be applied there. It doesn't really say a thing of what the picture is about but at the same time it is suitable for a Ray offering as his stories are always largely characterization.



The Newman is giving its smaller numbers attention which is one of our pet theories put into practise so we should say that the whole display is very good. Not allowing the space purchased to become overcrowded is particularly desirable with the border and name cut used in this and the only suggestion we have to make concerns the black rule used across the three columns. This might have been a bit lighter and still been just as effective and we think that the white space would have been accentuated in the event it had been illuminated.

Quoted: "The next president will be elected or defeated by the screen." How can the president be defeated?



THIS is another "Upside down" ad with part of the ad upside down but with rather too much of it turned end for end in our opinion. This idea of applying the title by inverting things in your display is excellent, but don't overdo it as we think the Lyric of Minneapolis has done. The cut inverted would have accomplished just as much as this inverting the selling talk and date line.

This ad was two columns by ten inches. No attempt has been made to frame anything artistic and its reading matter is just ordinary good selling talk. The billing of the "Sweden" above the feature in size is all right considering the fact Minneapolis is Now the ppeal of this story will be in the enes where she is not living in a ed of roses and if this cut was from ie of the scenes at the climax of e feature where she and her future sband, were shown in the Park you ould have created an interest as to hat she is going to do. A man and oman alone late at night in a park something unusual. It suggests rama while this scene might be any- ing. ou may think this is all bosh, that a t which prints up good is a good ough for any ad but we tell you at unless a cut does more than just ract attention it is not worth the ace you pay in which to place it. owever, this is a fault of the pro- cer and not the exhibitor's except at he chose to select this one for e and we therefore lay the blame ere it belongs. The selling talk is her out of the ordinary, also from producer's press book and will in measure make up for what was not own in the cut. At this point the ceases to be even good for "The tal on the Current" sentence has en very badly placed and looks de- hed from the rest of the display. e Pickwick could have gotten along th less space than it has purchased re and made its display look better using a smaller type for the title e, one which would have allowed title to be set all on one line and oved the whole ad up about an inch. ere would still have been white ace enough to make the display show up on the page and it would have looked a whole lot less commonplace than it does under the present arrangement. The Pickwick is located at San Diego, Cal., and as a rule does better than this. The display was two columns by eight.

Advertising and adversity look rather alike in print but the man who advertises rarely knows the real meaning of the latter word.

WE are not selecting this one because it ranks with McCormicks's displays but because it does rank rather well for the size town from which it came, Latrobe, Pa. The display was double column by ten inches and is just good fair straight advertising where all the facilities with which McCormack has to work are not available. The selling talk and other reading matter used by the Olympic is more than good. Some people in larger cities could copy the English and not hurt their displays in the least. In the way the matter is displayed, however, the ad is rather commonplace although it tells its story in a straight forward way and no novel effects have been attempted anyway. We rather think that the "Bulletin" from which we clipped this ad isn't a daily and perhaps that is the reason that the Olympic is advertising two bills at once something that we usually don't approve of so much. Anyway you exhibitors in the smaller towns will know that you aren't barred out of this department so send in your ads so we can let others see what the trend of advertising is outside the big centers.

THIS ad is mostly producers cut and is a weird looking thing, but when you stop to consider the sort of story which is to be advertised in "The 13th Chair" we don't know but this accomplishes its purpose very well. The whole idea in advertising a mystery story is to keep the plot a mystery and to excite curiosity, and this ad certainly is not enlightening on that subject. It is also eccentric enough to attract attention. The display may not be especially artistic, but it advertises the title and explains that the production is from the Bayard Veiller play, and that is about as far as it is worth while to go with this production. Too much selling talk would give the secret of who killed who away and that is fatal to the picture. In size this was a quarter page. The American is located at Salt Lake City.

The "ought" of Autumn needs doing today.

THE Kings-Mozart of St. Louis has accomplished rather a nice effect here in this seven inch two column display, on Frank Keenan in "Gates of Brass" by using the head cut of the star and drawing an oval line about the rather ordinary printed matter, both in style of type and composition. The white space made the ad show up mighty well on the printed page and so far it goes just an announcement for the feature and star it is good. However this is placing all your eggs in one basket and if they don't happen to like Keenan they surely won't go to the Kings-Mozart from Sunday to Wednesday. The absence of selling talk in this ad we think is in a way excusable, for this picture as we remember it, is rather disagreeable and then too Mr. Keenan's admirers come to see him and aren't especially interested in the story unless it should have some big message. For that reason we should say that billing the star's name above the title of the production was quite correct.

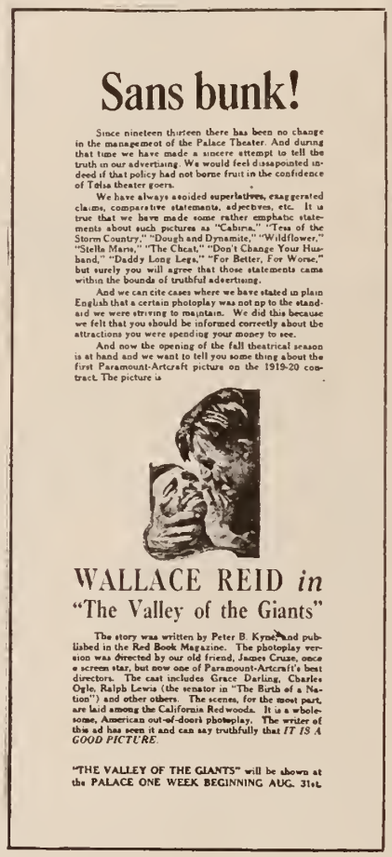
IF this cut was a good likeness of Faversham we would say that this advertised the star and the title of the production very well, but as it is, in our opinion, much of the value of the face cut is lost, and therefore the New

Garrick is paying for some space from which it does not get proper results.

This is a picture and a star which will draw well from the legitimate stage devotees and they may know that "The Silver King" is Henry Arthur Jones' celebrated drama adapted to pictures, but we believe that a mention should be made of this fact.

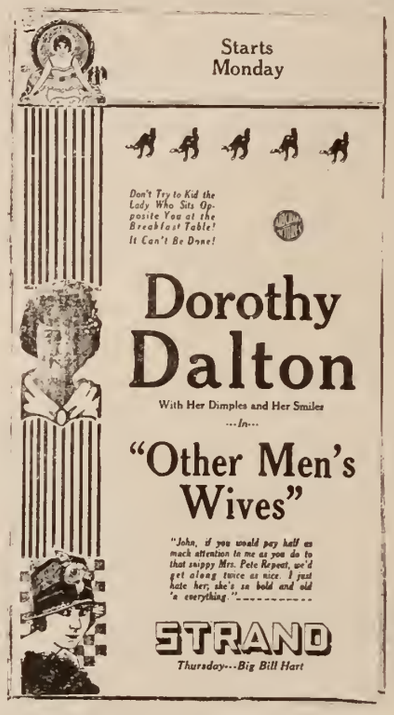
There is one thing always to be commended in New Garrick advertising. It is always good big space and has plenty of white showing. Aside from that we can't always approve of it so much, especially in the matter of framing the reading matter. This display was three columns wide and thirteen inches deep.

What Live Wires Are Doing



from each corner of the cut. We commend the selling talk as fitting the picture and as being an interest arouser.

Incidentally, here is a nice summer name cut. It is the best thing on the display and next is the producers cut, which is descriptive and suggests romance, that never ending source of interest in pictures.



If we were going to suggest something to improve the appearance of this display and still retain the original idea, we would have eliminated the border entirely and let the white space work for us.

Following the beaten path is easier, but it is the man who explores new roads who is a leader.

BECAUSE of a good catch line and plenty of white space, this display of the Palace Theater, Tulsa, Oklahoma, probably started a good many people reading downward from its top line but how many of them continued to the end of even the first sentence will remain a question. Figured from New York and Oklohoma is a long way from it, we would say that people aren't especially interested in history, nor of what a theater has done but rather wants to read of what it is going to do and when an announcement of future policy does not contain more meat than this one, it passes as the same old "con" which has been identified with the show business these many years. Therefore this ad is not to be commended further than the announcement of the booking of Wallace Reid in the "Valley of the Giants" and its attendant selling talk. Of course we may be all wrong. That top portion may be a message from entertainment Heaven and be read with great interest by a whole township but we just can't see it. It is always a pretty safe bet to leave what has happened alone and confine your efforts to the future, especially the immediate future.

UNLESS one is to figure that the selling talk used in this four column by fifteen inch ad is out of tune with the picture, which is a drama on a very serious subject, this display of the Strand's Birmingham, Ala., is mighty good. There is plenty of white space with a very attractive layout of cuts and rule used on the left side which gives the display a distinctive appearance. Relative to this selling talk we believe that it is a bit too "familiar." It would have been better to have taken the same thought expressed in the sentence beginning, "Don't try to kid" and covered it without the use of slang. Relative to the paragraph under the title of the feature, explanation as to the sort of picture "Other Men's Wives" is would have been prefcrable. Then there is a line of small cuts which to our uneducated eye look like tomcats. We don't see the application for their use here, although they do dress the space above the selling talk at the top. However, this gets instant attention from the page and as the big appeal is in the cuts, title of the production and star this passes as better than average. The idea of linking the three cuts together with rule is a mighty good one and new to us. It is worth borrowing.

It is a wise writer who knows his own adjectives. Likewise publicity man or manager.

YOU won't be able to duplicate this ad of S. Barrett McCormicks on the "Unpardonable Sin" but you can copy the printed matter and its general arrangement for in this display, the genius of laying out newspaper ads from Indianapolis has not gone outside of the sphere of the average exhibitor as far as he does sometimes. This ad was better than six columns wide and ten inches deep and is about the best illustration of a bold black display we have seen for some time even from Mr. McCormick's own advertising. There is a great cut, one which prints well enough so it really means something, which many a cut that is all "head" doesn't do and the reading matter from the great catch line followed by it. "He to whom charity is hard," etc., is strong, absolutely interest compelling.

The Circle covers the whole field of exploitation making its sentences hit home in every line. There can be no question that this ad sold "The Unpardonable Sin." It is so much better than most of us can do that we may but admire that which we can not hope to duplicate.

WE just can't see the application of calling Wally Reid a "white black sheep" in "The Love Burglar" and it must be press book stuff as we have noticed that several exhibitors have done the same thing that the Colonial has here. There is no reason to say that the hero of this crook story is anything but a model young man. Of course this in itself isn't any great advertising sin but it is a bit misleading. Cut the "black white sheep" out from this display, a full half page and the ad down to the selling talk is first class. Here things slip a bit, not in the subject matter, but in the literary part. The Colonial ad man should have used "which resulted from his impetuous wooing" or something like this rather than "he goes through trying to win her" which isn't very good English. This is a very nice cut which excited interest. The wording for the title and star name are good, both part of the producer's cut and the whole ad looks well on the page. It is mighty good advertising in big space with the little slip of too small importance to be noticed farther than just a mention. With space as large as this, mention might have been made of the small numbers on the bill in addition to the film fillers.

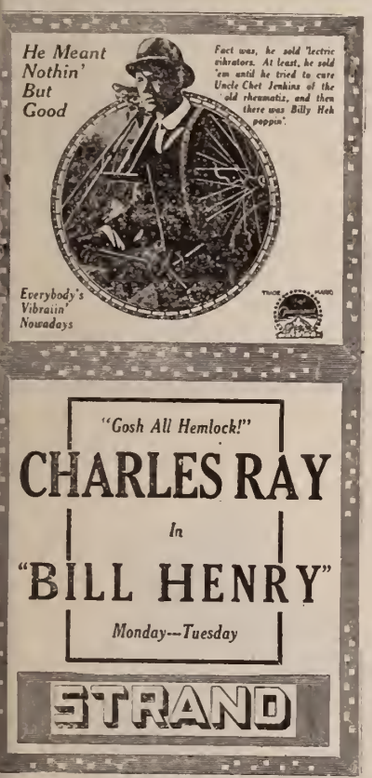
Progress gets up early in the morning to catch the early worm.



HERE is a very good producers' cut used so far as workmanship is concerned but it does not indicate an action which is at all important to the story nor in which there is appeal. Miss McLaren, incidentally whose name is not mentioned, which we would say was a great mistake as it is one of the strongest selling argumen id to be the home of some several housand "John Johnson's" and "Ole Oleson's," the name monopolizing the irectory even more than the "Smith's" nd therefore the Sweden scenics are xceptional drawing cards in this city. Another comment we might make is hat we can't see if one is going to use cut of this kind why one which represents the star isn't secured. This oesn't look any more like Taylor Holmes than it does like Bill Hart nor alf as much.. In this case it doesn't nake so much difference for the reason hat curiosity is going to make the eader turn the paper over to look at and the upside down part is what is ttracting first attention. But ordinarly select your cuts with care. If no ction is depicted be sure they look ike the star you are advertising.

From 100% to Zero

The Ohio Censors have decreed that he Willard-Dempsey fight film may e exhibited—if all the fight scenes re eliminated. Great.

THIS display of the Strand's Birmingham, Ala., is half bad and alf good, the lower half of what is really two ads as framed being excellent use of type and border and the upper half being rather meaningless. In the first place the cut doesn't look like Ray. Next the selling talk isn't the truth. Ray didn't operate the vibrator on "Uncle Chet," he used it on the villain. This in a way is a small matter, but if you are going to use selling talk, have it tell the truth. The vein in which this selling talk is written is excellent and quite in keeping with the production. We believe the piece of border across the center of this hurts the appearance and divides the interest. Incidentally the Strand hasn't said a word about anything else on the bill except "Bill Henry" and Charlie Ray.

HERE is another of those weird, wild looking displays on "Bolshevism on Trial," which if used on a different sort of production we would all say: "Horrors on horror's head," but which to our mind is the correct vein in which to advertise this particular picture. People coming into the theatre aren't going to look for a sweet little love story in a title like this one, and the appeal to the sensational is therefore quite correct. There is another angle to look at, too, in this picture, and that is that the patrons who like the romances aren't going to bother with this one at all and in consequence you must attract some different people for your audiences. To do this you have two classes from which to draw. Those who expect at least to see an industrial preachment which they may quote to their neighbors and those who want sensational scenes in which a lot of people get killed and most of the balance are badly injured. For both these classes this ad is ideal. The cut and the title will get the morbidly curious and the selling talk will attract the thinkers. The size of this ad was four columns by ten inches. The Princess is located at Wichita, Kansas.

THE copy of the Waterloo, Ind., Evening Courier, from which this display of the Plaza's was clipped contained some other good advertising, but we chose this as an example of good all type work where some novel effects have been secured. This display was four columns by eight, and is to be commended. The title has been given due prominence, and the selling talk is of the very best. In fact it surpasses anything we have seen on this picture. We have only one suggestion to make. We believe if we were advertising "Fires of Faith" we would make more of the fact that "Commander Evangeline Booth" is taking a part in the picture.

It is novelty and curiosity which brings plenty of people out to see a picture and her name is bound to arouse interest. This ad may be rated pretty close to the 100 mark of an all type display of its size. It at least is worth saving as a model for your own use at a later date.

Energy misdirected often is a boomerang.

THE Coliseum is located at Seattle, Wash. This sample of their advertising was four columns wide and a full page in depth, and is one of the best on a picture which has had a lot of good exploitation that has come to our attention.

A good cut has been used to advantage the title of the play and the star's name are both up in big letters with the late Clyde Fitch coming for third place, all of which is as it should be. The selling talk makes fun of things, but this is the one sort of a production where we approve of kidding sales lines, and the way they have been worded here is excellent. This commends from about all the angles which make or break advertising. It has big space, plenty of white and all the other good qualities we have mentioned. The picture of the three "monks" in the circle is rather going the limit in the kidding line, but even at that it helps out the background of the cut and brings the girls' faces out on the page.

We always did like the theatre cut the Coliseum uses. It is one of the best of standard name cuts which comes before our eyes.

An honorable and glorious past will not buy shoes at present prices.

WE aren't selecting this one because it comes from one of the smaller towns, High Point, Md., where probably no high salaried advertising man is retained on the staff of the Rose Theatre, and where without doubt the boss is the whole shooting match, including the advertising expert. We want to encourage so we tell him, in all truth at that this display on "Oh Boy" is a lot better than some we have looked at from much larger towns. The cuts have been used to good advantage and the display of the type is also quite up to standard.

The selling talk while not perhaps exceptional is straight advertising arguments as well done as most of us do on an average. The size of the display was a quarter page, and is not unusually large space for the Rose as its manager believes in printers' ink. We have just noticed one thing which we might find a little fault with, sort of on general principles, and that is using the line "Girls and Ginger" twice. Something like "Fun and Frolic" could have been used in the second instance to better advantage.

If you get out of bed "on the wrong side" once in the while, don't let everybody know and act as if you took a special pride in being a grouch.

HERE is a three-column ad of the Rialto, Butte, Mont., which took a lot of time to frame and which was probably responsible for a lot of cussing on the part of the mechanical force of the Anaconda Standard, from which it was taken. The best that can be said for it is that it is unusual and pretty nearly eccentric.

Using the words down the sides of the border isn't anything which is worth copying nor is the "angle" line

Here Is Another Adaptation of Idea Originated by Kashin at Broadway

A NOVELTY which will prove both good entertainment and good exploitation, available for the use of every manager, one that is inexpensive and can be used when a new set is being built and it is necessary to put the picture screen in "one" has been worked out by Manager Fischer of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, with wonderful results. He terms it "Twenty Minutes in the Nickelodeon" and not only is the production a real feature but it probably shows better than anything else the wonderful strides the photoplay has made in the past ten years. No attempt is made to burlesque the presentation and when the audience howls in glee at some of the serious scenes in "The Story of the Rose," a one-reeler with Mary Pickford in the lead, an idea is gained of the advance made by the silent drama. This picture was shown at this same theatre just about ten years ago as a big feature and it was watched by an appreciative audience. Today this audience laughs at it and says that it is awful.

A description of the presentation in detail should prove interesting reading not only to the managers who desire to put on a like production but to those to whom it will recall the days of old.

The setting is most inexpensive, a plain white screen hung in one, two booths, one on each side of the screen for the lecturer and the illustrated song singer, a piano and drums, a lecturer and a singer. These, with the slides and films, complete the outfit.

The opening is a trailer showing the calender being turned back by successive years from 1919 to 1909. Then a trailer goes into a title which reads, "Taking you back to the old days. The performance is given in all seriousness. No attempt is made to burlesque. It is not necessary. Think times don't change? This is how they did it ten years ago." Then comes the following slides all old ones resurrected from forgotten corners: Gentlemen Please Remove Your Hats—No Smoking Allowed—Do Not Spit on the Floor, Remember the Johnstown Flood—Children Occupying Seats Must Pay for Same—Our Moving Pictures and Illustrated Songs Are the Latest and Best—Our Patrons Will Oblige Us by Not Remaining for More Than One Show During the Rush—Matinee Daily, 5c, Excepting Sunday and Holidays. Then the feature goes on a one-reel Imp, "The Story of the Rose," with Mary Pickford. As a drama the production proves a good comedy. All during the presentation of this picture a lecturer explains the scenes and reads the titles, much to the amusement of the audience. In about the middle of the production there is a flash of light on the screen as the film breaks and a slide is shown reading, "One Moment, Please, While the Operator Adjusts the Machine," and the piano and drums play "Bedelia" very forty. Then the feature is run to the end, though with much framing. The illustrated song is next and is entitled "My Little Kangaroo." A few slides run upside down add to the interest of this presentation. This is followed by the Pathe comedy, "The Runaway Leopard," and then the final slide goes on—Program Changed Daily. Those Who Have Not Seen the Entire Performance May Remain for the Next.

Manager Fischer is using very good showmanship in this presentation as this week he plays Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum," and the difference in the productions as given ten years ago at 5c and today at 25c will not be lost on his patrons. Mr. Fischer states that in his opinion a presentation such as this should be made by every manager as the comparison is a splendid boost for the business. "I feel," said Mr. Fischer, "that every manager should present a feature such as I am doing this week. It is not only a novelty but splendid propaganda. It will set your patrons thinking and I feel safe in saying that instead of being odious the comparison will rebound to the favor of the theatre and more than justify in the minds of your patrons the fact that the photoplay houses are now charging five and six hundred per cent more for admissions than they did in the old days. I will be glad to answer any question any manager may ask me about this production and be delighted to have them use the idea."

Beban Appearances and Lobby Display Boost Business for Superba

FROM San Diego, not so far from the big producing center of the motion picture industry and a smaller production centre itself, comes a photograph of a lobby display used by the Superba one of the "Chain of Blue" houses, the other being the Broadway, Kearney, and the Silver Strand, on George Beban's latest picture, "Hearts of Men."

The picture is reported to have done a big week business at the Superba, and contributing to its success was the lobby front exhibit and the personal appearances of the star in person.

The Superba's decorations are of the kind which we like to record, because even the smallest theatre in a city and the one and only show shop of the smaller town may copy it without going to a greater expense than is justifiable with good business.

The signs used for the title, name of the star and the "Artist with a soul" line are the largest part of this attractive display, especially in the matter of expense, with the heart cut-outs second. These were cut out of mount board by the employees and involved no great amount of labor or expenditure of money. The photographs are still from scenes in the feature, two large ones and a set of the smaller size, with one special announcement board relating to Mr. Beban's personal appearance.

In the current issue of the "Chain of Blue" the name of the Broadway Amusement Company's house organ for the four theatres under its control, Mr. Beban is given place on the front page with a cut, and considerable reading matter was devoted to his talents and in announcing that he would make personal appearances at every performance during the engagement of his film.

Relative to these appearances, the star, who has won a place for himself by his characterization of the Italian, and is a finished vaudeville and stage performer as well as a screen actor, delighted San Diego with his whimsical stories and famous one-man entertainments which have proven so popular on the vaudeville stage.

The Superba is planning many new improvements, among which is a big orchestral organ which is to be installed in the near future.

Rejuvenated Gladmer to Exhibit Pictures

Lansing's Legitimate Theatre, After Extensive Improvements, Opens as Picture House Under the Management of Claude Cady

A GOOD many showman have reasons to view with dubity the legitimate theatre which for all its tradition of housing famous stars in famous plays in the past and acknowledged to be the really first class house of a city, that attempts to play pictures. There have been a lot of failures in this line, failures for which there is no satisfactory reason except that people apparently could not or would not consider the legitimate theatre the place for their favorite entertainment the photoplay.

It is therefore with a great deal of pleasure that we record an instance where a legitimate house, the Gladmer of Lansing, Mich., a theatre with a brilliant history but which in the last few years has seen each succeeding season bring less and less glory and financial profit to its door, come over into the motion picture ranks and from the first finds favor with the public.

However something besides just cleaning up the house and booking the shows was done before the Gladmer adopted a picture policy and in that something is probably where is concealed a great measure of its latest success. Approximately thirty thousand dollars was spent in alterations and improvement by the new manager Claude Cady, who also controls the destinies of the Colonial of the same city and the theatre is now one of the finest houses in the state of Michigan which is saying something.

With its first program the Gladmer won for itself a distinct place among Lansing theatre-goers. The fine taste in new decorations and general appointments of the theatre and the quality of the attractions has brought a class of Lansingites to the box office window who have been strangers to the less pretentious movie houses. These same patrons, after an hour and one-half in the house, have complimented Mr. Cady on the new project and pledged support.

One of the initial offerings at the new house was Douglas Fairbanks in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" and the attraction proved a business getter which surpassed even optimistic Mr. Cady's expectations. The second night a waiting line which was the envy of every picture manager in Lansing graced the sidewalk in front of the Gladmer although there are 1,500 seats in the house.

Manager Cady had gone to some trouble and expense however to give the Fairbanks picture some exploitation aid.

At the side of the stage are openings in the side walls. These were utilized attractively in the Fairbanks picture. On the one side was a miniature stage set of the mountainous western country in which part of the action of the picture takes place. On the opposite side a miniature country scene had been set up with a miniature train, flashing signal lamps, gongs and tiny station. In the part of the action of the picture touching either of the scenes, the light on one or the other was brought up through the dimmers and faded out gradually. The stunt made a distinct hit.

Probably the most unusual feature of the Gladmer in its new and improved condition is the fact that the operator's booth is not in the theatre at all. It is in a separate room, built on the outside of the east wall of the building. The west side of the operator's room is the east wall of the theatre, and, to use the words of Mr. Cady, "Vesuvius could erupt in the operator's cage and the audience would never know it." This novel scheme renders the theatre absolutely fire proof.

A 600-lamp sign will be put up within the next few days. It is a spread flash through two arrows pointing to lines over the entire front of the house showing the star and the attraction.

The Gladmer will not bar the legitimate productions entirely but will house the better class of road attractions which desire to book into Lansing.

A new stage setting at the Gladmer theatre, Lansing, Mich., after the house had been improved Advantageous Tie-ups Instituted by the Strand, at Worcester, Mass.

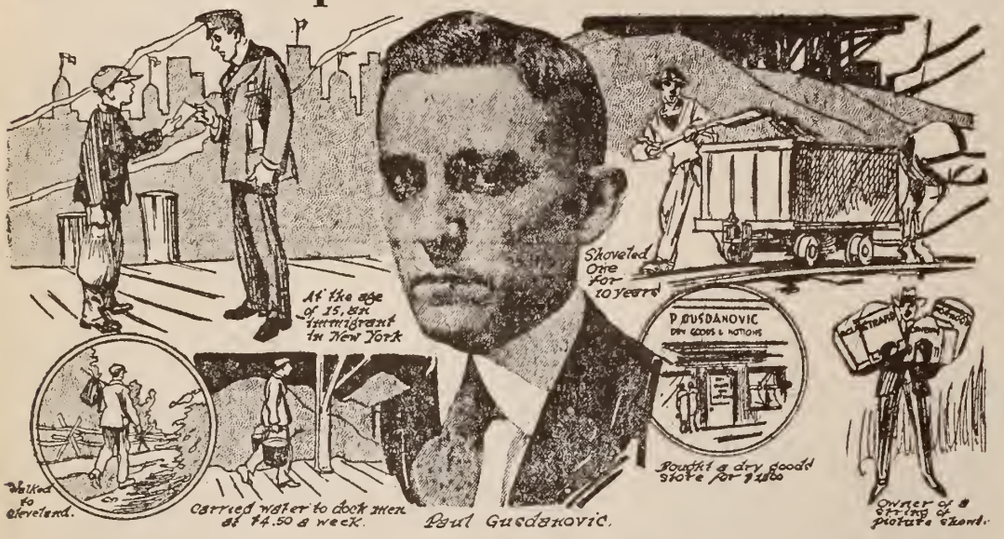
THE many practical advertising possibilities offered in the "Fires of Faith" were again taken full advantage of by Manager C. E. Robbins of the Strand theatre, Worcester, Mass., when the picture showed at his house during the week of August 11.

In addition to his usual campaign he also arranged a most attractive window display at Sherer's, the leading department store at Worcester. The display centered about the phonograph records and the sheet music of "Fires of Faith" and these articles were supplemented by one of the large paintings supplied to advertise the picture, an announcement regarding the Strand theatre and a life sized model of a Salvation Army girl. This last property contributed an entirely original touch to the display and attracted considerable attention.



The window display on "The Fires of Faith" which Manager Robbins of the Strand, Worcester, Mass., arranged with the aid of a department store

Robbins made excellent use of the striking twenty-four sheet stands provided on the picture. They were placed in advantageous positions throughout the city. These, together with the display space taken in the newspapers, and the special exploitation stunts, resulted in the Strand doing an excellent business during the run.

The results of these simple little stunts, many of them even less elaborate than the one here recorded, should convince every manager that opportunities along these lines should not be neglected. It is true that there is nothing especially new about them, but they are reliable, effective and inexpensive. They get business and help put a picture over too, notwithstanding the fact that on the face of it, stunts are just attention attracters. The point we are making is this: When a big department store lends you its aid, unconsciously, the public is going to associate your theatre in the same class as the big store and you gain prestige. More prestige means that you will have an easier time satisfying your patrons. If people come into your house thinking they are going to see something out of the ordinary half the battle is won. Its psychological stuff but it works just the same.

How Paul Gusdanovic 'Hoofed' It From N. Y. and Started Up Ladder to Fame and Fortune

Gusdanovic has no press agent and this tribute given the Cleveland exhibitor is a just recognition for proving a good business man

News Leader of Cleveland Tells How Gusdanovic Fought His Way

'TIS said that "A prophet is without honor in his own country," which we would judge by personal experience and observation, is an adage that, for the most part, holds good. However, there are exceptions. Witnesseth, the following story concerning one, Paul Gusdanovic, a Cleveland theatrical "magnet," which we have clipped in its entirety, pen pictures and all from the Cleveland Sunday News-Leader of August 31. Further comment is unnecessary except that we may add that this article proves once more that opportunity is not lacking in America for those who would climb the ladder of life to its topmost rung. From his photograph we would guess that Mr. Gusdanovic is still a young man, and with his start up the ladder referred to, it seems not improbable that the heights to which he will climb are not to be limited to less than that of the most ambitious.

By Eva Keleher

Paul Gusdanovic came into this world like an ordinary being. He squinted his baby eyes at admiring friends for the first time in 1881 in a place called Croatan, Austria, now known as the section claimed by the Jugoslavs.

But when he goes out in answer to Gabriel's trumpet, and St. Peter says:

"Paul, my boy, what did you do while you were on the earth?"

Paul will answer with a bow of reverence and humility:

"Your honor, St. Peter, I did my bit and my best. I began with 50 cents, but I left a comfortable estate and about half the motion picture houses of Cleveland to my wife and four daughters. I carried water to the dock hands, shoveled ore and managed a dry goods store at the same time. That was my bit, St. Peter. After that I entered the movie game, and whether you have movies up here or not, you must have heard that——"

And if St. Peter is the sort we think he is, he will pat Paul on his spiritual shoulder and order his initials embossed in gold on his wings, probably self-starters, too, speaking thus: "Say no more, Brother Paul. Come in and sit down."

Paul Gusdanovic has facts in his life that might well be woven into a film story or be worth a leather binding in novel form.

Paul Lands in New York.

It was June, the very first day, in 1896, that the boat carrying little Paul, a shaver of only fifteen, arrived in New York harbor. The blue of the horizon tinged with that peculiar golden pink and the Atlantic's foamy green met each other with such a firm beauty that little Paul stood a long time just gazing into the distance, but never once did he want to go back. The other side of the water was ancient history to him. The peaceful, restful water seemed invigorating to his soul. He felt the thrills of adventure and something in his boy's heart had been satisfied. He had reached America, the promised land, and his impressions overwhelmed him with a new joy, a new something that he wasn't quite sure of himself.

He was alone. The only thing he could communicate with in thought was his pack. Somehow, inanimate as it was, it understood that Paul Gusdanovic fitted the clothes it held and it stuck with him. Besides that, he had 50 cents. It was not until after he learned money values that he realized that the ticket seller had taken a large share for his services.

And while he stood watching the bustle and hustle he never for a moment realized that just beyond that line which divides the water from the land there lay the city, alive to every possible commercial interest, that life in that town was just one continual buzz, that thousands of opportunities were born there every minute and that thousands of air castles were torn down, without a second's notice.

So one morning Paul interviewed himself on the question of progress. He realized that he could never get very far on the job he had. He was then a dry goods clerk and knew everything there was to know about the business. It seems that in Europe you are either in the professional or laboring class. There is no in-between and initiative doesn't amount to a hill of beans.

Walks to Cleveland.

To go back to Paul and his 50 cents. He instinctively knew that the journey to Cleveland couldn't be taken for 50 cents. He had a brother here and it was that that made him choose Cleveland, therefore he must get here, so he walked. It took him twelve days.

The very first English he learned was to count to one hundred. His sister-in-law taught him that and he accomplished the job in four days. After he was rested he started job hunting and also for an opportunity to learn English. He found both.

During the day he carried water to the dock men and earned $4.50 per week, and at night he went to school and studied. His next promotion was shovelling ore and many nights he came in with icicles hanging all over him, tired and cold, but he wouldn't give up school. Fortunately, he had an endurance that permitted that. He got better jobs from time to time, but they were not the kind that took him off the ore docks.

Six years after his arrival here he had $2,300 saved. It was spring and his young man's fancy was like all the rest, it had turned to thoughts of love, and the next thing Paul Gusdanovic knew he was married to an American girl.

Did he take a honeymoon trip around the world? Not Paul. He took his little bride in his arms with the same tenderness, same love and devotion that the millionaire who had given his bride a wonderful honeymoon might have and he said: "I'll do my best to make you very happy and some day when we have enough money we'll see the rest of the world."

Mrs. Gusdanovic was satisfied, and so with $500 they purchased furniture. One could buy a few things with that much at that time. And with the remaining $1,800 they bought a dry goods store at 2512 St. Clair avenue. Mrs. Gusdanovic took care of the store and the home during the day, and Paul continued to work on the dock for seven years, taking only a few hours off now and then to do some buying. He had no recreation, none whatever. He gave every minute to work either at the dock or at the store.

His business grew, and after four years he moved to 2736 St. Clair, and then had $20,000 worth of stock.

Along came the movies and Gusdanovic saw the opportunity to make money. He bought the Norwood theatre at 6210 St. Clair, and at that time it had only 380 seats. To-day it has 1,000, which proves that Gusdanovic did have the right idea, and that movies are the gripping force of the amusement world to-day.

Later came the other opportunities to buy the Eclair, Homestead, Strand, and Orpheum, all of which with the exception of Homestead are personally owned by Paul Gusdanovic.

And when we asked Mr. Gusdanovic what he considered the most fundamental reason for his success, he said in rather a pathetic way:

"My mother. She died when I was only ten years old, but she taught me to be honest, to get everything by my own efforts, and I followed her advice. I hope to instill the same feeling into the hearts of my four girls, except that I want to give them more advantages than my parents were able to give me."

And he will do that very thing. He told us of his plans for the next year to travel abroad with Mrs. Gusdanovic and his two older daughters. It may be rather a belated round the world honeymoon for Mrs. Gusdanovic, but it will be a comfortable, satisfactory one. Gusdanovic will have fulfilled his promise and a happy little family will be able to enjoy the trip more because of each other, and because it is the outcome of hard work and success.

Besides Gusdanovic's mother we feel that his own practicality has much to do with his success. He never drank, never gambled, nor hung around poolrooms, and has never allowed his wife nor children hear him swear.

And so this boy with the 50-cent capital, who Americanized himself in 1986, has become one of Cleveland's business men and Cleveland is glad.

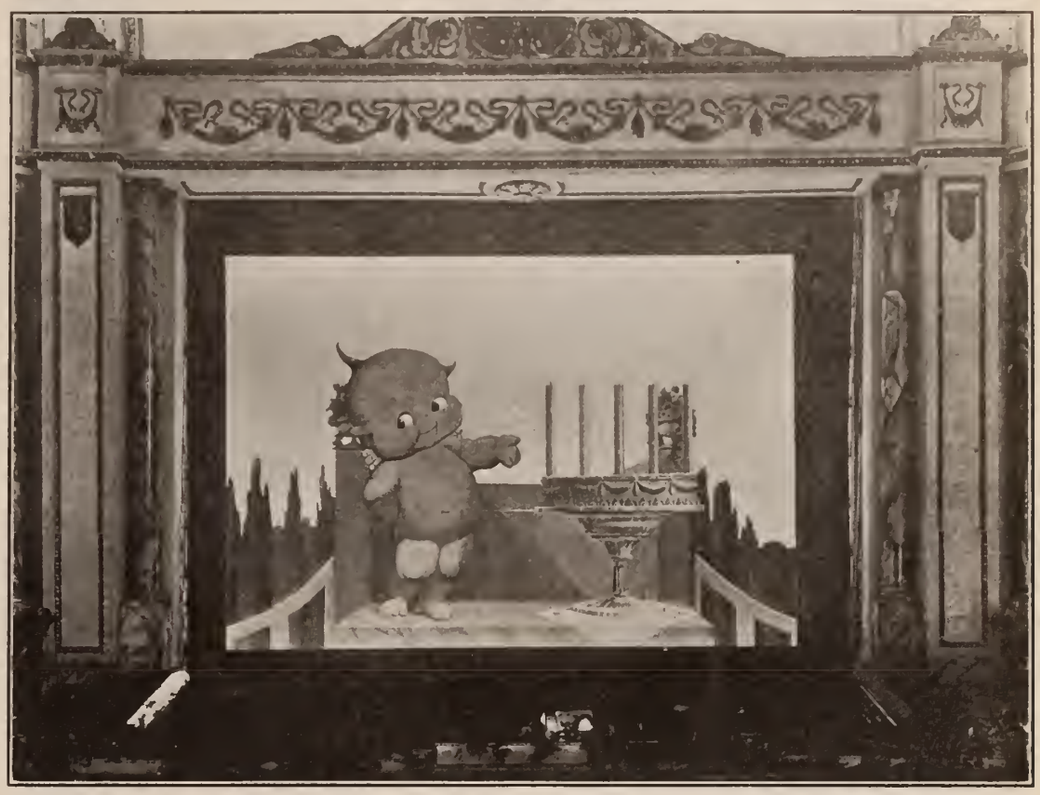
Shea's Hippodrome Celebrates Birthday

Manager H. B. Franklin Augments His Orchestra, Raises Prices and Brightens the Theatre Generally with Gratifying Results

MAKING the occasion of a theatre's birthday a time for extra effort with attendant gratifying financial and artistic results is one of the best of the standard stunts any house can adopt. It is like the annual clearance sale of the department store, an event which theatre manager, employees and public wait for with interest. The management provides his patrons with something out of the ordinary in entertainment, goes the limit with his advertising, spruces up about the theatre and makes a lot of noise in general about what he is going to do "Anniversary Week" and the people take notice and make the results of his efforts worth while, just as the crowd rush to the "linen sale." It is setting a week apart for some special purpose, bending all your energies to making the period a success.



In this connection, five years of unusually successful motion picture presentation was auspiciously celebrated the week of August 31 by Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. Augmentation of the big symphony orchestra to a personnel of 35, increase in admission prices, engagement of famous soloists, special stage settings, and attractive program and advertising displays were among the outstanding features of the week.

In discussing anniversary week with a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, Mr. Franklin said:

"Shea's Hippodrome feels that Anniversary week is an occasion to check up every department of the institution and find out the deficiencies in each. It is an occasion to brighten up things generally and to start a new lease of life. This spirit is imbued in the entire staff and the effect on the employees is startling. Spots are brightened, new uniforms given ushers and other little innovations presented.

The cover page for the Hippodrome anniversary week program

Stage setting for "Franklin's Birthday Party." Oh, how you grow and grow and grow. Five now coming six

"Each anniversary year has been a milestone by which we have been able to measure our progress and this fifth celebration has been no exception. In addition to augmenting our already large orchestra, we have added famous concert soloists to our musical program. Greek Evans, of the Rialto theatre, New York, was our first artist and he will be succeeded by James Harron, also of the Rialto. Our audiences have enthusiastically welcomed this addition to our program and it promises to be one of our big features in the future.

"Working on the principle that anything becomes tiresome with time, we have endeavored this year to instill freshness in our surroundings, to bring in new faces, new favorites, new talent. We believe in the theory that patrons will welcome new entertainers, particularly if there is ability behind them. During the coming season we will present many new faces on the screen, Shea's Hippodrome having signed contracts for the cream of the output of the Big Four, Famous Players-Lasky, Goldwyn, Metro, Fox, First National and some special independent productions.

"We began our celebration by announcing the special features in our advertising, which was of the hand drawn variety, with white space and the features predominating. We feel that it is not enough merely to present good features, but we try to distinguish the entertainment from the ordinary by giving equal prominence in our advertising to that part of the program that makes presentation here exclusive and different.

"Next came a boost in admission prices. We increased the scale 5 cents on orchestra seats every evening and Sunday and this additional levy was accomplished with very little friction, our only explanation being a paragraph in our program that this adjustment was made necessary to meet the increased costs of operation.

"Five men were added to the orchestra, among them Conrad Stellar, famous cornet soloist of the 55th Pioneer Infantry band, just returned from France and occupied Germany. Our orchestra seating was also re-arranged, giving a more attractive appearance.

"Our anniversary stage setting brought out the anniversary idea as shown in the illustration. The setting was strikingly lighted and gauzes attractively used in front of it. Preceding the setting a trailer was thrown on the screen announcing the fact that we had attained our fifth birthday and were growing constantly. The lobby was appropriately dressed and a special electric display built upon the top of the marque.

"It is worth noting that during anniversary week we broke all box office records at Shea's Hippodrome, record crowds attending every performance."

Manager Franklin did not neglect the opportunity presented to tell his patrons that the entertainment presented at the Hippodrome is the best obtainable, to call attention to the augmentation of his orchestra to 35 pieces and to announce that the special soloists given place on the Anniversary Week bill will be a feature of the program during the 6th season of the theatre.

A full page in the Hippodrome house organ was devoted to these subjects and there can be no question but that increased prestige was established for the theatre by the event.

The Bathing Girls Are Scandalizing the Twin Cities According to Reports

ACCORDING to our Minneapolis correspondent, Hazel Wise, Mack Sennett's Bathing Girls are performing the same stunts which made jaded Broadway sit up and take notice, up in the Twin Cities district. In fact she seems quite disturbed over the visit, and it would seem to us, writes of their "doings" with a tinge of the "sour grapes" attitude although you have to read between the lines to fully sense it, Miss Wise being a "wise" woman and therefore not going to admit that she thinks the bathing girls are "scandalous." Anyway here is what she writes in a special to this department.

The Sennett bathing girls are to appear for a two weeks' booking at the New Lyric theatre in conjunction with the five-reel comedy "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," and if any one in the Twin Cities hasn't been informed some way or other of the event it's because he or she has been in solitary confinement for the past fortnight.

Minneapolis and St. Paul are plastered and pasted and pilfered with placards and posters until both cities have taken on the appearance of war activity headquarters. Such advertisement has hardly been equalled since movies were inaugurated here a decade or so ago.

Small photographs of the most beautiful of the beauties have been distributed as freely as election cards around a city hall and nowadays one can hardly navigate down the main stem without sighting a flock of newsboys taxing their lungs in competition as to whose particular picture embodies the most pulchritude, physical rhythm and absence of georgette or tricollette.

And living up to ancient and modern tradition one can find a dyed-in-wool farmer who has flivvered to the city to take in the state fair with his family, pausing before some mammoth placard with his mouth wide open and a calloused right hand tugging away at a batch of underbrush which flourishes on the chin of most individuals of that particular profession. Pretty soon his wife collars him and he is mournfully humbled until he bumps into another poster of equal prominence and the same ceremony is repeated.

It is hardly necessary to mention that the agricultural body will be well represented when the beauties take to the footlights.

Arrangements have been made for the girl bathers to appear at every performance. Arrangements have also been made to keep them busy every minute they are in Minneapolis and if the present schedule of the New Lyric management is carried through these heralded mermaids will have to eat, sleep and do their shopping in their bathing costumes.

Lake Calhoun, famous for the most popular bathing beaches in the region, was host to the beauties on September 8, for it is the plan to have them promenade along the sand for the edification of newspapermen who care to be edified. True enough there are all kinds of bathing beauties at Calhoun beach daily but it can hardly be said that they are quite as prominent as those who graced the shores this week.

Then there is the state fair (Minnesota always has the biggest state fair and exposition in the country). These same girls who apparently won't know what it is to be tired, will appear in several capacities at the fair grounds daily and when they leave for their theatre the fair grounds are apt to be emptied of the patrons who wish to see more of the beauties.

The Minneapolis advertising includes a $1,000 newspaper campaign; 100,000 miniature photographs given away at all Ruben and Finkelstein theatres and the baseball park; trailers in all the theatres; 500 tack cards; fifty 24-sheet; one hundred 3-sheet and 2,500 one-sheet snipes.

The week of September 14 the bathing girls will appear at the New Liberty theatre, St. Paul.

During the state fair the girls will ride around the mile track in racing cars and the drivers have been instructed to step on 'er for all she's worth.

During the performances at the New Lyric the box office attendants and the ushers will be dressed in bathing suits to add to the gaiety of the situation. Manager W. W. Vance wanted to do the same thing but they couldn't find him a bathing suit of sufficient displacement. There will be a special lobby display with frame pictures of all the girls. The frames have also been placed in hotel lobbies, the Union depot and other points. The song, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," has been displayed in several shop windows.

A Lobby Display Available for the Small House

A NOVEL lobby display which provided atmosphere for the picture being shown, and which was so unusual in the material used for its construction that everyone who passed the theatre stopped to inspect the work, was used by Manager Tom Sullivan of the Princess theatre, Denver, one of the Theatre Operating Company's houses, on the engagement of Wallace Reid in "The Valley of the Giants."

This is the sort of a display which could not be built in a country lacking trees, and it is probable that in some cities quite a hunt of the lumber yards would be necessary to find the materials required, but once they are located enough to decorate the whole side of the theatre may be purchased for a few dollars.

Mr. Sullivan camouflaged his lobby with real tree barks, using slabs from lumber for his material.

Going to a lumber yard, Mr. Sullivan found the slabs he wanted for his idea and had the rough edges sawed off on a bevel so that when he placed them about the pillars which are a part of the Strand's architecture only the bark would show.

How Mr. Sullivan built the trunks of his "redwoods," which are a background for the story of the "Valley of the Giants." may be judged to better advantage by examining the accompanying photograph than in attempting to describe the proceeding in words. Suffice to say that the pillars after their camouflage did resemble the California redwood trees which are shown in the picture.

With the trees as a basis, Mr. Sullivan carried out the rest of his idea. Both the entrance and exit was covered so as to look like a door in a mountain cabin. Green pine branches added the forest effect.

In the interior of the theatre the stage was also decorated in like manner, with boughs interlaced over the screen. Needless to say, "The Valley of Giants" did a big business for Greaves and Ellison, owners of the Prineess.

How New York Stages the Show

IT isn't hard this week to select some outstanding point on which to dilate for our opening under this head. At every theatre we attend, four in number, we get the military atmosphere. The Rialto and the Academy smell strongest of "brass buttons," but there is a tinge in every house. In fact, the whole city is bent on offering due homage to General Pershing and his veterans, who before this is in the hands of the reader will have marched up Fifth Avenue, while millions from every part of the United States look on in pardonable pride and applaud.

Giving your program a patriotic flavor when it is appropriate, as under the present circumstances, is not only good showmanship, but is also "doing your bit," if we may use an expression that is a bit passe, since we are now at peace. It is showing a proper regard for current events and is "hitching up" to local color one of our pet theories and recognized as a mark of good showmanship the world over.

There is one other conspicuous feature worthy of comment in the week's presentations. At each playhouse is a scenic stage setting worthy of place in the art galleries. Description of each is given under the proper heading—that is, so far as words and limited space will permit, describing something that really has to be seen to be appreciated. Therefore, it would seem that, while not so many years in motion picture events, it is a long way back to the days when picture audiences sat in their seats impatient with anything on the bill which delayed the filming of the one-reel melodrama with Broncho Billy, Florence Turner, who by the way, had no license to drop completely from sight, and other of the old-time favorites, like Maurice Costello and Mary Fuller.

Rialto Theatre

THE Rialto is "waving the flag" this week, but its efforts are in such good taste and there is so much of interest in the military flavor of the bill in its entirety, that the charge of trying to unduly capitalize on patriotism could not be made in justice. However, from overture to exit march the military is in evidence, with the feature semi-military too, although the "brass buttons" in this go back to the days of the "Army Blue" of Custer's time and are not of the up-to-date khaki. Even the usual Rialto trailers have been dispensed with this week in favor of new ones which read "Welcome General Pershing."

Dr. Reisenfeld begins his "military revue" with one of his own compositions, "American Festival March," a rousing, cheerful number that keeps the foot tapping and prepares for more of the same stuff later.

The rendition is begun with the lights in amber but near the closing a surprise is added when the two auxiliary proscenium opening draperies are parted showing two very appropriate stage settings, after the lights have been blended into deep purple and the house darkened.

The setting on the right is New York's sky line, lighted, while the one on the left is the Liberty monument out in New York Bay as it looks to the incoming soldier who has been away from America these many months, with an additional artistic affect secured by the dim figure of the American Eagle showing at the base of the pedestal.

As soon as the curtains are parted, a chorus of about a dozen feminine voices sing the chorus of Dr. Reisenfeld's composition while, with spectrum flag effects about the Liberty canvass. It is all very artistic. The chorus sings with orchestral accompaniment, and does not attempt to dominate, acting rather as vocal harmony to the melody. The whole effect is most novel and identifies the overture as one of the most pleasing ever rendered at this theatre.

The Rialto Magazine opens with Pathe's views of Wilson's welcome at Columbus, Ohio, and following is a Gaumont strip from Santa Cruz showing the Government's colony of sea lions cavorting in the ocean.

Gaumont again contributed with views of the launching of a four-mast schooner at Bangor, Maine, with International coming in with a view of the recent motorboat races at Detroit, and showing a "wingless motorplane" mounted on pontoons making fast time on the water, at Little Ferry, N. J., with more water scenes by Pathe, when a 2-year-old boy swimmer is shown at Arrowhead

A very artistic strip then follows, titled "A Study in Love and Affection," which is close-ups of two little chaps very evidently brothers who perform for the camera.

International provides the next bit, with views of the recent field day events at Chicago, and Frank Foss, who established a new pole vault record. Pathe succeeds International with interesting views of the men who are now government officials in Germany, including President Ebert and his wife of the New Republic.

Gaumont then presents a strip about which a book might be written showing the home coming of the French veterans of the four years' war, those who are left of the Paris contingent, who went out to fight the Germans in all sorts of conveyances, and who have not been back except on a few days' leave since. International again contributes with views of the founding of the chapel at Gettafe, Spain, by the King and Queen of Spain, with Montreal entertaining the Prince of Wales, by Pathe, following.

The last strip is Internationals, views of Cardinal Mercier, Belgium's revered priest, which is preceded by a short bit showing the bust which has been made of the Cardinal by a New York sculptor.

Following the Magazine, a special by International, being a clever tie-up of earlier news weekly events, some of them dating back to the beginning of the current events pictures, with late pictures of General Pershing, and his associates in his old home at Laclede, Missouri.

In the strip is a view of the Westpoint cadets, Colonel Roosevelt, the American soldiers going into action in France and many others in a sort of film biography of the American man of the hour.

The vocal number is sung by James Irving, baritone, and this also is an offering with a patriotic tinge, "When the Boys Come Marching Home." Mr. Irving is a newcomer at the Rialto and was greeted with enthusiasm.

The feature pictures is "Told in the Hills," a story of Kentucky and the western plains when the Indians were still a menace to civilization's westward march, and in the latter portion of the offering the American soldier is again brought to attention to say nothing of the fact that the star, Robert Warwick, was Captain Warwick not so many months since and might have been so featured by the Rialto with perfect propriety. The

Another of Franklin's stage settings, this time from the famous "Venice" painting, which gives a true impression of the beauty of this world known canal feature is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Marah Ellis Ryan with the scenario by Will M. Ritchey. The direction is by George Melford. Prominent in the cast are Ann Little, Tom Forman and Wanda Hawley. The offering is a traditional western and Indian picture, but makes a very appropriate feature for this week, for the reasons we have mentioned.

The comedy is "The Rajah," a Harold Lloyd two-reeler without plot but entertaining, principally because the star, a clever "monk" who rivals the famous "Joe Martin and a Color'd genne'men," who is a wonder in toothless negro homeliness and could by no possible chance be less than the real thing yet who evidenced being a most proficient screen player, worked so well as a trio doing bits of new business. Incidentally it might not be out of place to add that the Lloyd comedies bob up somewhere about the Broadway houses nearly every week, a fact that may be noted by outside managers. It is generally understood that the shows we cover each week have the pick of the market and if Lloyd can hold his own with other comedy stars, which he seems to be doing if not a bit more, it would rank him as one of the real comedy bets of the times. Anyway New York people seem to find him amusing.

The organ solo is "Neapolitan Serenade," played by Arthur Depew.

Academy of Music

WITHOUT doubt when both quality and quantity are considered the Academy of Music this week has the best show in New York. There are two good features, one a classic, a rousing military overture, two pleasing comedies, a timely news weekly, a clever cartoon subject and a second instrumental number by the orchestra of real musical worth which is followed by a trio of vocalists who are not only capable of appearing but have appeared in grand opera. What more could be desired at popular prices?

The Academy overture is "Stars and Stripes," that stirring march of Sousa's which has led many a military parade while a populace shouted wild "hurrahs" through its tears. Near its finis as the brasses reach their crescendo, the screen is lowered and a picture of General Pershing with spectrum effects in the "Red, White and Blue" about the figure, is projected on the screen. It is very timely and pretty and identifies the house with the week's celebrations for the returning military hero.

The news pictorial is International's complete, beginning with views of motorboat races at Detroit, following with scenes at Warsaw, Poland, where Bolsheviki subjects have been arrested, with a trip to Chicago where field day events have been held resulting in the breaking of the world record in the pole vault by an ex-Cornell athlete.

The next strip is from Canada where the Prince of Wales is being entertained at Montreal, with views of the efforts of Elizabeth, N. J., to combat the high cost of living by selling direct from producer to consumer. Following this, views of the establishment of a new chapel at Gettafe, Spain, on Angel Mountain, with the King and Queen of Spain prominently identified with the ceremonies, are shown, with a bit of comedy succeeding when hospital inmates at Morris Plains, N. J., are seen giving a "circus."

Close-up views of Belgium's heroic priest, Cardinal Mercier, are next shown, with the recent tennis championship contests at Forest Hills, N. Y., being next projected.

A fire in the oil section of Tulsa, Okla., follows with Wilson at Columbus closing the reel.

The "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon comedy is "Swiss Cheese," the clever Fox subject covered in last week's issue under the Rivoli program.

The first feature to be shown is the picturization of Longfellow's immortal poem Evangeline descriptive of the early days of the Arcadians at the time of the English eviction of French subjects from Canada in 1752. With Mariam Cooper in the role of "Evangeline" the feature is one of historical interest and by the use of many beautiful exteriors and careful staging, an offering has been prepared which is well worth the spectator's time, in spite of the fact that the story lacks in dramatic values suitable for the building of the best drama especially for the screen.

The second comedy to be shown is "Smiling Bill Parsons," in "He Did and He Didn't," an offering where the rotund comedian is shown as wanting to commit suicide because of financial reverses and loss of his sweetheart, with a change of mind when he meets another fair medium and inherits a million dollars. The offering is of course farcial but is not to be termed slap stick. A special jazz band furnishes the accompaniment for this number, discoursing typical "jazz" music.

The seventh number on the bill is a rendition of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," by the symphony orchestra. The overture from this popular opera by Nicolai, is used and is a most tunesome offering. It is given with a special stage setting, one which does due honor to General Pershing's visit to the city, in that the canvas depicts a scene in France, where but a short few months since armies were marching and battles were being fought.

The beauty of the setting is largely in the colorings of a Normandie sky at even tide, with the pink tinge of a sun just set blending into the blue above, across which fleecy clouds drift slowly.

In perspective are the battle-wrecked fields with their entanglements of barbed wire, shell-wrecked trees and the battle-scarred trenches. From a "turn in the road," a badly torn military highway extends out to the horizon. Along its route is scattered the discarded wreckage of war materials such as cannon wheels, etc. The canvas is very realistic and with the cloud effects produced and a warm coloring blending from pink to blue, it ranks as an artistic gem, symbolical of the event of the week, the welcome New York gives General Pershing and his returned army.

Following the orchestral number, Messrs. Pompeii Thomasini, Fernando Guarneri and Miss Bessie McCoy, under the title of the "Cosmopolitan Trio" appear in the rendition of the trio number from "Faust," with an encore equally as famous in the "Sextet" number from the same opera, perhaps the most popular grand opera selection of the present day. The quality and volume of the music rendered is of the best, and the number stands out as a real treat, one seldom available at popular prices especially with such voices engaged for the singing.

The second feature is "Love's Insurance," with Bryant Washburn, a light comedy typical of this actor's productions.

The second comedy is "Be My Wife," a Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels' one-reeler, in which the two are shown working in an office. The fun is provided largely by a lot of eccentric business.

The Exit march is "Welcome Pershing," by Jones.

Strand Theatre

WERE we inclined to be "high brow" in our ideas of what is always worth while in entertainment we probably would spend the balance of the week, impressing our friends with the quality of the bill at the Strand this week for one can hardly help but notice that the things that usually go with the so-called "best people" if there be such in this land where your bootblack may be your host before your days are done, have been given preference on the program prepared by the Strand director, Jack Eaton.

To begin with there is Geraldine Farrar, talented opera star, an overture from "Tannhauser," a vocal number from Gounod, one from "I'Pagliacci," sung by a real Italian, who we would say rivals his illustrious countryman, Caruso, and an Outing Chester, not to mention Lou Tellegen and a classic stage setting. The fact is if there is a class today who insist on having "Diamond Dick" in five reels and the rest of the program of like calibre they had better stay away from the Strand this week. It is decidedly a "high brow" bill, so-called, and if operatic music and the "artistic stuff" doesn't please, why Mr. "Shoot 'em-up Jack" would have a dull time.

The overture is selections from Wagner's "Tannhauser," that favorite opera over half a century old, which throbs with poetry and romance and whose characters are real human beings, not mythical gods and goddesses. The story tells of the conflict of two kinds of love; pure love as distinguished from mere sensous passion and relates how the higher love triumphed in the end. It is popular with the average opera-goer and finds favor with those who are pleased with the better class of music even though they may not quite understand what it is all about and the portions of the compositions selected by Conductor Carl Edouarde are the very best of the whole work. They possess the fire and passion of the theme and build to a splendid musical climax.

Lobby display of Clunes' Los Angeles, Cal., which carries an atmosphere of "coolness," suggested by the feature being shown

A special stage setting has been prepared for this number which adds greatly to the rendition, although it can not in any way be considered as a setting for the opera itself.

The overture opens with the house dark and the orchestra very dimly lighted in purple. The first view of the canvas is a very shrouded one, of a valley and sloping hills at night. Down the valley winds a slender stream of water on which the full moon glistening. Fleecy clouds float past obscuring the moon at times. Gradually the scene changes, the moon dips down below the horizon and the clear morning stars in a cloudless sky, with the beautiful green of just before sunrise are seen. Then comes the first pink of the dawn lightening the canvass until the scene is distinct. The hill from which the perspective would lead you to believe you are gazing, you see a rolling pasture with sheep not yet wakened from their night's rest. Fruit trees are in full bloom, the white blossoms of an apple orchard in the distance, the pink of peaches nearer come out distinctly. In the distance, across the river are green fields. Gradually the lights blend into the natural colors of day and it would almost seem that you would expect the sheep to rise and browse for their morning meal and an early farmer come into view along the highway suggested by the stone fence in the foreground and begin his work in the meadow, but by this time the overture is finished and the scene fades out into darkness and the Strand Pictorial is being screened.

The pictorial opens with International scenes of the motorboat races at Detroit, with a Pathe strip showing horse racing at Paris, France following and the Prince of Wales at Montreal, also by Pathe, third.

Kinograms then contributes with views of a western rodeo at Garden City, Mont., with the Topics of the Day following.

The return to current events is with Internationals, views of Cardinal Mercier and of the King and Queen of Spain, attending the opening of a new chapel at Angel Mountain, Spain, with a Kinogram strip showing canoe races at Washington, D. C., next.

The reel closes with Pathe's "Wilson at Columbus, Ohio," and views of the celebration attendant on the acceptance of the League of Nations at Buenos Aires.

The first vocal is the rendition of "Mireille Valse," by Alys Michot, a new soloist at the Strand, whose soloratura soprano voice in this difficult selection impressed with its sweetness and color. The lights for this number was from blue to scarlet before the entrance of the singer with a spot light of amber on the performer.

The feature picture is Geraldine Farrar supported by Lou Tellegen and Alec B. Francis in "The World and It's Women," a drama of Russia with the element of casts prominently considered. The story is by Thompson Buchanan, with Frank Lloyd directing.

The second vocal offering is a second weeks' engagement for Carlo Ferretti, baritone, rendering the prologue to "I'Pagliacci," a subject which demonstrates Mr. Ferretti's ample range of voice and his mastery of technique.

The scenic is an Outing-Chester, "Where They Go Rubber Necking," being another trip in Orient.
